Now, of the Salt Lake line to Oregon and other matters connected with it. The Texas and P. Company have been fighting us for years, but have had but little money, but have used passes and promises largely; but the latter, as they say, is about played out, and some little time ago they joined teams, as I have been told, with the North P. They had a little money to use, as they have no mortgage a floating debt, as I am told. They have made a little money on this end of their roa and I think are using it. Jay Gould went to Washington about two weeks since and I know saw Mitchell, Senator from Oregon, since which time money has bee used very freely in Washington, as some parties have been hard at work for the T and P. N. P. with the Salt Lake branch that never work except for ready cash, an Senator Mitchell is not for us as he was, although he says he is; but I know he i not. Gould has large amounts of cash, and he pays it without stint to carry hi points. He feels that he is being menaced by the extension of the S. P., although tell him it is in the U. P. as much as the C. P. interest that we take care of that lin and that he may have half of the line east of the Colorado, or 10-22ds of the whol line, etc., and he says all right; but he doesn't feel all right. There is many thing I would like to say to you, but will only say the outlook is not good.

Yours, etc.,

C. P. HUNTINGTON.

Do you remember anything about the transactions I have just al luded to?—A. A part of that seems to be entirely new, but there ar some things in it that are not.

Q. Do you recall having stated that Senator Mitchell had once bee for you, but now was not, "though he says he is"?—A. I do not.

Q. You don't remember ever having that idea?—A. No, I do not. do not remember how he was on those matters. I am not very well ac quainted with him.

SOME PEOPLE WORK FOR GOOD NATURE, OTHERS FOR CASH.

Q. With what force would the words which I have read here be used if you ever wrote them:

Since which time money has been used very freely in Washington, as some parti have been hard at work for the T. & P. N. P. with the Salt Lake Branch that nev work except for ready cash.

A. We often get certain things done by good nature. I would some times catch a man at Washington, and would say, "I should like t have you speak to Congressman So-and-so, or to Senator So-and-s Sometimes he would say, "I will do that." I might say, "We woul like to have you stay over." Some would stay over, from good natur while others might say, "I want the cash." Of course I do not refer t members of Congress. It costs a good deal to keep really strong men and it takes money when you have to see three or four hundred men i a few days, as, for instance, when a bill is before a committee, or is com ing up for a vote. If three or four hundred men have to be seen, it i impossible for one or two or half a dozen men to see them and explai in time.

Q. Then, some of this work is done on credit, and some of it is don for cash payments?—A. Some of it was done for good nature. I pre sume if Mr. Anderson—if you will allow me to say it—were in Wash ington, from what acquaintance I have with him, I should say, "I would like to have you see some one and explain this matter to him," he would very likely say, "I will;" but if I were to ask him to stay over night, he would say, "That is business; I should want some money for that."

Commissioner ANDERSON. I think I would give you credit.

"GOOD NATURE" VERSUS "SPOT CASH."

Q. Then the distinction made in this letter is between ready-cash people and those who would give time, not requiring money paid on the plan of what is called "spot cash"?—A. No; it refers to men who wi not work for good nature, but want, as you say, "spot cash." I cannot say that I see anything wrong in that. Of course, if one wants to find a wrong he can do so. I heard a man once say that he could prove from the Bible that it was right for man to kill his brother, and there was a bet made that he could not. He found in one part of the Bible these words: "Cain killed his brother Abel." Then he turned over a good ways further, and found where it read: "Go thou and do likewise." [Laughter.] So he proved his case.

SCOTT'S PROMISES.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I will read you part of a letter on page 1816 of the Colton case, under date of February 23, 1878, as follows:

I returned from Washington last night. The Sub. Com. of the R. R. Com. of the House have agreed to report Scott T. and P. bills through to San Diego, and I am disposed to think the full com. will report it to the House. It can be stopped, but I doubt if it would be worth the cost, as I do not think it can pass the House, although many think it can be passed. Scott, no doubt, will promise all the—say $40,000,000 that the act would give him.

Very likely two sinking fund bills will be reported to the House next week, one from the Judiciary and the other from the R. R. Com. of the Senate. The latter one, I have little doubt, we could accept, and I think we can pass it.

It is Saturday night.

Yours truly,

C. P. HUNTINGTON.

A. That $40,000,000 was the bill as amended. At first it was about $100,000,000. He reduced it from time to time until it finally got down to a little less than $40,000,000.

Q. Does your allusion refer to promises to be made to this army of assistants and explainers?—A. I have no recollection of having said anything of the kind in a letter to Mr. Colton, but no doubt if he could not get them to stay without cash he would have to pay them.

SINKING FUND BILLS.

Q. I read the following sentence from the same letter:

Very likely two sinking fund bills will be reported to the House next week, one from the Judiciary and the other from R. R. Com. of the Senate. The latter one, I have little doubt, we could accept, and I think we can pass it.

Do you remember that there was a bill which you were inclined to accept at this time with regard to the sinking fund?—A. It is entirely out of my mind, if there were two bills at that date. I know that sometime before—I think as long as two years before—we made a proposition to establish a sinking fund to pay the Government bonds, that is, extending the time to pay them, but at the moment I do not recollect about there being two bills at one time. The Thurman bill they made great efforts to pass. Judge Thurman dined Senators at his house almost every night for a long time, a few at a time, to log-roll it through.

"THIS CONGRESS" AN "AGRARIAN CAMP."

Q. I will read you from a letter on page 1822, under date of April 19, 1878:

NEW YORK, April 19th, 1878.

FRIEND COLTON: I returned from Washington this morning and found on my desk yours of the 10th inst., No. 74. Thurman's funding bill has not passed the House yet, but it will, I think, although I am endeavoring to get it to the Judiciary Committee. If I can I think we can get it amended, but even that is doubtful. There was some mistakes made by us when the bill was in the Senate; the greatest was in Gould going to Washington; but it is too long a story to write now. I will tell you when we meet, if we have nothing better to talk of. This Congress is nothing but an agrarian camp, the worst body of men that ever before got together in this country. Scott is making a hard fight on his T. and P. bill. He has made a combination with the Northern Pacific, which will give him some strength, how much I cannot tell. The N. P. are to ask for guarantee of their bonds by the U. S. I shall come to Cal. soon after Congress adjourns. Find some one to buy me out of everything there. I am tired and want to quit.

Yours, as ever,

C. P. HUNTINGTON.

P. S. We have all agreed that we will not keep Cap. Bradbury any longer. He is now in Europe.

H.

Do you remember the expressions contained in that letter?—A. I do not.

Q. Does the expression that "Congress is nothing but an agrarian camp" occur to you as having been used by you?—A. We all recognize the fact that of late years there have been too many communists, agrarians, and that class of people in public places.

Mr. COHEN. Anarchists?

The WITNESS. And anarchists; that is the word that I was trying to think of. Very few men who have large business go to Congress.

THE COMPANY DESERVES A VOTE OF THANKS.

Q. The description that you have now given is the same description (assuming this letter to be a genuine one) that we are to put on the words, "This Congress is nothing but an agrarian camp, the worst body of men that ever before got together in this country"?—A. Well, I suppose I wrote it, if at all, when I was tired and vexed with a thousand and one annoyances, caused by men who ought to have given us a vote of thanks, instead of injuring us and our property, as they did.

OBJECT OF THE THURMAN BILL.

Q. I will read you from page 1827 a letter under date of May 9, 1878:

NEW YORK, May 9th, 1878.

FRIEND COLTON: Yours of April 29th and May 1, Nos. 81 and 82, are received. I am very glad to learn that Mr. Crocker's health is improving.

Thurman has introduced a bill (No. 1200 S.) the object of which would seem to be to start another branch of the Government, whose business will be to look after the Pacific roads. You no doubt will receive a copy of the bill, as I gave Mr. Boyd orders to send Judge Sanderson a copy of all bills that we could possibly have any interest in.

Dillon has just left the office. He says he was expecting Bradbury back from Europe in a few days, which was news to me, as I knew nothing of his whereabouts.

When I come to Cal. I will bring out Western D. Co. accounts.

WASHINGTON FILLED WITH LOBBYISTS.

I was told to-day that Scott was getting up great combinations, T. & P. N. P., John Roach the ship-builder, who is asking subsidy for steamers to Brazil, etc., etc. I do not think he will get any aid for his T. & P., but Washington is filled up with his lobby and I think he has some party in three-quarters of the Congressional district south of the Potomac and Ohio—anyway north—all working to get up petitions to members of the Senate and House, getting letters written to members, and getting little meetings, then passing resolutions to send to Congress, and all these things have some effect, just how much we shall see.

The Military Committee met Monday. I was there, as was Scott's man, ——— ——— said it was an important matter, that they would fight, etc., but was not ready, so it went over to next Tuesday.

Yours truly,

C. P. HUNTINGTON.

Do you recollect any of the matters alluded to in that letter?—A. I do not. I remember that Scott did have agents traveling over the United States to get petitions signed by boards of public works, boards of trade, &c., in favor of his bill.

Q. Can you explain this allusion to the Military Committee meeting on Monday?—A. No, I forget that we ever had anything before the Military Committee.

THE CREDIT OF THE COMPANY INJURED.

Q. I will read you from page 1847 a letter dated February 9, 1878.

NEW YORK, February 9th, 1878.

FRIEND COLTON: Your letters Nos. 56 and 57 and 58, received and all carefully noted. And whilst the outlook is not as good as I wish it was, I am very glad you are all alive.

I have but little doubt we shall pull through, but our credit has been very much hurt of late, and I find it difficult to borrow money here, as every one who has money seems to think he will want it any moment to run away with it to some hiding-place. The notes have come to hand, and I may be compelled to use them, but shall not, except as a last resort; for, as soon as we use one, I think we shall have to use them altogether when we want to borrow money. I returned from Washington last night, and I am as near used up as I ever was in my life before. I am spending my last winter at Washington. As I feel to-day, I would not agree to spend another there for all the property we all have. Our matters are looking fair in Washington. Scott is very bitter in the discussion. He used some business compliments and all such stuff, and I am compelled to play him; but it is very distasteful to me.

Yours, truly,

C. P. HUNTINGTON.

The WITNESS. I did not hear all that, as there is so much noise here.

THE INGRATITUDE OF CONGRESS.

Q. I will read the essential part. The sentence I am calling your attention to is:

I am spending my last winter in Washington. As I feel to-day, I would not agree to spend another there for all the property we all have. Our matters are looking fair in Washington. Scott is very bitter in the discussion. He used some business compliments and all such stuff, and I am compelled to play him; but it is very distasteful to me.

Do you remember feeling in the manner described in that letter in regard to this Washington business?—A. Well, I know that I was over there; I do not remember having written that letter, but possibly I did. I frequently got very much annoyed there at the ingratitude of Congress.

Q. Is that all that you recall as having inspired you with so much disgust in regard to this Washington business? The expression used in the letter is: "I would not agree to spend another there for all the property we all have."—A. There were a thousand things that annoyed me; but what annoyed me most was that the representatives of the people in Washington should fail to recognize the great work that we had done for the country.

THE BUSINESS DISTASTEFUL AND REPUGNANT.

Q. The business was excessively distasteful and repugnant to you; is that it?—A. Yes, very. It was business that I did not like. I knew I was right, and believed that nearly every member of Congress knew it as well as I did, and yet continued to abuse us, hoping thereby to advance their own selfish interests.

Q. Is it not true that the refusal of men to see things as you thought they ought to see them would cause you more disturbance than the mere fact of your having to pay more hotel bills or pay out more money than you thought had actually been earned?—A. Probably it did.

HOW THE PAYMENTS TO ASSISTANTS WERE MADE.

Q. In the transactions of making all these payments to the people who were employed for the purpose of getting up the information, who assisted you?—A. I used to leave it altogether, or nearly so, with Mr. Franchot, until his death; and from that time, with Mr. Sherrill.

AS TO MR. ISAAC E. GATES.

Q. Who was Mr. Gates?—A. He is a man in my office here.

Q. What was his full name?—A. Isaac E. Gates.

Q. How long has he been with you?—A. He has been with me, I guess, about twenty years.

Q. Was he intrusted by you with the disbursement of some of this money that is covered by the vouchers signed by you?—A. No; I have always attended to those matters myself.

Q. Has he not signed many vouchers for money received from you?—A. I should say not.

HIS CONNECTION WITH THE COMPANY.

Q. Does not his name appear on many of the bills or statements that you have returned to the Central Pacific Company monthly?—A. It is possible. I do not have much to do with the book-keeping. I hand memoranda in, and the clerks attend to them.

Q. I refer to these memoranda. Did you not frequently enter Mr. Gates's name on these memoranda as having received large sums of money from you?—A. I think not. He never has been to Washington. He knows nothing of our matters there at all.

Q. The memoranda which we have seen in San Francisco, and which are not here, although we have called for them—I mean the memoranda prepared by you and sent by you to San Francisco, contain Mr. Gates's name very frequently, with the number of dollars carried out opposite his name, but without any further statement. If that be so, does that recall to your mind the fact that much of this money passed through Mr. Gates's hands?—A. I am very certain that none ever passed; I am quite certain that all came to me.

Q. What would be the meaning of your writing the word "Gates" in the memoranda sent by you to the Central Pacific Company with a certain number of figures carried out on the same line with his name?—A. I do not know. I do not recall now just why it should be so.

Q. Would not the natural meaning be that that meant to say to the Central Pacific Company, "I have given to Mr. Gates, to be applied to the use of the company, so much money"?—A. It might, and might not. He never has had anything to do with our Washington matters. I have always attended to those matters myself.

ATTENDS TO GENERAL EXPENSES.

Q. Has he expended any money for the account of the Central Pacific Company?—A. He attends to many things here in the way of paying for rails, locomotives, and a thousand things like that.

Q. Then he does not attend to the legal expenses, or to the expense account at all?—A. No; I have always attended to that myself.

Q. Are we to understand that the word "Gates," wherever it is entered on the statements which purport to explain the disposition made of legal expenses, or general expenses, was put there without its being a fact that the money was paid to Mr. Gates and expended by him?—A. Whatever was on the paper was right; there is no question about that. It is possible that what you refer to may have arisen from the fact that all my checks are printed payable to the order of Mr. Gates. I have been doing a large business for thirty years, and I suppose that I have handled a thousand million dollars in that time of money that passed through my hands, and it would be very difficult to remember every item.

Q. Is Mr. Gates in New York, now?—A. He is.

Q. Is he now in your employ?—A. Not in my employ.

Q. Is he in the employ of the company?—A. Yes.

Q. And your statement is specific that no portion of the funds covered by the unexpended vouchers were disbursed by Mr. Gates?—A. I should say so.

MR. GATES'S WORD ENOUGH.

Q. All of the business that Mr. Gates has done with regard to the purchase of materials, or any other purchase, was covered by vouchers in the usual form, as I understand it, stating the application of the money and the person or corporation to whom the payment was made. Is that so?—A. I should say that whatever ought to be, is; that is about all that I could say as to that.

Q. Would you to-day pass a voucher for Mr. Gates without its stating in detail the person to whom the payment was made and the purpose for which the money was to be used?—A. Mr. Gates is a man that I should trust anywhere for any amount; he is correct; and if I had his word for it, that would be enough.

Q. Is there any occasion on which Mr. Gates has presented you a report stating that he had expended any important sum of money, exceeding $5,000, without at the same time producing a voucher to support his expenditure?—A. I should say not.

Q. You do not remember any such case?—A. No; I do not remember any.

THE BOOKKEEPING IN CALIFORNIA.

Q. I understand you to say that you have very little acquaintance with the book-keeping in California or with any of that work?—A. I really have nothing to do with it.

Q. Have you anything to show, any entries or memoranda, relating to transactions which would naturally have appeared on the books of the Contract and Finance Company?—A. I have not. Mr. Hopkins always attended to that business for me. He was a partner in mercantile business with me; and he had a power of attorney to do for me almost anything that I could do myself.

Q. Have you no books which would show the actual payments either in stock, bonds, or money which may have been made by the Contract and Finance Company to you?—A. No, I have not; I have never kept any books in connection with those matters.

WHAT THE BOOKS OF THE CONTRACT AND FINANCE COMPANY SHOW.

Q. Do you know from any source whatever what the books of the Contract and Finance Company would show to have been the actual cost of the construction of the Central Pacific from the eastern line of the State of California to Promontory Point?—A. No, I have not, except on the principle on which the Dutchman kept his books. He said he always knew what he owed and what he had to pay it with. I know that when we got through we were largely in debt, and had nothing but some shares of the Central Pacific Company to pay it with; and the shares could not have been sold at that time for enough to pay the debt. I know this to be so, because Mr. Hopkins told me so.

Q. Do you know how many shares of the Central Pacific Company were divided up by the Contract and Finance Company at the close of its operations?—A. I do not. I should say (I cannot say where I got the information) that there were some four hundred thousand shares, or perhaps more.

Q. That is, $40,000,000 worth, at par?—A. Yes.

LAND-GRANT BONDS.

Q. Do you know whether they divided up anything else—any land-grant bonds?—A. I am very sure they did not before the completion of the road. If they did I have no recollection of it. I think I remember having been told that they used some land-grant bonds to pay some debts that they had.

Q. Did you ever get any land-grant bonds from the Contract and Finance Company?—A. I think I did; I know we advanced large amounts of money to the Contract and Finance Company, and I think a portion of that advance was paid in land-grant bonds.

Q. Do you know in what year you got the land-grant bonds?—A. No, I do not; but it was after the road was completed. We kept everything together.

Q. What was the amount of land-grant bonds which you got from the Contract and Finance Company?—A. I do not know. The mortgage was for $10,000,000, and some of the bonds were sold while the road was being built.

Q. You mean the land-grant loan?—A. Yes; the land-grant mortgage. The amount was $10,000,000, and there was quite a good many of the bonds, as I remember, sold. There was a certain number of them went towards paying the floating debt.

DISPOSITION OF THE BONDS.

Q. There were about $7,000,000 of those bonds which were paid by the Central Pacific to the Contract and Finance Company?—A. Very likely.

Mr. COHEN. Where did you get that amount from?

Commissioner ANDERSON. From the books of the Central Pacific Company.

Mr. COHEN. Is that in evidence?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes; they are entered in the report of the disposition of the land-grant bonds. It appears that about $7,000,000 were paid the Contract and Finance Company in satisfaction of $6,000,000 of notes held by that company.

PRICE OF THE BONDS.

The WITNESS. I should have said that they did not take it at as high a price as that. Those bonds were not sold at over 65 cents, I think, at the time.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The report will show the exact figures.

Q. Do you remember whether the amount received by you was between a million and a half and two million of dollars, as your share or your portion of those bonds?—A. I should think it was not as much as a million and a half. I know that whatever they were, I sold them and used the money for other public improvements.

Q. Can you ascertain for us the amount of land-grant bonds that you received in 1874 and 1875?—A. I do not believe I could. I no doubt counted them at the time and found them correct. Whenever I got a chance to sell them I sold them and used the money, as I have said for public improvements.

PECULIAR METHOD OF BOOKKEEPING.

Q. Did you keep any books showing the amount of bonds held by you?—A. No; I always kept little memoranda and when I sold any bonds they were crossed off and after a certain time transferred to other memoranda. I have carried my own personal matters largely in my hat.

Q. Do you know of a book showing the amount of interest received by you on the land-grant bonds in 1874 and 1875, while you held those bonds?—A. No; I do not believe I would have any. I do not know why I should, as I should simply go and collect the coupons as anybody else would do, and paid my debts with the money.

CONTRACTS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF CENTRAL PACIFIC.

Q. Did you know anything of a contract made with Crocker & Co. for the construction of the Central Pacific from section 31 to 138?—A. No; I did not. The first contract that was let to him, I think, was for 18 miles. I used to go to California about once a year, and staid but a few days. My business was here. Mr. Crocker had a contract, as I remember, of eighteen sections from Sacramento, and then contracts were made with six or eight parties for about 13 miles more. Afterwards our people wrote something about letting the balance of the contract, to the State line, to Mr. Crocker, but I was opposed to it, although I forget what I said. I was told that the smaller contractors had quarreled with each other and there was trouble about getting labor; the men on the upper section would go to Sacramento to get men for the work, but it was pleasanter on the lower section and contractors there would scoop those men in as they were going on to the work on the other section. There were many complaints of that kind. They said that they were satisfied from the condition of the labor market that it would be better to concentrate the work in one party's hands. They convinced me that that was better and it was done; but I was not there and I know very little of the details. I remember the general features.

CONTRACT WITH MR. CROCKER.

Q. I refer now to the contract which Mr. Crocker did get. Do you know anything about the cost of construction of the portion of the work from section 31 to section 138—the cost to Mr. Crocker?—A. No; I do not. It was immense, though. He complained very bitterly, and I think our people helped him to the extent of their ability every way they could. He was expecting to get some one in with him, and I think perhaps he did, but I do not remember about that. I tried here to get men to take an interest in his contract, but they would not do it; they said that the risk was too great, but that if there was an organized company, so that they might know just what their responsibility was, they might take some interest. Then I wrote to our people to organize under the laws of the State a building company, which they did. They called it the "Contract and Finance Company." Then I tried to get moneyed men here to take stock in it, and spent considerable time in the effort. Mr. Hopkins wrote to me about taking some of that stock. I told him to take just as little as he could get along with, but to take as much as was necessary, for the road must be built.

TRANSFER OF STOCK.

Q. We have got all that on the record and I want to shorten your examination. With regard to the Crocker contract, do you know how it came that the stock which the Central Pacific received for the construction of that particular portion of the road was transferred to the Contract and Finance Company, in which all you gentlemen, as I understand it, had an equal interest?—A. No; I do not know that.

Q. There were $13,000,000 or $14,000,000 of stock which had been received under the Crocker contract, and which was passed over to the Contract and Finance Company?—A. I do not know how that was done. I know that we were troubled very much to get money, and that we all not only indorsed paper but advanced money from our private means up to the farthest extent of our credit.

Q. Were you all interested together?—A. We had no interest whatever in the Charles Crocker contract. That was one of the things that I would not go into myself, but we all did all we possibly could to carry through the heavy work on the Sierra Nevada mountains short of being personally responsible for the whole work.

AMOUNT TRANSFERRED.

Mr. COHEN. Where would the amount of stock transferred from Crocker to the Contract and Finance Company appear?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Stanford said that it was transferred, but he did not give the date.

Mr. COHEN. He does not give the amount.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes; he gives the amount.

Mr. COHEN. I do not remember it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. He says that the Crocker stock was transferred, and that the amount of the Crocker stock is proved very accurately, down to a share, from the Central Pacific books. We never understood why Crocker did not keep it, for he was one of the parties interested in that contract, and it is on that point that I am now asking for light.

The WITNESS. It was probably used to settle for the large sums of money that had been advanced to Mr. Crocker. If I could help you out in any way with these particulars I would be very glad to do it, but I have no information excepting what was given me by Mr. Hopkins, and that I have already given you. We afterward bought at 12 cents on the dollar the stock that Crocker got from the Contract and Finance Company.

EFFECT OF BUILDING OF SOUTHERN PACIFIC ROAD.

Q. What, in your judgment, has been the effect of the construction of the Southern Pacific Railroad on the security afforded to the United States by the subsidized part of the Central Pacific?—A. If the Southern Pacific had been controlled by parties unfriendly to the Central Pacific the effect on the Central Pacific would, of course, be injurious, but one of the objects in building it was to protect the Central Pacific. But it would not probably make much difference now as to who controls it, as the Government has given a subsidy to each of two roads much nearer the Central, which, by competition, have taken from the Central Pacific its power to earn little, if any, net money on its through business.

DIVERSION OF TRAFFIC.

Q. Referring more particularly to the construction of the Southern Pacific, what traffic, if any, has it diverted from the Central Pacific?—A. Not much. I think the Southern Pacific has injured the Cape Horn and Panama business more than it has the Central Pacific.

NEW YORK BUSINESS.

Q. About the other business, known as the New York business. How far within the last three or four years has the percentage of that business gone over the Southern Pacific instead of over the Central Pacific?—A. Quite a large percentage of the business of what may be called the "tide line," but the whole of that is only 20 per cent. of the California trade, while all the rest of the business goes over the Central Pacific and other all-rail lines. As I have said, the tide-line business is competed for sharply by the Cape Horn and Panama routes.

Q. How about the canned goods, merchandise, and fruits?—A. That is a class of business that has to be carried on the line that will carry quickest.

Q. Does the most of that go by the Southern Pacific, or by the Central?—A. I am not prepared to say. The Southern Pacific, though, is a very good line.

REDUCTION OF TONNAGE.

Q. Can you state to what extent it has reduced tonnage of the Central Pacific in the other business?—A. Not any, to any considerable extent, I should think, as we take but little of the inland business.

LOCAL BUSINESS.

Q. In regard to the local business of the Central Pacific, what effect has the construction of the Southern Pacific had on that?—A. It can have but very little on the Central's local business.

Q. Would it bring some new business which otherwise would not have gone over it at all?—A. That is a matter which could be better answered by our general traffic manager.

EARNING CAPACITY OF SUBSIDIZED PORTIONS.

Q. Have you any information to give the Commission as to the present earning capacity of the subsidized portion of the Central Pacific?—A. I have not; it is not great, but just what, would be better answered by the general traffic manager.

Q. Is it your opinion that the subsidized portion of this road, if separated by foreclosure proceedings or otherwise, from the rest of the system, could earn more than the interest on the first-mortgage bonds, above operating expenses?—A. That I could not say. It would depend upon a good many things. If it were running independent of everybody else it would be very likely to get hurt. There are narrow-gauge roads running in Nevada, which if in unfriendly hands would be likely to turn much of the trade of Nevada away from the Central Pacific. We have endeavored to protect the interests of the Central Pacific in every way. I think that Government bonds to run one hundred and twenty years, at a rate of interest that the company could pay, and at the same time liquidate the principal, could have been sold in the last two years.

PLAN OF SETTLEMENT.

Q. On that subject will you please state to the Commission as fully as you desire any suggestion you have to make with regard to any scheme or plan of adjusting the debt existing from your company to the United States?—A. To work that out would take me at least a month of such time as I could spare from my current work, and I will do it. I think a plan could be arranged if we could have any guarantee that the Government would keep faith with the company, and not do as they have done heretofore.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The idea that this Commission has of the purpose for which it was called into being is to secure just these explanations that you refer to, and we are desirous of receiving from you any explanation that you or any other officer of the company can give us.

Mr. COHEN. I would suggest, in reply to that, that before you close your labors, Mr. Huntington make some suggestions in writing, and you can annex it to his testimony.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We want it for use within ten or fifteen days.

Mr. COHEN. You shall have it within fifteen days.

The WITNESS. I do not know as to that. I have some ideas about that.

SUGGESTIONS REQUESTED FROM WITNESS AS TO PLAN OF SETTLEMENT.

Commissioner ANDERSON. What the Commission desire of Mr. Huntington is his suggestions upon: (1) The desirability of a change from a percentage of net earnings to a payment of a fixed sum; (2) his idea of a change in regard to the extension of the period for payment; (3) his idea of a change with regard to the annual percentage or interest that should be charged, or which the company could pay; (4) any suggestion with regard to the commutation rate by which the whole obligation could be discharged at once, and the relations between the Government and the company absolutely and completely divorced; (5) any light that he can shed upon the question of how much security and what kind of security the Government has now for its debt, and what could be done to increase or enlarge the securities which it holds.

The WITNESS. If it were capitalized and put into a fixed amount—interest and all—with payments to be made every six months, or at some other fixed time, then of course the security would be growing better all the time, because the property itself will be increasing in value as the years roll by, while the amount of indebtedness would be steadily decreasing. Most of the great roads of this country have, I believe, a bonded debt to-day of greater amount than they had when they were first built.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I have no other question to ask Mr. Huntington.

HANDWRITING OF WITNESS.

By Mr. COHEN:

Q. You have been questioned to-day in relation to certain letters that you wrote, none of which has been exhibited to you; and you have doubted whether the copies which have been read to you were fair and true transcripts of the letters which you wrote. I ask you what is the general character of your handwriting. Is it easily read?—A. I used to flatter myself that I could write a letter in half the time that it would take the other party to read it.

Q. Were you acquainted with Horace Greeley in his lifetime?—A. I was.

Q. Is your handwriting something like his? He said his writing could always be read when it was on the back of a note, but could not be read in a letter?—A. I have seen his writing, and I think it was worse than mine.

HIS REFERENCE TO THE CHARACTER OF CONGRESS.

Q. In one of these letters you speak of the "agragrian" character of Congress. Was not the opinion which you then formed, and which you expressed in that letter, derived from the members of what you have termed the "Third House," rather than from your own observation?—A. I do not remember the language that I used exactly; but I did not mean to be understood as saying that anything like a majority, or a respectable minority, of Congress were of that class; but I have no doubt that some of the members could be so classed.

THE SANTA MONICA ROAD.

Q. In purchasing the Los Angeles Railroad from Senator Jones did you purchase it at the lowest price you could?—A. I did. I bought the road from him just as I would buy a road from Mr. Cohen. I bought it as low as I could. I thought then, as I do now, that it was a good purchase.

Q. You did not pay any more for the road because Mr. Jones was a Senator than you would have paid if he had not filled any public position, did you?—A. No. In fact, the road was cheap at the price we paid for it—something less than one-third of what it cost to build, as I remember.

RATE OF INTEREST PAID.

Q. You were questioned about a statement contained in one of your letters as to the rate of interest which you paid. State to the Commission the rate of interest which you paid in California on money that you borrowed for the purpose of constructing the road; and the rate of interest you paid on the indebtedness you had incurred in such construction, which remained after you had used the bonds issued by the road, and the bonds issued by the Government?—A. I could not say at this time. We paid the current rate of interest in California, which, I think, when we first commenced, was 1 to 1½ per cent. per month. We bought gold here at a very large premium to pay for our labor. We paid gold for interest on our million and a half of 7 per cent. bonds, for which I paid at one time 222 in currency.

Q How long did the rate of interest remain as high as 1 per cent. in California; until what year?—A. It would be difficult to give the date. I know that in 1849 we used to lend money for 10 per cent. per month. It went down to 5 in a year or two afterwards, and continued to fall by degrees until it reached 10 per cent. per annum, which is now, I believe, the legal interest in California.

Commissioner LITTLER. In what year was it that you paid 222 premium on gold?

The WITNESS. I can not say now; but I could tell by looking over the price list of gold here. I bought it in the open board.

Mr. COHEN. I have the price list of gold during all that time, if you want it entered on the minutes.

The WITNESS. I sold $40,000 here for Huntington & Hopkins for 279, I think.

FINANCIAL STANDING OF HUNTINGTON, HOPKINS & CO.

Q. You have spoken in your testimony, given before this Commission some weeks ago, of your guaranteeing some of the bonds which you sold—of their being guaranteed by Huntington, Hopkins & Co. State to the Commission what was the financial standing of Huntington, Hopkins & Co. at the time you commenced the construction of the Central Pacific road?—A. I flatter myself that there was not a better financial house in the world—for anything that we wanted. I had some paper out in this town in 1837, and I believe that I never had a piece of paper go to protest, and Huntington & Hopkins stood A–1.

Q. Mr. Crocker has stated that at the time he went into the construction of this road he was worth over $200,000. What was the financial rating at that time of Huntington & Hopkins?—A. I believe that I could have got $1,000,000 well enough on our credit, in our legitimate business.

Q. I am speaking of your property. How much property had you—in money or money's worth?—A. I should say that we had $500,000 or $600,000. We had not enough to build the Pacific road.

MR. STANFORD'S FINANCIAL CONDITION.

Q. Can you state the condition of Mr. Stanford's finances at the time that he entered into the work of building this road?—A. In a general way. I believe that every member of the company came in at my personal solicitation. I spent many evenings until a late hour, after getting through my regular business, in going to see men, and I went to see only those who were thrifty, and whom I believed to be safe business men. I spent several evenings at Governor Stanford's house, and he finally said that he would go in. I should have said that the house of Stanford Brothers was then worth up in the hundred thousand several times. I wanted to get him to come in because he was a good business man, and a clean man in all respects. I should have said that Mr. Crocker was worth more than $200,000. He was doing a thrifty business, and I counted him one of the best business men in California. His integrity was never questioned.

MR. HUNTINGTON'S METHOD OF SIGNING CHECKS.

Q. You were asked about several payments being charged to Isaac E. Gates, those payments appearing upon vouchers that you sent to California. Are not all, or almost all, of the checks signed by you drawn to the order of Isaac E. Gates? Are not your checks printed to the order of Isaac E. Gates, and then issued by him as occasion may require?—A. They are. I often sign two or three thousand checks at a time. They are printed to the order of Isaac E. Gates, and I usually take some books to my home and sign the checks after I get through with my work for the day. I sign most of my checks there. As they are printed to the order of Mr. Gates it is safe so to sign them.

HOW THE COMPANY EXPECTED TO PAY ITS DEBT TO THE GOVERNMENT.

Q. You have been asked to make some suggestions with reference to a settlement of the claim of the Government against the Central Pacific and the Western Pacific roads. When the Central Pacific signed its acceptance of the terms of the act of 1862, was it not your understanding that the Government would look to the transportation to be done by the Central Pacific for the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds which it had advanced to aid in the construction of that road?—A. It was thought they would be paid in that way. I think that we thought that the earnings of the Government—that is, for the work that the Government would need to have done by the roads—would more than pay the interest, and in time, in fact, liquidate the principal. I do not think that we expected, or that when the bill was passed in Congress that Congress expected, there would be any money paid excepting the 5 per cent on the net earnings; the balance would be paid in services. The expenses of the Government were very large, as the Government records will show, before the road was built; and we, at least I, supposed that the earnings from the Government business would be sufficient to meet all these payments.

POLICY ADOPTED TOWARD THE INDIANS.

The Indians were very troublesome there before the road was built, and after that we took care of them. That cut off all source of income of that kind. The chief of the Piute Indians said that he had 3,000 warriors, and they were very troublesome. Indeed, in one battle at the Big Meadows, our troops under Major Ormsby lost 175 men. After our road was built we negotiated with the Indians. We gave the old chief a pass, good on passenger cars, and we told our men to let the common Indians ride on the freight trains whenever they saw fit. We treated them kindly and our men are doing so to this day. I know that I said to the chief that they must take care of the railway and we would take care of them. They have been very friendly ever since; and in more than one case they have given the company notice of washouts on the road. It was so with the Shoshone Indians. Mr. Crocker sent for the chief, made a treaty with him. He stipulated that if they would take care of us we would take care of them, and we have had no trouble with them since. The forts and military stations that the Government had along this line, in the Great Basin, have been removed. The Government paid for taking barley over to Fort Churchhill 40 cents per pound, and other supplies at like rates. I have never agreed with the Government as to its Indian policy. I have always thought that kind treatment would win their good-will, and I think so now. At any rate the Government has not needed any troops to take care of the Indians on our line of road since we built the road.

GOVERNMENT TRANSPORTATION EXPECTED TO PAY INTEREST.

Q. When you were pushing the road over the Sierra Nevada Mountains, building it without regard to cost, and bending all your energies to getting it through in the shortest possible time, did you not understand that your fixed charges would consist only of the interest on your first-mortgage bonds, and that you would not be required to pay the Government interest on the principal of the bonds, except by way of transportation?—A. We expected that the transportation the Government would need would pay the interest.

EFFECT OF COMPETING LINES.

Q. After the amendment of 1864, when the Government consented to receive one-half of the earnings instead of the entire debt, was it not the understanding with your company that one-half the transportation and the 5 per cent. upon the net earnings would be all that would be required to provide for the payment of the principal and interest and for the credit advanced by the Government?—A. I do not remember that I had any very pronounced ideas on that. As I say, I think we would have gotten along all right, and that we would have paid the Government debt, had not the Government subsidized competing lines to the north and south of us. If they had not done that, I think we could have paid out of the earnings of the road all the debts of the company, probably not at the maturity of the bonds; but I think none of the great roads of the country have paid their current expenses and paid for the cost of construction in so short a time as thirty years.

SURPRISED AT THE COURSE TAKEN BY THE GOVERNMENT.

It never entered my mind that we would have four or five transcontinental roads, aided largely by the Government, in fact aided more largely than it had aided us. I never thought that it would do it, not knowing the Government then as I do now, but thinking if it did destroy the earning power of the Central Pacific that it would concede something for the wrong it had done that company.

COMPLETION OF ROAD.

Q. Do you remember at what time the Central Pacific was completed and turned over to the Government as a completed road?—A. I think it was on the 10th of May, 1869.

Q. Did the Government at that time refuse to receive the road as a completed road?—A. Yes; there were a great many things that had to be done to strengthen it.

REQUISITION BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Q. What requisition was made by the Government on you in the way of a deposit of your first-mortgage bonds?—A. If I remember rightly I did deposit four millions with the Secretary of the Treasury as a guarantee that we would complete the road as the Government required.

THE ROAD ACCEPTED.

Q. At what time did the Government accept the road as a completed road according to its view of the situation?—A. I cannot say. It was considerably later than May, 1869.

Q. Was it not August 1, 1874?—A. It was a considerable time after. I should hardly think as late as 1874.

Q. In the mean time the Government retained a portion of the earnings and bonds of the company, did it not?—A. It retained the bonds for a considerable time, and it has held most of the lands ever since. We have not been able to get our lands as we have earned them.

Q. Was not the fact that the Government refused to accept the road as a completed road before October 1, 1874, the reason why you did not pay 5 per cent. of net earnings until after that time?—A. It was not called for until the road was completed, and the act of acceptance would be proof of that.

DECISIONS BY THE COURTS.

Q. The Court of Claims, and the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of California took the same view of the situation that you did, did they not?—A. I do not know that that question was adjudicated in the courts; since that time the Government has owed us a large amount of money.

Q. Just answer that question; I will come to the other in a minute. Do you remember whether that is so or not?—A. It is out of my mind now, if it was adjudicated in the courts.

Mr. COHEN. The Court of Claims and the circuit court took your view of the situation, and on appeal the judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and then you paid the 5 per cent. from the 10th of May, 1869.

The WITNESS. Now that you are repeating it I believe that it was in the courts, although it had gone out of my mind.

WHY PAYMENT OF THE 5 PER CENT. WAS DELAYED.

Mr. COHEN. I want to show the reason why the 5 per cent. was not paid until after the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. That is the point of my question. One of the purposes that moved the appointment of this Commission was the charge that the Central Pacific Railway Company had not kept and performed its obligation towards the Government as undertaken by them in their acceptance of the act of 1862 and the act of 1864. I would like you to give the Commission your side of the question.

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC COMPANY HAS FULFILLED EVERY OBLIGATION TO THE GOVERNMENT.

The WITNESS. I believe that we have in every way fulfilled every obligation that we owed to the Government under the contract; that in no way have we failed. We built the road, as I remember, more than seven years before the act of Congress required it to be done, and since that time in every way we have done the Government service whenever it has called upon us, and done it promptly, and we have paid all that the original acts called for to be paid, and all that the Thurman act calls for. If in any one case we have failed to do that I do not know it; neither do I believe that we have failed in any case.

COMPARATIVE COST OF CONSTRUCTION.

Q. This Commission are charged to ascertain the comparative cost of construction of the road as compared with what it would have cost with the prices of labor and commodities prevailing five years preceding and five years subsequent to the completion of said road. Can you give any information to the Commission on that point?—A. It would be difficult to say just how much. I suppose that no one doubts but that it cost very nearly or quite double when it was built what it would have cost before or later. I paid $32,500 for locomotives, and I think 6 per cent. Government tax on the top of that for such machines as were bought before the war for $10,000. Many other things were in proportion. Powder, if I remember, went up as high as $6, such as we used to buy at $2.25. That was a large item in building the road across the Sierra Nevadas. I think our record will show that we paid $6,000 for freighting some locomotives over the Isthmus of Panama, when we might have sent them around Cape Horn for $400 before the war. But we had to send material very nearly a year in advance of the time we wanted to use it; and we have had goods on the way between here and San Francisco more than twelve months. We had to send very nearly everything a year in advance. Rates went up very high for insurance. Before the war the ordinary rates of insurance against total loss and general average were 2½ per cent. During the time of the war they went up as high as 17 per cent. For fish-plates that could have been bought before the war at $1.90 per hundred, I think we paid $6.50 per hundred during the war. Rails that sold in 1861 or 1862, as the market record will show, at about $55, I think went up to $150 in the time of the war. Almost all other things were in like proportion. The price of labor advanced. We had to buy gold here to pay for our labor out in California. There was only one white man living between Big Bend of the Truckee and Bear River, a distance of nearly 600 miles, when we commenced to build the road. The Indians occupied all that country. Everything had to be hauled a long way in advance, which was very expensive. I met some teams with ties in the Wahsatch Mountains, and I asked what the price was. They said $1.75 each. They had seven ties on that wagon. I asked where they were hauled from, and they said from a certain cañon. They said it took three days to get a load up to the top of the Wahsatch Mountains and get back to their work. I asked them what they had a day for their teams, and they said $10. This would make the cost of each tie more than $6. I passed back that way in the night in January, and I saw a large fire burning near the Wahsatch summit, and I stopped to look at it. They had, I think, from twenty to twenty-five ties burning. They said it was so fearfully cold they could not stand it without having a fire to warm themselves.

DISCOUNT ON BONDS.

Q. Another branch of the inquiry intrusted to this Commission is to ascertain "what discount the Pacific Railroad and its several branches were forced to make in disposing of the bonds guaranteed by the Government, to obtain the gold coin which was the currency of the country through which the greater part of said roads pass." Have you any information on that point?—A. I have not the data. I saw it stated somewhere that it was about 70 cents. The Government would not take them of the banks as security for the bank's circulation. They were a new thing, and we had a great deal of trouble for a long time in selling them. But we sold them for the most we could get, which was not much more than half what the Government is now buying them for, and putting into our sinking fund.

BONDS BOUGHT BACK AT A PREMIUM.

Q. Is it or not the fact that the bonds which you sold at a discount of 30 per cent. have been bought back by the Government at a premium of 34 per cent., and put into the sinking fund?—A. I have said 35, but you may be right.

Q. And used the money of the Central Pacific to make the purchases?—A. Yes.

DIVERSION OF TRAFFIC.

Q. There has been an impression prevailing that the managers of the Central Pacific have diverted business from the aided roads, and other roads in California built by them which did not receive aid from the Government. Do you know of any such case?—A. I do not. I do not believe it has been done in any one case.

TRANSFER OF MAILS.

Q. The mails were transferred from the Western Pacific to the California Pacific, were they not?—A. Yes; we would have liked to carry them the other way, so as to get the long haul, if they had paid us for it; but they would not do it. They refuse now to pay what the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court have decided to be our due. They would not put it into the appropriation bill, as I was told, I suppose, for some political reasons.

AMOUNTS DUE FROM GOVERNMENT.

Q. The United States Government is indebted to the Central Pacific for services performed on the unaided roads, for about $2,000,000, is it not?—A. I should have said a little more than that; but perhaps that will cover it.

EFFECT OF DELAY IN PAYMENT.

Q. What has been the effect on the Central Pacific Railroad Company of the retention of its money in the United States Treasury?—A. It could not be otherwise than damaging. They have a rule never to pay any interest on what they have got in their grasp, but to make everybody else pay just as soon as they can get the account in.

Q. What has been the average interest paid by the company for money to supply this retention of money by the United States Government?—A. I do not know. We have hired the money, and got it as low as we could, and of course we have paid the market rates.

Q. The market rates have been about what?—A. About the legal rates of interest, I suppose.

DECISION OF THE COURTS.

Q. Your right to have this amount of $2,000,000 and upwards has been decided by the Court of Claims and by the United States Supreme Court in your favor, has it not?—A. I know that both courts have decided—and I believe by a unanimous court in both cases—that the money belongs to and should be paid to the railroad company, and I know of no reason, except the one I have given, why it has not been paid over.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The decision was made a year ago last spring, and I argued the case.

The WITNESS. Not longer ago than that? But, as we wanted the money so badly, it has probably seemed longer than it has really been.

ISSUE OF LAND-GRANT BONDS.

Q. When were first bonds issued, secured on the land grants to the Central Pacific?—A. I cannot give the date; I think somewhere about 1870.

Q. About the last part of 1870, was it not?—A. I cannot say; it was about that time; I have no memoranda which will give me the date, and I am not very good at remembering dates.

Commissioner LITTLER. There is a table here giving that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It was at the date of the land-grant bond and mortgage. It was in 1870.

DIVISION OF THESE BONDS.

Q. You were asked about the division of the land-grant bonds made by the Contract and Finance Company. Were not those bonds delivered to the stockholders in payment of money which had been advanced to the corporation by stockholders?—A. I should say so.

Q. And not as dividends?—A. No; I should not call it that; but still it might be called dividends. There had been a large amount of money advanced, and, as I understood, these were in part settlement of the account.

Q. In other words, the stockholders of the Contract and Finance Company had deposited money with the company to the credit of each person making the deposit, and he received these land-grant bonds in satisfaction of such deposit?—A. Mr. Hopkins attended to all that business. Whether or not they lent the money, or paid it in to go on with the work, I do not know just now; but there was money paid in, and in very large amounts.

DEPOSIT OF STOCK WITH CONTRACT AND FINANCE COMPANY.

Q. You were asked about the deposit of stock of the Central Pacific Railway Company, made by Charles Crocker & Co. with the Contract and Finance Company. I believe that Mr. Stanford and Mr. Crocker have both testified to the same point. I want to ask you what indebtedness, if any, was assumed by you gentlemen, by the five persons associated together, in consideration of that deposit of stock with the Contract and Finance Company?—A. Mr. Crocker and Mr. Stanford ought to know much more about the details of that than I do, as I was not there. I know that we were then borrowing money in every way we could at that time to help Mr. Crocker. I would not take any interest in his contract for building a road across the Sierra Nevada; it was a work of too great magnitude to be prosecuted under a partnership, but we let him have money and borrowed money, as I remember, in very large quantities for him.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Crocker's memory is not very reliable just at this time, and he is not able to give us the information, and I thought that you might remember it?

The WITNESS. I know what Mr. Hopkins once told me when I was out there, and he occasionally wrote to me, but he used to attend to the matters just as though I did it myself. I had all confidence in him.

Whatever it was necessary to do to push on the great work, we did, notwithstanding that my friends told me it was going to break me up before we got through the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

MR. CROCKER ASSUMES AN INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. COHEN. The point I wish to establish to the satisfaction of the Commission is that this stock which was deposited by Mr. Crocker was not entirely the profit made by him in the construction of the road from Sacramento to the State line, but that he had assumed an indebtedness which was at the time that he deposited the stock beyond its then market value.

The WITNESS. I have no doubt but that there really was money lost in the building of the road over the Sierra Nevada Mountains. There was a very large debt that Mr. Crocker owed, more than all the stuff that belonged to the Sierra Nevada Mountain division would have paid. When we built that mountain road everything was at fearful cost; we were impeded by terrible snow-storms, and it was very expensive.

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF COMPANY AFTER FULFILLING CONTRACT.

Q. As I read the testimony before the Commission it shows that the contract with the Contract and Finance Company for constructing the road from the State line of California to Promontory Point was at the price of $43,000 per mile in cash and $43,000 per mile in stock. When the road was constructed to Promontory Point the Contract and Finance Company had spent all the cash that it had received, had 23,000,000 of stock on hand, and a debt of $3,500,000—a long way beyond the market value of the stock. Can you give us any further information of the standing of the Contract and Finance Company when it had fulfilled that contract and constructed the road to Promontory Point?—A. No; I knew that they were always in want of money, and they could not have sold out their stock and paid their debts or anything like it when they reached Promontory. Of course those things appreciated years afterwards, and they got out with some profit.

EFFECT OF BRANCH ROADS UPON MAIN LINE.

Q. That appreciation was caused by the building of connecting roads in California, and the opening up of valleys and agricultural land in California that had not been used before that time, was it not?—A. It could not have had other than that tendency. Of course the building of branches assisted the main line. They were built to protect the interest of the Central Pacific in the territory that it occupied.

NO DIVIDENDS DECLARED UNTIL COMPLETION OF ROAD.

Q. One of the main clauses of the indictment (if I may use that term) which prompted the appointment of this Commission is to the effect that you and your associates divided among yourselves large dividends, consisting of the first-mortgage bonds issued on the Central Pacific Railway Company, and a large portion of the bonds issued by the Government. Is that true?—A. I am quite sure there was no division, or any dividend declared until the work was all completed. I do not think there was.

ALL PROCEEDS FROM BONDS USED IN CONSTRUCTION.

Q. Were not the proceeds of all the first-mortgage bonds issued by the Central Pacific and the Western Pacific, and the proceeds of all bonds loaned by the United States to those companies, absolutely use in the construction of the work between Promontory Point and San José?—A. They were all used, I am sorry to say, and much more. We ought to have had some of them for the work that we did.

Q. How much stock do you say had been issued by the Central Pacific Railway Company at the time of the consolidation made with the other roads, in 1870?—A. I have not the data, but I should say about fifty millions. It might be a little over or under.

AMOUNT OF STOCK ISSUED.

Mr. COHEN. It has been insisted here by Mr. Anderson, in the examination of different witnesses, that each one of you five gentlemen got from the Contract and Finance Company $13,000,000 in stock, which would make $65,000,000 issued, and Mr. Anderson received some support for his questions in the statement made by Governor Stanford, that each one got $13,000,000. I thought that that was a mistake, and I subsequently, upon inquiry, confirmed my view. I would like to get your recollection about it.

The WITNESS. I used to be a pretty good mathematician, but never was able to get thirteen five times in fifty. I do not believe there was any such amount of stock issued. There could not have been.

The CHAIRMAN. I think Mr. Stanford's testimony was that there was $53,000,000, divided by four. That was his testimony in California.

Mr. COHEN. Divided by five.

The CHAIRMAN. No; divided by four.

Mr. COHEN. Fifty-four millions issued at the time of the consolidation and divided among five.

The WITNESS. I should have said about $50,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. We have the figures here. It was $54,000,000.

LEGAL EXPENSES OF CENTRAL PACIFIC COMPARED WITH OTHER ROADS.

Q. A great deal has been said in the course of this inquiry, both here and in California, about the large amounts that have been paid for legal and miscellaneous expenses. Have you ever compared the cost of the legal expenses of the Central Pacific and other roads that were under the management of Governor Stanford and yourself with the same class of expenses incurred by other roads here and in England?—A. I would say that there has been so much said about these matters that I asked a party to give me the correct information of what they paid for legislative expenses in England, and he brought me these figures, which I have no doubt are correct:

	Per mile
Parliamentary cost of Brighton Railroad	£4,8
Parliamentary cost of Manchester and Birmingham Railroad	5,0
Parliamentary cost of Blackwall Railroad	14,4
Solicitor's expenses, London and Northwestern Railroad	240,0

I have no doubt those figures are correct. I told a man, who ought to know, to give me the exact figures; and it was some satisfaction to know that we had been more economical in comparison with other companies. I do not suppose any one suspects that there was a vote bought with any of that money.

Mr. COHEN. Having that information before you, did you not feel that Judge Dillon, as representing the Union Pacific, and myself, as representing the Central Pacific, had been very much underpaid? You need not answer the question. I will withdraw it.

The WITNESS. I should say, if I were going to answer it, that if you did not get paid until you had done as much for the public as I have done, you would be at this time a long way off from getting any pay.

EFFECT UPON AIDED ROADS OF BUILDING OF OTHER AIDED ROADS.

Q. Can you give your views more extensively than you have to this Commission as to the effect upon the earnings of the aided roads by the building of the Northern Pacific and the Atlantic and Pacific?—A. I have not the data to tell how much, but it must be a very great damage to the Central line. It could not be otherwise.

Commissioner LITTLER. Your general traffic manager has furnished us with a table showing all that.

VIEWS OF WITNESS ON THIS SUBJECT.

Mr. COHEN. But Mr. Huntington's views on that subject are important.

The WITNESS. It could not be otherwise than damaging, as those two roads cost, no doubt, less than the Central to build. They had large subsidies given them. Their subsidies were more than was given to the Central, more than the amount of both the bonds and the lands, which would allow those roads to do the business, and live, at rates which would force the Central down to where the Government could not get anything. What the Government did for those two roads has determined largely the earning powers of the Central line for through business; and I hope that the Commission will consider that point and recommend the Government to treat the Central line as it did the other two lines. The financial problem will be easily solved then, as far as the Government debt is concerned.

NOT EXPEDIENT TO INCREASE RATES.

Q. How much could the earnings of the aided line be increased so as to meet the indebtedness of the road to the Government, when that is ascertained?—A. It seems to me that we have got to wait for the growth of the country to come up to it. We cannot charge any more than they charge on other lines. If we do, all the business that now goes to the Central line would go to the other lines. I should hope that the local business would grow so that the Central could in time pay the Government, provided that the interest was not more than the Government, as a borrower, would have to pay.

Mr. COHEN. You could increase the local charges of the Central; but that would not cut much figure in discharging the obligations of the Government.

The WITNESS. We would dry up the industries that are now there and drive them to the other lines.

Q. If you increased your rate on through business, would not that business go to the other lines?—A. Of course, it could not be otherwise.

AID RENDERED TO THE CANADIAN PACIFIC BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT.

Q. Can you state what aid has been rendered by the Canadian Government to the building of the Canadian Pacific, and the advantages which that road enjoys from the United States in its competition with the Central Pacific?—A. I have not read their charter, but I understand that the Government guarantees 3 per cent. on the capital stock, which, as the road was no doubt built at a profit, would give a very fair per cent. on the actual investment, so that the road could be run at such rates as would only call for the payment of current running expenses, nothing for interest. I understand that they have a large subsidy for running a line of steamers from the west end of their road to China, Japan, and Australia, which would bring them a large tonnage from these subsidized steamers, while we have to run our steamers without subsidy. Perhaps I need not have mentioned this, for I believe it is universally understood that the policy of the British Government is to build up a foreign commerce by extending aid to British ships, while the policy of our Government is to do what it can to cripple American commerce.

EFFECT UPON THE CENTRAL PACIFIC.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. While on that subject of the Canadian Pacific, will you explain to the Commission how the operation of that road affects the traffic of the Central Pacific, and how it detracts or takes from it?—A. It certainly can fix prices that we cannot go above. I think it has done that already. They could not do the business, perhaps, if we did it at the same price. But they would fix a price so low that we could not make anything unless we gave them something to keep out of the market.

THE ROUTE.

Q. Will you please describe the route?—A. They would run steamers from California, from Oregon and Puget Sound to the western terminus of their road, and then they would switch off on to our American roads and the navigable waters east of the Rocky mountains, and thus compete for a very large portion of our business.

ARRANGEMENT WITH OUR GOVERNMENT.

By Mr. COHEN:

Q. Does not the Canadian Pacific possess great advantages from their arrangement with this Government allowing them to transport merchandise through our territory in bond?—A. There is no doubt of that, and I think that would be the policy of our Government.

COMPETITION IN GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Q. Have you any opinion as to the competition between the Canadian Pacific and the Central Pacific for the Government business which has been given to this Canadian Pacific as against the Central? Have not goods been shipped over the Canadian Pacific which were refused to the Central Pacific?—A. I have not heard of such a thing, but would be prepared to believe it if anybody were to tell me.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I think the point was with regard to permitting goods to go in bond without paying duties.

Mr. COHEN. My point is that there were some goods going to Japan, I think, on account of the Government. We applied for them, but they would not give them to us; but they shipped them by the Canadian Pacific, and they went over on one of their steamers to Japan. The Government did not treat us very well in the matter.

COMPARATIVE PRICE FOR CARRYING MAILS.

The WITNESS. When they would not give us for doing the business over the Sierra Nevada Mountains as much as they pay to eastern roads, with cheap fuel, I would be prepared to believe they would do almost anything. That has been done, and is being done to-day. We rise 7,042 feet in 105 miles, and we have many other heavy grades and curves on the Central Pacific. Our fuel costs five, six, or seven times what fuel costs the Baltimore and Ohio road. As I understand and believe, the horizontal price for carrying mails on the two roads is the same, but for political reasons, no doubt, they cut ours down to a less price.

A CALL FOR OFFICIAL DATA.

Commissioner LITTLER. This Commission would be glad to have official data on that question.

The WITNESS. We will give it to you.

Commissioner LITTLER. We would like to see any contract existing between the Government and any of these railways which are built on level land here, through this thickly populated country.

The WITNESS. We will get that for you.

Mr. COHEN. You have got some of them before you now, Mr. Littler.

Commissioner LITTLER. That is a very serious charge to make against an officer of the Government; and we want to know whether it is true or not.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The Union Pacific had a case against the Government, which went to the Court of Claims and then to the United States Supreme Court. The result of it was that they gave us no more for carrying the mails over the mountains (and the same rule applies to the Central Pacific) than they paid the level roads of Illinois and Iowa.

COMPENSATION OF AIDED ROADS FOR CARRYING MAILS.

The WITNESS. And even then they took off 20 per cent. of it.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. They take that off from all.

The WITNESS. No; it is only from the aided roads. They take it off from the Pacific roads, but do not take it off from the other roads. They do not pay us, and they will not allow us any interest on what they do not pay.

Mr. COHEN. I think that all the information that Mr. Littler asks for is already in. I will look the testimony over and see.

Commissioner LITTLER. Mr. Stanford stated it in general terms, but I would like to have some official knowledge of that fact.

WHAT THE RECORDS OF THE RAILROAD COMMISSIONER SHOW.

Mr. COHEN. All the testimony that I have collated I have taken, not from books of the Central Pacific, because that was too cumbersome a way to take it, but I have gone to the records at Washington for most of the testimony I have put before you; and if you had gone to the same place for the data I believe you would have saved a great deal of time and money. I find it better digested there, in the office of the Railroad Commissioner, than anywhere else. There was one statement made by the Commissioner, which I will read. It is a sample of what you will have when you look over the evidence:

On this subject the United States Auditor of Railroad Accounts says that the Government has taken way business across the State of Nevada, and has also given transportation to the Northern Pacific, Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, all rival roads, and the Canadian Pacific, and is paying them full rates, when they could get it done for less by the aided Central Pacific.

That is the testimony of your own officer.

A BUSINESS TRANSACTION BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT AND CENTRAL PACIFIC.

The WITNESS. I do not recollect the date, nor the articles, but I remember that there was some freight offered here some years ago which I told the Government agents the Central would take for the price they could send it for; but they did send it, not by the Central, but around Cape Horn; and I was told, and believe, that when it reached San Francisco it was carted from the docks to a storehouse; storage was paid on it; it was then carted back again and put on a local steamer and taken up to Mare island, where it was intended to go when it left this port; whereas our road runs right to Mare Island, which is this side of San Francisco 26 miles. Why it was done I do not know. We did not offer any commission for sending it our way, and it is not fair to suppose that they got any for sending it the other way.

ADVANTAGES OF LEASING ROAD TO SOUTHERN PACIFIC.

By Mr. COHEN:

Q. Will you tell the Commission your views respecting the necessity and advantage of leasing the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific Company?—A. The Central Pacific leased the Southern, when the Southern had but a little road to operate, in order to save expense and keep those interests in harmony, one with the other; and they did that until such time as the mileage of the Southern Pacific was much more than the Central; and now the road operated by the Southern Pacific is more, I think, than 4,000 miles, whilst the aided portion of the Central Pacific is less than 900 miles. We thought that the interests of both companies would be better served to transpose the lease. It was discussed by our people there; and they wrote to me about it, and I thought it was a wise thing to do. It was a prominent feature of the contract that the arrangement should be such that neither company should make out of the other; so that if the lease did not work for the interests of both companies it should be readjusted. The only object was to have but one set of officers, and to work everything in harmony.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. In which company did your interest predominate at that time?—A. I had a large interest in both companies. I do not know exactly when the lease was made; but I think my larger interest was in the Southern Pacific at that time.

Mr. COHEN. The lease was made in 1885, I think.

OBJECT OF THE LEASE.

The WITNESS. I think it was made then; but I do not think the effect upon our individual interests was thought of by any one of us. The object was merely to work the two properties in harmony and for the best interest of both. It was thought to be a wise thing. We have agreed to get control of the Oregon road (which was rather a dangerous thing to do, but we did it) in order to protect the Central Pacific interest. The Pacific Improvement Company, in which I am a large stockholder, agreed to get the control of the Oregon and California road.

SELLING SHORT.

Q. Have you any information which will enable you to state to this commission the average quantity of the stock of the Union Pacific Railway Company, and the Central Pacific Railway Company, that had been borrowed and loaned here in New York by persons who were selling the stock of those companies short, prior to the appointment of this Commission?—A. I have been told, and believe, that it was done long before the Commission was appointed, and is done now. That there are great interests at work I do believe, and in fact I cannot account for this under any other hypothesis. I cannot believe that this is all done for political purposes; and certainly there is nothing else, except one or the other. I believe now that there are large blocks of stock short, and that they are working here in this city to get it down, and that this is a part of the machinery. No gentleman here knows anything about it, of course. But they have been over to Washington time and again. I have seen men over there myself who I knew were working for that. It is very much to the detriment, certainly, of the people who are operating these properties, and who are doing it in an honest and legitimate way.

RELATIONS WITH PACIFIC MAIL CO.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Have you knowledge of the relation existing for some years past between the Pacific Mail and the Central Pacific? I mean more especially the policy of paying subsidies, or allowing a certain percentage on traffic.—A. I do not understand that we, the overland or transatlantic railroads, have ever paid a subsidy to the Pacific Mail. I have said often to our people that there was a price that the railroads could pay to the Pacific Mail for a certain amount of tonnage that would be very much to the advantage of all the railroads and to the steamship company. Upon that theory the arrangements between the two interests have been made. We thought, therefore, that it was better for the railroad companies to hire 600 tons of capacity of each steamer and load them up with Cape Horn freight, or even with valuable freight, if the roads thought it best so to do in order to meet the payments. This would keep the prices regular, which would better satisfy the public and give the transportation companies more net money. I am now convinced this was the correct policy. I had no interest in the Pacific Mail when I went into this arrangement, excepting a few shares to qualify me to act as a director. Whatever I did was done for the interests of the railroads; but at the same time I have done nothing that I thought was harmful to the steamship company. While I was a director of the Pacific Mail (as I have been for several years), I said to them, "I will not vote in your board, because I am more interested in the railroads. Do what you think is best, but I will not vote." I have, therefore, never voted in the Pacific Mail company on any of those contracts between the railroads and the steamship company, because I have said to them that my largest interest lay the other way. It was not subsidizing; it was hiring a certain amount of tonnage, to which they could give cargo that would return all they paid; or if they thought it was more for the interest of the railroads they could fill it up with cheap tonnage, and give the railroads the profit on the higher class freights.

Q. Where did I understand you to say that you abstained from voting?—A. In the Pacific Mail.

Q. Did you ever vote in the railroad board?—A. Most assuredly; I would vote if I was there. I have not always been there, but my voice has been heard.

Q. And you have advocated the views that you have just expressed?—A. Most assuredly I have, and should do it all the time.

Q. For how many years were you a director in the Pacific Mail?—A. I think for four or five years.

Q. What was your interest in the Pacific Mail, as measured in stock, without giving the aggregate figures?—A. I have hardly ever had over fifty shares, and at one time only five shares, just enough to be a director.

TONNAGE RESERVED.

Q. Was not this compensation or payment for tonnage reserved or engaged in the Pacific Mail by the railroad company actually paid without regard to the question whether any freight was carried or not?—A. No; it was always worked in the interest of the railroads, of course paying the Pacific Mail the agreed amount.

Q. But did you not pay for the given number of tons on each ship, without reference to the question whether freight was actually carried sufficient to fill up that space?—A. I would have to go to the freight men to answer that. My ideas were to fill it up with something, but whether we did or not was controlled entirely by the interest of the railroads.

Q. But if you did not happen to carry that tonnage would you not pay just the same amount?—A. If we had to fill it up with textile goods that we would carry for four cents for overland, or carry them over probably for one cent, we should have paid whatever we had to pay them, and carried it ourselves, because there would have been money in that for the railroads.

ACTUAL PAYMENTS.

Q. My question is whether the actual payments made by the railroad company varied at all with reference to the actual number of tons of freight that you carried?—A. We hired 600 tons, as I remember, in each steamer, and we expected to fill it, but if we did not that was our fault and not the fault of the steamers.

Q. But did you not pay the same amount?—A. We paid the contract price.

Q. Is it not true, as matter of fact, that on very many occasions you sent no freight at all by the steamers?—A. I do not think there was any case where we did not send some; but I have no doubt that on every occasion if there was empty space, it was left so because it was for the interest of the railroads that it should be so; and the kind of freight we gave them was always governed by what we thought was for the interests of the railroads, and I have no doubt but the interest of the steamship company was better served by this arrangement than it could have been by running in opposition to the rail lines.

AMOUNT PAID ANNUALLY.

Q. Do you remember how much these payments came to annually?—A. No.

Q. Was it not about $90,000 per month?—A. I think so. I should like to make a contract with them to-day in the interest of the railroad at not so large a price as that; but there is a price that they can afford to take, and that the railroads can afford to pay, that would be decidedly for the interests of all the parties. Of that there is no doubt.

Q. What articles of freight can they practically reach so as to injuriously affect the freight rates that you can charge?—A. They can reach all classes.

Q. They could not reach fruit?—A. We do not carry much fruit from San Francisco to here. They could not carry fruit; but that is a small item in our business.

Q. They could not carry anything as to which time was more an object than the mere distance it had to go, could they?—A. They run, I suppose, in thirty-five days.

Q. And you run in ten days?—A. We have not yet, and I should not want to ride on a freight car that did it in that time.

QUICK FREIGHT.

Q. In fourteen days?—A. No. Goods are frequently thirty days going from here to San Francisco. I think that twenty-six days is about the average. General Dodge says that twenty days is quick freight. There is some quick freight. No business man can fail to see, if he goes into this question, that this is a wise thing for both companies to do. It is simply a question of both companies carrying at a fair rate, or cutting it down and carrying it at a rate that does not pay. That is all there is of it. It is either carrying at a loss or carrying at a profit. There is so much stuff goes, and the competition cuts prices all to pieces, and we must carry it at that cut rate, or work in harmony and get fair rates.

DIVERSION OF FREIGHTS.

By Mr. COHEN:

Q. There is another view of the matter which I would like you to explain. The Pacific Mail can carry everything that the Union Pacific and Central Pacific can, except fruit. They do carry between San Francisco and New York—when they are in opposition, do they not—all classes of freight?—A. Yes; there is no class of freight, except perishable freight, that they do not carry.

Q. What would be the result were it not for this pooling arrangement with the railroads?—A. We do not call it a "pool;" we call it chartering a certain amount of tonnage.

Q. It is not a subsidy, as it is termed. Call it by any term which you please. When they are running without that arrangement they divert a certain amount of tonnage from the English and French ports directly to Aspinwall, which, under other circumstances, would come to New York, do they not? I mean freight shipped from Paris, London, or Liverpool, and intended for San Francisco, comes on steamers that run from the English and French ports to Aspinwall, and the freight is carried from there to San Francisco, instead of coming through New York.—A. I have no doubt that is true.

Q. Therefore the railroad company would get some benefit of the prices paid the Pacific Mail in having the freight come to New York and be carried directly across the continent, instead of having it go to Aspinwall and through by the Pacific Mail Company's steamers to San Francisco, is not that so?—A. There is no doubt of that.

THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC AS A FREIGHT LINE.

Q. You mentioned this morning the fact of the Southern Pacific carrying freight from here to California, but I think you did not mention the element of time. Does not the Southern Pacific demand a portion of the through freight because it can deliver freight from New York quicker than it is carried over the Union and Central?—A. The Southern Pacific is a good line. As to the time it makes as compared with the other lines I am not prepared to say. I think it is the best line for freight originating on the tide or Atlantic coast line; but very much the larger proportion of freight originates inland, which the Southern Pacific does not, to any considerable extent, reach.

C. P. HUNTINGTON.

NEW YORK, Thursday, September 22, 1887.

GRENVILLE M. DODGE sworn and examined.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Question. What is your occupation?—Answer. I am a civil engineer.

Q. You have been engaged in that business all your life?—A. Yes.

CONNECTION WITH UNION PACIFIC.

Q. What connection had you with the Union Pacific scheme?—A. I commenced making surveys for the Union Pacific in 1853, and I have been connected with it, directly or indirectly, from that time to this, excepting five years during the war; then I was in communication with it and with the Government in relation to it; but I had no official capacity.

Q. After the war how soon did you resume your position as engineer-in-chief?—A. I think it was in May, 1866.

Q. What is your present relation with the company?—A. I am a director.

Q. What part, or how prominent a part, did you take in the preliminary investigations that led to the location of the route upon which this road was built in 1866, 1867, and 1868?—A. I made the locations on the approval of the Government.

PRELIMINARY SURVEYS AND ESTIMATES.

Q. Who else was engaged in that work during the time—the work, I mean, of the preliminary surveys and the estimates as to the cost of the construction of the road?—A. During the war Mr. Peter A. Dey was the chief engineer, and had charge of the surveys and locations.

Q. Did your examination embrace the whole country from Omaha to Ogden?—A. My examination embraced the country from Omaha to the California State line.

Q. Did you also make estimates of the probable cost of the construction of this road?—A. I did. I made estimates of quantities, but not of the cash cost. That was an impossible thing to do in those days.

Q. You made estimates of quantities, but did those estimates apply to all the classes of work that were required to be done to complete the road?—A. Yes.

Q. During what years were those estimates prepared?—A. I made them from 1853 up.

Q. I mean those that finally figured when the work was actually done.—A. After 1866 I made them in each year, as the work progressed, or our surveys demonstrated where the line would be built.

Q. The estimates of quantities then represented the amount of clearing required for preparing the ground, the amount of excavation of earth of different qualities, and the amount of excavation of rock, and the amount of fills required, and all these items?—A. Yes; everything.

Q. Did it also include the amount of masonry required for building the culverts and bridges?—A. Everything.

Q. And the number of ties required to be laid on the road?—A. Yes.

Q. Did it also include the quantity of rails required, and fish plates and fastenings?—A. Everything.

Q. Did the estimate also cover the kind and number of buildings required for station houses?—A. Everything. There was nothing connected with the road but what it covered.

Q. Do I understand you to say that you did not figure at all, in dollars, as to the probable cost of this work?—A. Not at first; not until after the prices were fixed by the contractors.

Q. Were you also supervising engineer during the progress of the work to inspect it as it progressed from time to time?—A. Yes; for the company.

EXPLANATION OF THE WITNESS'S FAILURE TO APPEAR BEFORE THE WILSON COMMITTEE.

Q. Do you remember the occasion of the Wilson Investigating Committee in 1873?—A. I do.

Q. Do you recollect the fact that among other general subjects that were very prominently examined on that occasion, the question of the actual cost of the road, as compared with its cost measured in bonds and stocks, was much talked of, and a good deal of evidence taken on the subject?—A. I should say, in relation to that matter, that during all that investigation I was in Texas, and knew nothing about it except what I may have seen in the papers or in the reports. I was not present at any of it.

Q. In order that you may, if you desire, make an explanation with regard to one or two passages in the report, I will call your attention to the fact that the report contains the following statement:

The presence, as a witness, of General Grenville M. Dodge, chief engineer, under whose supervision the principal part of the work was done, could not be procured, although diligent efforts were made to that end; and telegrams were sent to him insisting the attendance of the witness, and the deputy sergeant-at-arms was sent after him, who has diligently sought for him for weeks, but has been unable to find him.

Is there any explanation you desire to make with regard to the accuracy of that statement, or otherwise?—A. Simply this: That at the time that investigation was being made I was building a road in Texas, known as the Texas Pacific; I had about forty days, I think, to make a connection of the road there, to save the charter of the company and to save the subsidy. Mr. Thomas A. Scott, for whom I was at work, and who was at the head of the company, wired me that it was not necessary for me to appear in Washington until the road was completed. When it was completed I came North, and wired the committee that I was prepared to appear before them; and so wired the attorneys, but they did not see proper to call me. I afterwards did appear before committee there, and made whatever explanations they wanted of me.

HIS APPEARANCE BEFORE THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE.

Q. Before what committee was that?—A. Mr. Hunton's committee, the Judiciary Committee of the House in 1876.

Q. Were you examined at length with regard to this matter?—A. Everything they wished to know of me.

Q. Did your examination turn on the cost of the construction of the road and the transactions connected with its construction?—A. I do not think they went into an examination of the cost of the road; but it is impossible for me to state now what they did go into.

Q. Was your examination a protracted one?—A. I think they had me before them twice or three times, two or three hours at a time.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Was that testimony printed?—A. Yes.

Q. What committee was this—a Congressional committee?—A. Yes.

Q. A committee of investigation?—A. A committee of investigation, as I understood, for some purpose; I do not recollect what.

Q. Who was the chairman of the committee?—A. Mr. Hunton, of Virginia, I think.

HOW THE MOUNTAIN-CROSSINGS WERE DETERMINED.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Give the Commission, in a general way, a statement as to the nature of the road from Omaha to Ogden, referring to any special point where the difficulties of construction were very great or different from the ordinary grades that prevail in the country.—A. How much of a detail do you wish me to go into? Of course the key to any line crossing the continent is the crossing of the Rocky and other mountains. As you know, they are the Black Hills, the divide of the continent, the Wahsatch Mountains, the Humboldt, and the Cascade. The line crossing of the Rocky Mountains was entirely controlled by where we could cross those mountains. It took several years before we could discover that point. It was finally discovered by my running what was known as a foot-line at the base of the mountain, from the Laramie River to the south, and a summit line on the top of the mountain, and finding the lowest point in the summit and the highest point in the plains. That happened to be at Sherman and Cheyenne. That point was discovered and was finally determined in 1866. That, of course, controlled the line from the Rocky Mountains east to the Missouri River. The next point to determine was the divide of the continent. All the attacks upon that country had always been made by the Bridger Line, by the Bridger Pass, and by the South Pass. My early examination, and my examinations when I commanded that department in my Indian campaign, satisfied me that the true line was about half-way between the South Pass and the Bridger Pass. But it was a country wholly unknown. For 300 miles it was occupied by Indians, and nobody had ever theretofore been able to force their way through it. I undertook it with my party, had my chiefs killed, but finally went through myself, forcing the way through and discovered what I suppose was the true line crossing the divide of the continent. Then I came to the Wahsatch Mountains, which were all governed by the trend of the Bear River, which cuts them on the north, about 120 miles north of where we crossed. These mountains had been attacked there, before I went there, by Mr. Reed and by a great many others; finally it was discovered that the true line was north of Fort Bridger, up the Muddy to Yellow Creek, across to Bear River, and down the Echo and the Weber to Salt Lake. In an early day it was supposed they could cross the north arm of Salt Lake at what was known as the Bear River arm. My first surveys through there showed throughout about 11 feet of water, which we could bridge. My last showed about 19 feet, and it was impossible for us to bridge that depth of water, and that forced us north and over the Promontory to Monument Point. The next natural line was down the Humboldt and up the Truckee until we struck the State line. Farther than that I do not know. The Central Pacific determined the line from there on.

NO DIFFICULTIES BETWEEN OMAHA AND CHEYENNE.

Q. As far as this road, which you have described, runs from Omaha to Cheyenne, if I understand you correctly, that part was over the plains and presented no difficulties of construction and no point involving large expenditures?—A. No, sir; only the cost of the work at that time was greater than now; it would not involve large expenditures to-day.

Q. You mean that there was nothing unusual in the railroad building?—A. No.

Q. Now with regard to the ascent of the Rockies in passing from Cheyenne to Sherman, did you find it a gradual ascent, or were there peculiar engineering difficulties to overcome?—A. There was no difficulty to overcome there, as compared with any other parts of the mountain. I may state that a locomotive of the Union Pacific road can haul from Ogden to Omaha as many cars as two locomotives of any other line across this continent, or any other that can be discovered, unless you put it right alongside of the Union Pacific.

LATER ESTIMATES OF COST OF CONSTRUCTION.

Q. I understood you to say that at a later period, after your estimates of quantities had been completed, you did make estimates as to the probable cost of construction?—A. Yes.

Q. When were the latter estimates made?—A. I think some time along after the partial completion of the road—after I knew what the contracts were and what the actual cost of work was.

Q. After the contracts were entered into?—A. After we knew what the prices of the contracts were.

Q. What contracts do you refer to?—A. I refer to the contracts which the contractors made and turned the prices over to me.

Q. Were your estimates based upon those contracts?—A. My estimates for actual cost were. Almost all my estimates for the company to the contractors were based upon the contracts that the company turned over to me, and instructed me to make estimates upon those contracts.

NO RELATIONS WITH CONTRACTORS EXCEPT TO SEE THAT THEY PERFORMED THEIR WORK.

Q. Had you any special relations with the persons and incorporations who were the contractors of the Union Pacific—I mean with Hackett, Davis, or the Credit Mobilier?—A. Nothing, except to s that they performed their work in accordance with their contracts.

Q. Did you ever form any preliminary estimates before the contra were entered into as to what would be a fair amount to pay for th work?—A. I think that I made estimates upon the work, but my me ory does not serve me that I did make any in detail for the company.

AS TO ACTUAL COST OF UNION PACIFIC ROAD.

Q. Have you any memoranda or copies of contracts that would sh any light upon the question as to what would have been fairly the co of construction of the Union Pacific on the line you have describe having in view all the circumstances which prevailed in 1866, 1867, a 1868, so that we can obtain some light as to what the real cost of co struction of that road should have been?—A. In the latter part of it—in 1869—when the road had reached Piedmont and Evanston, I wa out there and completed the construction of the road myself for th company. I know about what the road cost from Ogden to Promontory That was 47 miles; that cost about $87,000 in cash per mile.

Q. What figures have you to show that cost?—A. I have a mem randum that I found that was made at the time. I can furnish i But the payments that were made for everything is a pretty good es mate of what the cost of the road would have been and what it is no I know the prices that were paid for work, all the way through, in cas

BASIS OF ESTIMATE.

Q. In order to estimate properly what that particular section mu have cost, you would have to base your conclusion upon the statemen of the number of yards of earth and rock excavation, the fills required the masonry, bridging, and cost of rails?—A. Yes; and freight an everything contingent upon it.

Q. Have you memoranda containing those details?—A. I think have, but I will not be certain about it. I have a memorandum of th cost, or estimated cost, which I made up for the Union Pacific Compan when they were about to turn it over to the Central Pacific.

Q. In order to enable us to give the proper weight to your statemen we would like to have the material on which you base your computa tion before us.—A. I will try to obtain it for you.

Q. You have not got it with you?—A. No.

555 MILES BUILT IN ONE YEAR.

Q. Do you recall the prices at which the different classes of work we figured in that estimate?—A. We worked from April, 1868, to May 1 1869, continuously, through summer and winter. We had not a mil of road located west of Laramie at that time, nor a mile of road graded In that year we located and built and put in running order 555 mile of road—laying everything from one end and bringing everything fro the Missouri River. Of course the cost in winter was extraordinary I know that we paid, crossing the mountains, as high as $3.50 per cubi yard of earth which had to be blasted.

Q. When you say "we paid" whom do you mean?—A. I mean tha the contractors paid it.

Q. Who was the particular contractor that you refer to?—A. Up to Piedmont it was the Ames contract, I think; from there on I went o and took charge of the road for the Union Pacific Company, and knew the prices being paid because of that fact.

Q. In regard to the statement which you have made as to the payments made at this particular period—from what source did you derive your knowledge that $3.50 was paid for blasting rock?—A. From my own memory of the facts. It was an extraordinary thing.

Q. I understood you to say that you had no official connection with the contract companies, excepting a supervision of the work, to see that it was done, and that they were entitled to receive the agreed compensation from the railroad company?—A. I had not, except as I state—that in 1869 I went on and took charge of the road and finished it up for the company.

Q. That was from Ogden to Promontory Point?—A. The work was not finished back. When I went there I think our track was in the Echo Valley, at some place.

AS TO METHOD OF CONSTRUCTION AND PAYMENT.

Q. Please describe the process, or method, which applied to that construction—I mean to ask how the men were employed and how the prices were fixed and how payments were made.—A. When I went there the contracts, as a general thing, had already been made to certain parties, and a good many of the contractors having failed, the company had to then step in their place and complete the work; that is, the contracting company had to step in and take their places, and pay the men, and for everything to complete the road. We were pushing for Humboldt Wells. We graded our road nearly to Humboldt Wells.

Q. You are referring now to the construction between Ogden and Promontory Point?—A. I am referring to the construction from there to Piedmont.

Q. How far is Piedmont from Ogden?—A. About 120 miles.

Q. Do I understand, then, that the books of the Union Pacific should show the actual payments in cash made for all the work done between Piedmont and Promontory Point, not through any contract with any contractor, taking the work at satisfactory figures, but the payments made directly on estimates for the quantities of work actually done, and at prices fixed for the job, or piece, as you may say?—A. I do not know anything about the books of the Union Pacific Railroad. Mr. Mink can answer that question better than I can.

Q. You can tell how the payments were made—whether there were so many yards found by you to have been excavated by persons with whom you had made a bargain at so much per yard, or whether those payments were made on any contract for the completion of the work?—A. I cannot state as to that, because I do not know.

WHAT THE BOOKS SHOW.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Perhaps Mr. Mink can inform the Commission whether this part of the Union Pacific was constructed and paid for by the Union Pacific under any contract, or whether the books will show that it was construction directly done by the company and without the intervention of any contractor.

Mr. MINK. My understanding is that it was done under the Davis contract, and the books show that the money was charged to the Davis contract.

Commissioner ANDERSON. But do the books show that the prices charged for the work was according to the terms of the Davis contract; or were the prices charged based on estimates showing the quantity of work done, of different qualities, with the prices fixed, applicable to the material, at so much per yard?

Mr. MINK. As I recollect it, it was a specified sum per mile for the road and equipment.

DID GENERAL DODGE DO THE WORK FOR THE RAILROAD COMPANY?

Q. General Dodge, with that explanation from Mr. Mink, is it not likely that you were mistaken in saying that you did the work directly for the company; and is it not the fact that you must have acted as the agent representing the company, and merely representing the company, in seeing that the amount earned per mile, under the Davis contract, had accrued?—A. I cannot tell that. I went out by order of the president, and took charge of the work, and closed it. Who it was charged to, or anything of that kind, I do not know. The work was quite a great deal of trouble there, and they were anxious to have it completed.

HIS REPORTS BASED ON MILEAGE DONE.

Q. What I want to get at is whether the reports that you made to the Union Pacific road about pay ments were based on estimates of the number of yards of work done, or whether those reports merely showed that a certain lineal distance of the road had been completed, so that the person entitled to pay would be entitled to receive a payment at so much per mile.—A. My estimates, as chief engineer of the road, and my recollection is that they were based right upon the contracts.

Q. Based upon contracts per mile and not upon contracts per quantity?—A. Yes; that is my recollection. That was my estimate to the company.

ACTUAL CASH COST OF ROAD BETWEEN OGDEN AND PROMONTORY.

Q. Then is your statement that the road cost $87,000 per mile based upon the fact that that was the contract price per mile in that part of the construction; or does that answer mean to convey to the Commission the idea that the quantity of work, as measured by you, would have been fairly worth, at the market prices then prevailing, the sum of $87,000 per mile?—A. The price was based upon the actual cash cost price of the work. It was made up for the purposes of settlement with the Central Pacific road between Ogden and Promontory. We built there, and we sold them the road.

Q. Was it the actual cash cost under the contracts made for building the road at so much per mile, or was it the actual cost according to the contracts made with the persons who were paid cash value for the work done?—A. As I understood it, it was the actual cash cost to the men who actually built the road.

Q. If that be so, will your memorandum on which you base your conclusion show that fact?—A. I think it will.

Q. Can you let us have that to-morrow?—A. I will try to.

Q. How did the work between Ogden and Promontory Point, as to the quantity of work to be done, compare with that part of the work between Omaha and Cheyenne?—A. It was much heavier.

Q. How did it compare with that part of the work between Cheyenne and Piedmont?—A. That is a hard question to answer without figures.

THE FARTHER WEST THE GREATER THE COST.

Q. Which would cost the most per mile?—A. The west end would cost more per mile. There you had a longer distance to haul your rails and ties, and a longer distance to haul your provisions and men. The farther west you went the more the road cost.

Q. But as to the depth of the cuts, the quantity of masonry required, and the fills to make, how was it?—A. Taking the road from Cheyenne to Promontory Point it would be a fair average to put in the mountains and plains per mileage of excavation.

TOPOGRAPHY FROM CHEYENNE TO PROMONTORY POINT.

Q. I do not quite understand you?—A. Of course when you leave Cheyenne to go over the mountains you have got very heavy work; but when you cross Laramie Plains you have not got it as heavy. When you get into Rattlesnake Mountains you have heavier work again. When you cross the divide and go down Bitter Creek it is not so heavy. When you strike the Wahsatch Mountain range the work increases. But if you take an average, the part, for instance, from Ogden to the east base of Promontory is light, while the last part up the mountain is very heavy, because there we were climbing the mountains.

Q. Then the work from Ogden to Promontory, taking the whole 47 miles, may be considered as presenting a fair average cost of the mountain portion of the construction?—A. A fair average of quantity, not of cost.

Q. A fair average of quantity as compared with the whole line from Cheyenne to Promontory?—A. I do not want you to think that I state that the whole cash cost of the road was at that rate.

FROM OMAHA TO CHEYENNE, CASH COST $30,000 TO $35,000 PER MILE, EQUIPPED.

Q. Now, with regard to what would have been a fair estimate of actual cost between Omaha and Cheyenne during the years of actual construction, can you give us any information? By actual cost I mean taking a number of yards of work to be done, and the other work to be done, what would have been the fair cost of that work to the contractor, in 1868, with, say, 10 per cent. added for cost of supervision and attention?—A. From Omaha to Cheyenne I suppose that the work cost perhaps in cash something like from thirty to thirty-five thousand per mile.

Q. What do you include in that?—A. I include a completed road, the equipped road, and everything. That includes $7,500 per mile for equipment.

Q. Then, as I understand the whole statement made by you, it is that from $30,000 to $35,000 per mile would be a fair estimate of the cost of construction, in 1868 and 1869, of that part of the road from Omaha to Cheyenne, and $85,000 per mile from Cheyenne to Promontory Point?—A. I only gave you the cost of 47 miles there.

Q. I understood you to say that $87,000 per mile would be a fair average to take, taking the whole road from Cheyenne to Promontory Point, good and bad?—A. Not at all; I only spoke of the road from Ogden to Promontory.

COMPARISON OF COST BETWEEN CERTAIN LINES.

Q. I ask you to compare the cost and quantity of the work from Ogden to Promontory Point with the quantity and cost of the work which you had to do from Cheyenne to Piedmont. Which of those two would be the more expensive?—A. It would be according to when the wo was done. If one was done in the winter and the other in the sum there could be no comparison.

Q. Referring at present merely to the quantity of work to be do which of the two sections per mile would present the larger quan of work between Cheyenne and Piedmont as compared with that be tween Ogden and Promontory, mile for mile; or you can take any oth subdivision that may be more convenient?—A. One is distant over t miles and the other about 47, and it is pretty hard to compare them.

Q. Then take any other subdivision that your greater familiar with the subject will prompt, starting from Cheyenne, and let the Com mission know how the quantity of work to be done over these differe sections compare.—A. Our heavy work was from Cheyenne to Lar mie.

Q. How many miles is that?—A. It is hard to remember those things There is one division of the road that I now forget. I wish to say tha it is a long time since I have given any attention to distances there. I you have a railway guide here you could get that.

Q. I will put the question in this way, and you can perhaps answe it to-morrow when you bring your detailed statement. Can you fur nish this Commission with an estimate from such material as you may have in your possession, and from your memory, of the fair averag actual cost of the construction of this road, stated by divisions, com mencing at Cheyenne and extending to Promontory Point?—A. I have none of those estimates. They are all with the company. I left all my papers with the company when I left the company.

PORTIONS OF ROAD OVER THE ROCKIES AND THE WAHSATCH COS OVER $85,000 PER MILE.

Q. Is there any portion of the road between Cheyenne and Ogden that, taking into consideration its distance from the place from which the materials proceeded when it was constructed, cost as much a the sum you have stated as the cost from Ogden to Promontory Point?—A. Yes; there are portions of the road I have no doubt over the Rocky Mountains and over the Wahsatch that cost more per mile than that.

Q. To how many miles of the road would that statement apply?—A. I think all the road from Piedmont down through Echo cost more money than that. It was built in the winter, when we paid enormous prices.

Q. You mean that the part from Piedmont to Ogden would cost more than the part from Ogden to Promontory?—A. A good portion of it was heavy rock work, and it must have cost a great deal more than that for that part of the road.

Q. Is there any portion of the road between Cheyenne and Piedmont that would cost more per mile, having in view the different distances of transportation, and the period of actual construction, than the sum you have named as being the cost from Ogden to Promontory Point?—A. There are miles on the Black Hills which cost more; but taking the average cost through, I do not know that there is.

ACTUAL COST OF ROAD FROM CHEYENNE TO OGDEN MUCH LESS THAN $87,000 PER MILE.

Q. Then, taking the whole range from Cheyenne to Ogden, would it be your judgment that the actual construction cost more or less than $87,000 per mile?—A. A great deal less.

Q. Can you, within limitations as to an approximation, state about what, in your judgment, that would have cost at that time, or did cost?—A. You can get at the exact cost of that line in cash. I think they have it. I think it has been made a part of the records of the Government.

Q. Do you mean in the Wilson committee report?—A. I think it is there; yes.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. That states the cash cost of the road.

The WITNESS. That is better testimony than mine, because they knew exactly what it did cost. A statement made twenty years after is a mere matter of guess work as to the actual cost of the road; but you have data which give it officially.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I think if General Dodge will bring us the data which will give us the cost between Ogden and Promontory Point, it will be all that I desire to ask him. [Addressing the witness.] Can you bring us that to-morrow?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I call your attention to the fact that this calls for the cost of construction five years before and five years after construction.

The WITNESS. I can give the cost then and now.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The act says five years before the actual construction and five years after, the object being to show that it cost more at the time of the actual construction than it would have cost at either of the other dates.

The WITNESS. When would be the five years after?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. In 1875. Then I would like to have you state what it would cost to build the road now?

The WITNESS. I have built roads almost every year since, and if I had time I could give you the information.

The Commission then adjourned to Friday, September 23, 1887, at 10 o'clock a. m.

No. 10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Friday, September 23, 1887.

The Commission met pursuant to adjournment, all the Commissioners being present.

GRENVILLE M. DODGE, being further examined, testified as follows:

COST OF ROAD FROM OGDEN TO PROMONTORY.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Have you in your possession the estimate which you were requested to present to the Commission this morning, as to the cost of construction of the Union Pacific?—Answer. I have an estimate here from Ogden, west, which I spoke about—47 miles.

Q. What does the estimate contain?—A. It contains the entire cost of that work.

Q. On what was it based?—A. It was based on the actual cost of the contracts.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Is that an estimate, or an account showing the cost?—A. That is the cost.

Q. It is not estimated, but the actual cost?—A. It is the actual co yes.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. "Cost of Union Pacific Railroad from ten hundred and forti mile post to Promontory Summit, 45 88/100 miles, $87,188.86 per m $4,000,224.96"; what is included in the actual cost?—A. Here is the c in items: Grading, masonry, bridging, rock work, and everything el
On this side is the grading, masonry, bridging, track, tanks, and bu ings, telegraph, labor since laying track, engineering, and amount complete the road. That amount required to complete the road is w the Government required.

Q. How much equipment is there in that?—A. There is no equ ment in that.

Q. What would be the estimate for cost of equipment upon that p of the road?—A. We placed upon the road, I think it was, $7,500 mile.

Q. So that the actual cost of $87,000 per mile, with the additio $7,500 for equipment, would bring the actual cost and estimated va of equipment to $87,108.86 plus $7,500, or $94,688.86?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you give us a copy of this, or will you submit this pape the Commission?—A. I want to retain this, but I will have a c made of it, if you like.

The following is a copy of the statement referred to:

S. B. Reed's statement of cost of grading from Ogden to Promontory Summit.

Q. Now, beginning with the point of construction of the Union Pacific at the Missouri River, and giving it by miles, what was the actual cost to Cheyenne?—A. That is a matter that it is impossible for me to give; but it is sworn to, in the Wilson report, by the auditor of the contractors.

AS TO EARLY ESTIMATES.

Q. Did you make any estimate at the time about what would be the actual cost?—A. I did not make any estimate of the cost on each section; I made estimates of all the quantities, which I returned to the company, and whenever it was known what the work was costing, and they asked for an estimate of the cash cost of certain portions of it, I would furnish it.

Q. What estimate did you make from the Missouri River to Omaha and Cheyenne per mile?—A. I have not got that and could not tell; but I have here, as I find on looking over my papers, an estimate made evidently from near the one hundredth meridian to Ogden.

Q. How far west of the Missouri River is the one hundredth meridian?—A. About 247 miles. This is made in my own handwriting, here in New York, upon a sheet of their office paper, upon which an estimate has been made for the company. That would give my idea of what the cost would be of the work. Probably this was made in 1868, because it was made after the quantities were all known.

Q. How does that compare with your estimate given yesterday of the cost from Omaha to Cheyenne, where you said the cost per mile was about $30,000 to $35,000?—A. That is the east end of the road, and was the very lightest work.

Q. Did that cover the entire road from Omaha to Cheyenne?—A. I just gave that as mere guess-work. It was an estimate made without any data; you asked my opinion, and it was only an opinion; I objected to giving an estimate, and you asked me for my opinion.

Q. Is your opinion to-day the same as yesterday?—A. Yes.

FROM 100TH MERIDIAN TO OGDEN ESTIMATED TO COST $50,000 PER MILE.

Q. What is your opinion as an engineer as to the cost from Cheyenne to Ogden?—A. I have got it here from the one hundredth meridian to Ogden, an estimate made at the time. I make that cost, as my estimate at the time, as $36,637,276; that is 732 miles; that is a paper that I found, and it shows it is made from accurate data.

Q. Seven hundred and thirty-two miles from what point?—A. From near the one hundredth meridian to Ogden; that estimate was made upon a condition of building the road, as we were then building it; but when they came to Piedmont, and we went into the work in the winter time, the cost of the work done there in the winter was certainly double what it would have been under these circumstances.

Q. That would be at the rate, then, from the one hundredth meridian to Ogden, of about $50,000 per mile?—A. Yes; something like $50,000 per mile.

Q. So that, as an engineer, making an estimate and giving your opinion as to the cost of construction of that road, at the time, it was the rate of $30,000 to $35,000 per mile, from the Missouri River west to the one hundredth meridian, and from the one hundredth meridian on to Ogden, at the rate of $50,000 per mile, on the average?—A. Yes; on the average.

Q. And that from Ogden west, 40 miles, the figures you have given as the cost was the actual cost at the time of the construction?—A. Yes; I want to say that from Piedmont to Promontory the actual cost was a good deal more than this estimate, for the reason which I gave—that it was built in the winter. We built the road from the Wahsatch Mountain in the winter when the snow on a level was at the top of the telegraph poles. Men worked there and blasted the rock and earth in the winter months.

Q. Then whatever the cost as charged to the company, in excess of the rate per mile given by you as an engineer, is a sum added as a result of the time at which you built the road?

The WITNESS. I do not understand the question.

Q. The estimate given by you from the Missouri River to Cheyenne and from the one hundredth meridian to Ogden, is an estimate of the actual cost, as charged upon the company's books; and any excess over that estimate is the result of the time during which the road was built and the obstacles that you met with?—A. I do not know how it was charged upon the books. I suppose the charges upon the books of the company are the cost in securities. This statement is the estimate of the cost in cash. Mr. Mink can answer the question of cash as shown on books better than I can.

BASIS OF THE ESTIMATE.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. In whose handwriting is this estimate?—A. I do not know whose it is. I suppose, though, that it is in the handwriting of one of the engineers in my office.

Q. Is that the original paper that was prepared at the time?—A. That I cannot state. That is a paper that I found among my own part. I recollect making this up; and I have no doubt that this is the original paper.

Q. You are sufficiently familiar with the figures in detail to recognize it as being either the original, or an exact copy?—A. Yes.

Q. From what material was that statement made up?—A. All the grading, excavation, and everything else, was made up from the statement furnished by Mr. Reed, the superintendent of construction; the masonry, and track material and laying, tanks and buildings, telegraph, and such things were made up from data furnished by the engineers, showing the cost of each different part of the construction.

Q. But, as I understand it, the estimate which you have must have been made up after the whole work had been completed?—A. This was made up at the time we sold this road, or were about to sell it, to the Central Pacific. It was made up to show the exact cash cost at that time.

ESTIMATE NOT MADE UP FOR PURPOSE OF OBTAINING PAYMENTS.

Q. It was not made up then for the purpose of obtaining payments as the work progressed from the Union Pacific?—A. No; it has nothing to do with that. Those estimates are entirely different.

Q. Now, with regard to the rates at which each kind of work was charged, from whom did you obtain those rates?—A. They are put down here as stated by Mr. Reed; others were probably obtained from the regular vouchers, as to the cost.

Q. If you say they were obtained from vouchers, do you say it as a surmise, or as a fact which you know?—A. I suppose I called upon each of the departments which had expended this money to report the amounts that had been expended upon such and such work, and that was furnished to me, and I compiled that and made a statement from it.

Q. Mr. Mink has stated that the actual payments made by the Union Pacific Company for this work were made under contract at so much per mile, and that the payments were not made in kind.—A. I called upon the contractors and superintendent of construction, who laid out the work for the contractors; that was Mr. Reed. He furnished me with the actual cash cost.

Q. If the contractors were to make a statement they would undoubtedly employ their own superintendent, and estimate at so much per day; and they would necessarily state to you what, in their judgment, the work was worth per yard, and what the masonry was worth per yard, but they would not state to you the exact amount paid by them in wages to the men they employed?—A. I do not know why they should not.

Q. The contractors would naturally not pay for the work per yard, but would pay the men whom they employed to do the work their wages?—A. A portion of this work was contracted to other contractors.

Q. By whom?—A. By Mr. Reed, the superintendent of construction.

Q. Whose superintendent?—A. The contractors' superintendent.

Q. What is his name?—A. Samuel B. Reed.

THE DAVIS CONTRACT.

Q. What is the name of the chief contractor for whom he was chief superintendent?—A. This was under the Davis contract.

Q. Then the superintendent of the Davis contract would sublet certain portions of the work, and report to you the rates at which he had paid for it for account of Mr. Davis?—A. Yes.

Q. To what extent have you knowledge that the work was done in that way, and not by the direct employment of gangs of men, under foremen, to whom wages were paid?—A. I was on the ground when the most of this work was done; a part of it was done by the contractors, and a part by what they call the company, and if you look at this in detail you will see that it is made up in that way showing what was done by the different parties.

Q. Do you know what was the rate per mile for that work under the Davis contract?—A. I do not know. It is a matter of record.

Q. Is it not possible that in order to make a settlement with the Central Pacific you were instructed to make up a statement of cost by distributing the rates paid for the different grades of work, so as to make the cost substantially equal to what the Union Pacific were compelled under the Davis contract to pay Davis for that work and so enable the Union Pacific to be reimbursed the actual cost to the Central Pacific?—A. No; not in making up a statement of this kind.

Q. But in making up statements of that kind, if you took the rates for the different grades of work as to that portion which was not sublet to contractors, and simply figured up what the total cost would be at these several rates, is it not clear that you would not obtain the actual cost, unless the rates which were given to you for the different grades of work were the exact equivalent for the rates actually paid, or the cost, by reason of the rates of wages that were to be paid for the work actually done?—A. That is a pretty long question, and I shall have to digest it a little before I can answer. I can state in a few words what my understanding of this is. To my best ability, in my position as chief engineer, I obtain the actual cash cost of this work by going to the proper sources for it; and that is what I returned to the company to enable them to settle with the Central Pacific.

STATEMENT ABOVE GIVEN SHOWS ACTUAL COST TO CONTRACTOR.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you understand that that paper represents the actual amount of money paid out by the Union Pacific road for the construction of this piece of road?—A. I understand that to be the actual amount paid out in cash by the contractors.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. And not the cost to the Union Pacific? The Union Pacific may have paid a great deal more.—A. The Union Pacific base their contract upon a different principle entirely. This is actual cash cost. That is what my memory is, that I was instructed to obtain the actual cash cost of this road—Ogden to Promontory.

WITNESS RELIED ON MR. REED'S WORD.

Q. Now, taking up some of these figures in detail, you enter on this statement 188,098 cubic yards earth excavation at 30 cents per yard, and carry out the amount as $56,429.40. Who was it that paid 30 cents per yard for that earth excavation?—A. Mr. Reed.

Q. And what information have you that he did pay 30 cents per yard for that earth excavation?—A. His mere statement to me. He was the superintendent of construction.

Q. Is there anything else on which you base it—any books which you examined belonging to Mr. Reed or to Mr. Davis, to which you can refer your authority for saying that the actual cash cost to Mr. Davis there, through his superintendent, Mr. Reed, was 30 cents per yard for that work?—A. I certainly never examined the books of Mr. Reed or of anybody else when he made his statement to me officially of what he paid for work.

Q. Is your explanation the same as to all the items which follow that item in regard to this earth excavation—being the whole column, and running from 30 cents per yard to $1 per yard?—A. It is the same. It is his statement of cost as made to me.

Q. I find charges for excavating loose rock at $1.75 and $2 per yard, and $4 per yard for solid rock. What is the basis on which you found the entries which are made in this account?—A. He furnished them to me.

Q. They are also Mr. Reed's statements?—A. Yes.

Q. And so with regard to the following items: "149,154 cubic yards of earth excavation, company work, $367,469.67." What is the meaning of that entry, "Company work"?—A. There was a portion of that line across the salt desert, and a great deal of it was under water, and portions of it, if I remember rightly, we could not get a contractor to touch, and the company had to put their own men in and do the work.

THE "COMPANY" MEANT THE CONSTRUCTION COMPANY.

Q. That is, the Union Pacific Company?—A. The contractors. When he speaks of "the company" he speaks of his own company. The contracting parties there, when they let contracts, of course they had to reserve their own forces, and their own force would go in and help the contractors, and push on the work where it was not going on fast enough. I judge that that refers to that. I know that in that class of work over the overflowed desert, where it was under water, the men had to go in up to their waists to work.

Q. Then this is the construction company that you refer to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what its incorporated name was?—A. I do not know as it had any incorporated name, except that Mr. Reed was the superintendent of construction for the contractors.

Q. There must have been some organization that we can refer to for the purpose of asking where its books or records are?—A. It is under the Davis contract, I suppose.

THE DAVIS CONSTRUCTION COMPANY.

Q. Then, calling it "The Davis Construction Company" (for want of a better name), do I understand as to this figure, for this 149,154 yards of earth excavation, as to which no price is given per yard, but only a lump sum for the cost—that you made that entry on the statement made by Mr. Reed to you?—A. Yes.

Q. And you did not examine the books of the Davis Construction Company?—A. No; I examined none of the books.

Q. The entry, "Company work, cost covered by pay-roll," applies to the earth excavation which I have just examined you about; and also to the item of "loose rock," which is carried out at $262,478.35. Did you yourself examine those pay-rolls?—A. No, sir; of course not.

Q. Then there are three entries following those which I have spoken of, under the head of "Extra work, rock excavation, clearing, water-hauling, &c., lumber for dump boards, &c.," the three items being $20,945, $20,898.75, $3,919.35. As to those items, is the source of your authority the same—information given by Mr. Reed?—A. Certainly.

Q. And no personal examination of pay-rolls or books?—A. No.

Q. Who is Mr. Reed?—A. He was superintendent of construction for the contractors.

Q. Is he now living?—A. I think he is, but I do not know.

Q. Have you any idea where these books are to be found which contain these entries?—A. No.

WITNESS'S SOURCES OF INFORMATION.

Q. The figures as to which I have been examining you contain the cost of grading of some 53 miles of road west of Ogden?—A. Yes.

Q. Do I understand you correctly, that the proportionate part of that grading charge for the 45 miles sold to the Central Pacific, between Ogden and Promontory Point, is carried in as the first item on the left-hand page of this statement, which is entered as "grading, $1,184,101.70"?—A. I suppose it is; I have not gone through the figures. In fact, I have no doubt that that is the proper cost and charge.

Q. Do I understand the other items entered on the left side of this statement, representing the masonry, bridging, track, engineering and contingencies, and amount to complete road, were different items which were grouped together in order to make up the bill to present to the Central Pacific?—A. Yes.

Q. From what source did you derive the item "masonry, $13,699.94"?—A. I suppose I obtained it from the contractor who did the work. I do not know who it was.

Q. Do you know whether it was obtained from an examination of any book at all?—A. I do not think that I examined the books.

Q. You merely took the statement?—A. I took the statements. I called for them from the different engineers and heads of departments.

Q. The heads of what departments?—A. The heads of their departments.

Q. That is, the Davis Construction Company?—A. Yes.

Q. Also distinguishing between the Davis people and the Union Pacific people?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, as to "bridging, $336,168.08," was that obtained in the same way?—A. The same; all of it.

BRIDGES EXAMINED BY ENGINEERS.

Q. Did you make any special examination of the amount of bridging that was done, in order to test the accuracy of this statement?—A. I did not myself, but my engineers, of course, examined all these matters as the road was built and completed.

Q. Did they examine for any purpose other than to ascertain that the bridges were properly built?—A. And as to the amount of material in them.

Q. Did they examine them for the purpose of ascertaining what would be the fair cost?—A. Probably not.

WHAT IS INCLUDED IN THE ITEM, "TRACK, MATERIAL, AND LAYING."

Q. This item of "track, material, and laying, $1,510,749.74," from what source did you derive that?—A. The same as all the rest.

Q. What does that item include, the rails?—A. Yes.

Q. And fish-plates and fastenings?—A. Yes.

Q. Does it include the ties?—A. I suppose it does; yes. It includes the track, material, and laying.

Q. Do you know the weight of the rail which was laid there?—A. Fifty-six pounds.

Q. Was it an iron rail?—A. Yes, sir. There were no steel rails in those days. It was American iron.

Q. Did you make any computation or examination for the purpose of examining this apparently large charge for 45 miles of track?—A. I have not since I have seen the paper.

Q. At what time did you?—A. I suppose I did when I made the statement of cost, but I cannot remember it.

Q. Do you remember whether you did or not?—A. No; that was 25 years ago.

Q. What proportion of the expenses included in the item would be covered by the rails?—A. I cannot tell without going into it and figuring upon it.

Q. All that it does include, as you can judge from the other charges, which cover all the rest of the work, is the track, the fish-plates, the washers, fastenings, and the ties?—A. And the laying—all the cost of laying the track, and the surfacing.

Q. It does not include any proportion of the road-bed?—A. No, sir; not the grading.

WHAT PROPORTION WOULD BE REPRESENTED BY THE RAILS.

Q. Can you not tell us, under the contract for the rails, the fixtures, fastenings, the ties, and the leveling of such portions as might be required for laying, what proportion would be represented by the rails?—A. Generally the track costs about one-third to one-half of the total cost of the road.

Q. But assuming that all your grading is done, and all that you have to do is to put the ties on, purchase the rails and fastenings, and lay the rails on, including the labor of preparing the bed for the ties, do you mean to say that the rails do not represent more than one-third of the cost of the whole work?—A. Of the whole cost of a road?

Q. No. Assuming the bed to be all prepared, and the items are the ties, the rails, and the laying.—A. The road-bed is a small part. For instance, no one could tell there, because he would not know what the freight upon those rails was. If I had the items by me I could tell. The freight on our rails out there as a general thing was as much as the cost of the rails, and the freight upon the ties was near what the ties cost us.

COST OF WORK IN WINTER EXTRAORDINARY.

Q. Do you not know what the ties cost?—A. I have not a detailed statement here now. I heard Mr. Huntington say yesterday that those that went in on the Wahsatch cost $1.75. He asked the man that was hauling them there. The ties for all that work were brought from the rear end in the winter. That work was mostly done in the winter and spring, and it cost double, and probably treble, what it would have cost if done in the summer. There was a piece of work that was done in the winter in Weber valley, and when the ground was covered with snow. I put the track laid on the road-bed there when it was solid ice, and I have seen the whole track, train, locomotive, and everything on it slide right off into the ditch at once. Therefore the cost of winter work was an extraordinary cost, on account of the time of the year that it was done.

Q. We understand from your statement that we may safely conclude that the cost was excessive and unusual, but what we desire to know is whether we can accept this estimate as coming from a person who officially examined the books, disclosing the actual payments, or whether the whole foundation for this estimate is that Mr. Reed made certain reports of figures to you. Of course the difficulty is as to the amount of reliance that can be placed upon it. So if you can give us any other source of information as to this large item for track it will lend force to your statement. As it is, it is simply information given by Mr. Reed.—A. I have no means of aiding you as to that.

Q. You have no means of making it any more reliable than it is in your testimony?—A. No; but I have no doubt that it is correct.

Q. You will perceive that the amount of this item alone, for track, material, and laying, is about $33,000 per mile?—A. Yes.

COST OF ROAD FROM PIEDMONT TO PROMONTORY $90,000 PER MILE, CASH.

Q. That is as much as you have estimated the entire cost of grading and building the road and everything else between Cheyenne and Omaha?—A. Yes. The grading is a small item in building roads. If I remember rightly, the road from Piedmont to the top of Promontory Mountain cost over $90,000 per mile in cash.

Q. Then these other items which you refer to in this paper are all based on this same information received by you either from Mr. Reed or from some other person in the employ of the Davis Construction Company?—A. Yes, sir; so far as 45 miles are concerned.

AMOUNT PAID BY CENTRAL PACIFIC TO UNION PACIFIC $2,698,620.

Q. Do you know what the amount was that was paid by the Central Pacific Company to the Union Pacific Company for this work?—A. I do not.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Mink, do you remember?

Mr. MINK. It was $2,698,620.

Q. Can you now answer the question from the information furnished you by Mr. Mink? Will you accept his statement?—A. Yes; $2,698,620.

WHY THE UNION PACIFIC ACCEPTED SO MUCH LESS THAN COST.

Q. Can you explain why the Union Pacific Company accepted a sum largely less than the statement which you handed us showing the actual cost?—A. I cannot. I know that there was a great contest over it; and we preferred to sell rather than they should build a road alongside of us.

Q. Can you inform us what was the cost per mile for this part of the road under the Davis contract?—A. The Davis contract was for $15,629,000 for 171 miles. This is the cost to the contractors. The cost to the railroad company was $23,431,768.10; that is $137,000 per mile to the railroad company. The cost to the contractors, as appears from the figures contained in the Wilson report, was about $90,000 per mile. The above figures are furnished by Comptroller Mink, and are taken from the figures contained in the Wilson report.

REFERENCE TO TEXT OF OAKES AMES CONTRACT AND DAVIS CONTRACT.

Commissioner ANDERSON. In this connection I call the attention of the Commission to the Oakes Ames contract, at page 759 of the Wilson report, and to the Davis contract, which embraces the part of the road now under examination, at page 768 of the report, the price fixed by the Davis contract being referred back to the stipulation of the Oakes Ames contract.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Those prices mentioned in the Oakes Ames contract are cash, and the actual cost to the company as expressed in mortgages and stock would necessarily vary from that.

HOW THE ESTIMATES COMPARE WITH COST IN NORMAL TIMES.

Q. In the estimate you have given of about $35,000 per mile as the cost from Omaha to the one hundredth meridian, and $50,000 per mile from the one hundredth meridian to Ogden, are those your estimates of the actual cost of the work as actually done, or would that have been the ordinary cost in normal times and under ordinary conditions?—A. The $35,000 estimate was a matter of judgment, which you asked for yesterday. I then had no figures with me. I found among my papers a rough estimate, which was made by myself, of the cost from the one hundredth meridian to Ogden, made some time before completion of road, and that is based upon prices being paid for work at the time, and was evidently made for the purpose of ascertaining about what the actual cost in cash would be under the then circumstances. But from Piedmont beyond, that part was built under extraordinary circumstances, and that estimate would not apply from Piedmont to Ogden; but from there east it would.

Q. From there east it contains sufficient margin to cover any special circumstances of weather or distance? or is it the labor actually required in the building of the road during that period of construction that makes the difference?—A. In making my estimate, I just took the quantity and the price paid and ascertained what amount that would make. I have the actual quantities before me in this paper.

COST FROM PIEDMONT TO OGDEN.

Q. Now, taking the work from Piedmont to Ogden, 110 miles, what, in your judgment, should be added to the estimate you have just made, in order to cover the peculiar difficulties which attended the construction as it really occurred?—A. When I was out there they were doing the work, and I thought that the actual cost under favorable circumstances for work done in seasonable time would have to be added three or four times; but I find that the actual cost for this work done in winter was only about double. Men who went out in the morning with overcoats on, and would have to work with overcoats on all day, were not able to do very large days' works.

Q. Is it your judgment that on the estimate made by you for that 110 miles, if doubled, this Commission can safely assume that the actual cost of construction did not exceed the estimate so doubled?—A. That would be my judgment, but you can ascertain the actual cost. I think my estimate is made with a view of covering the cost under the same circumstances as we had been doing the work.

PROBABLE COST OF UNION PACIFIC.

Q. Accepting, of course, your explanation that this is simply a basis of approximation, can you give that as your estimate of the probable actual cost of this road: the rate of $35,000 per mile for 247 miles from Omaha to the one hundredth meridian, which makes $8,645,000.

That would be $36,000,000 from the one hundredth meridian to Ogden; and to this amount there should be added for the 110 miles from Fremont to Ogden about $50,000 per mile (doubling your estimate for the 110 miles), making $5,500,000, and these three sums added together, namely $8,645,000, $36,000,000, $5,500,000, making $50,145,000, form your estimate of the probable cost of construction as it occurred?—A. Yes; if you have the distances and figures right.

AS TO MR. DEY'S ESTIMATES.

Q. Do you know anything about the estimates which have been prepared by Mr. Dey?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Did you hear from him what his estimates were, and did you hear that they differed from yours?—A. I do not know. Mr. Dey was on the road before these surveys were made upon this line. I do not remember receiving anything from him, but I used to hear from Mr. Dey often.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the circumstances that led to his resignation?—A. I have not, only what I have heard and seen since. I was not there; I was in the South then.

Q. You have no knowledge derived directly from him or from the officers of the company?—A. I have not, except what was said in conversation. Mr. Dey had been in an early day my own chief—a man that I respect very highly, and that was a matter that I never discussed much with him.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF SO LOW A FIGURE AS $19,000 PER MILE.

Q. Have you any knowledge of a section of the Union Pacific having been built by a person named Bushnell?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the actual construction of some portions of this work, under some contract, made as low as $19,000 per mile, exclusive of stations?—A. I have not.

AS TO ITEM OF $74,000 ENTERED AS PAID TO GENERAL DODGE FOR AIDING LEGISLATION.

Q. I desire to call your attention to a passage in the report of the Wilson committee, with which you are doubtless familiar, and ask you what explanation you desire to make with regard to it. Referring to a certain amount of money which the committee think should be reimbursed to the company, or proceedings taken to collect them, I find the following reference: "$126,000 were paid to C. S. Bushnell on the 1st of March, 1871, and denominated special legal expenses, which were disposed of as follows: First, to G. M. Dodge, for services in procuring the passage of the act of March 3, 1871, in relation to transportation by said company for the Government, $74,000." The other portions of the item do not contain your name, and I do not call your attention to them.—A. You will find my testimony upon that before the Hunton committee, and a clear explanation of it, much better than I can give now, because it was fresh in my mind then.

Q. We would prefer to have the explanation direct.—A. If you will give me the Hunton book I will read it to you.

Q. We have not got it here; have you got it? If you will hand it to us that will be an answer.—A. It is in their printed report. Mr. Bushnell's testimony also covers that fully.

Q. Will you read it just as it is there?

The witness read the following extract from Pub. Doc. Mis. 176, 44th Congress, first session, House of Representatives:

Q. In some investigation that has taken place in regard to this matter, was it not said that a sum of money, probably $125,000, had gone into your hands?—A. No; I think not; I think you have reference to Mr. Bushnell, probably.

Q. Mr. Bushnell, instead of you?—A. Yes, sir; you no doubt refer to the Wilson investigation. If you had the Wilson report here you could see what connection I had with that matter.

Q. But you can state it now?—A. I suppose you refer to a check for about $24,000 that was paid to me by Mr. Bushnell.

Q. Yes; state your connection with that.—A. That is all the connection I had with it. He paid me that amount of money.

Q. What for?—A. Upon a call of Union Pacific stock. I had a call upon him of Union Pacific stock, and that was the amount that was due from him.

Q. What do you mean by having a call upon him for that stock?—A. I bought the call on him of the stock at about twenty-three, I think, or something like that, and when the stock went up that was the difference.

The WITNESS. Then they asked me an explanation of what a put and call was.

Q. Is that all the explanation contained in the book from which you are reading?—A. That is about the substance of it. There were more questions asked me; but that is all in relation to this.

Q. Was the voucher which was prepared for this payment signed by you?—A. I do not know that it ever was.

DOES NOT KNOW WHETHER HE HAS SEEN VOUCHER OR NOT.

Q. Have you ever seen that voucher?—A. I do not know whether I have or not.

Q. Have you ever heard that the Union Pacific have in their possession a voucher which states on its face that this money was paid to you for services in procuring the passage of the act of March 3, 1871?—A. No; I have not.

Q. You never heard that?—A. I never heard it. I know that I was there for Mr. Bushnell on that service; and that is the way he paid me—by giving me a call on the stock. In fact I went there and obtained the passage of that bill.

Q. Then the agreement with regard to the call had some reference to the passage of the bill?—A. Yes; that was his inducement for me to go there.

Q. State what occurred between you and Mr. Bushnell at the time the call was given to you.—A. It is pretty hard to do that. I had already been obtaining from Congress a separate bridge bill, for building a bridge across the Missouri River in connection with the Union Pacific; but I failed in that, and when I was at home I received a dispatch from Mr. Bushnell, and also one from the president of the road, asking me to go to Washington and aid in this matter.

A "CALL" ON THE STOCK.

Q. That was Mr. Sidney Dillon?—A. No; Mr. Scott, I think, asked me if I would go to Washington and aid in the passage of that bill, in order to obtain bonds or something with which to build the bridge. Finally I went; and when I was there Mr. Bushnell, I suppose, wanted to pay me for my services. I told him that I could not stay there and work and give my services for anything of that kind; and then he gave me a call upon the stock, and I suppose that he paid my expenses besides.

Q. How many shares of stock did the call cover?—A. That is more than I can tell you; I do not remember.

Q. Was the call in writing?—A. I think it was; but Mr. Bushnell will probably remember that better than I do.

Q. Was it signed by Mr. Bushnell individually, or on behalf of the company?—A. It was by him individually. I do not know that the company had anything to do with it.

Q. What advantage would it be to Mr. Bushnell to get that act passed, personally?—A. I think he was a very heavy holder of the stock of the company, and was there representing a great many other holders, and it would be a great advantage to the stock of the company if this bill passed.

Q. Was he a director of the company at this time?—A. I think he was; but I believe that he had some contract in relation to the bridge bill which, if we got it through, the interest on that would be reduced very much, and it would be a great benefit to the company.

Q. Do you know if his bargain with you was made on behalf of the company, or on behalf of himself?—A. On behalf of himself, as I understood it; but still it might have been on behalf of the company. I do not know. He can answer as to that.

WHY THE CHARGE WAS MADE TO THE COMPANY.

Q. If made on behalf of himself, can you explain why the payment is charged to the company? If the contract with you was made on behalf of Mr. Bushnell individually, can you explain why the amount paid to you was charged to the company?—A. I think I can. Mr. Bushnell owed me this money and told me that there was a certain amount of money due him from the company; and when they paid him he paid me that check for my part of it.

Q. That would not explain why he should charge the amount paid to you to the company?—A. That he can explain; I cannot explain those things.

Q. Why did you not call the stock?—A. I had rather take the difference. I did not care to pay for the stock.

WHAT IS A "CALL"?

Q. For the benefit of the Commission please explain what a call is?—A. You had better get some "put and call" broker to do that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I will state: A call is a contract under which the party giving the call agrees that the party to whom the call is given shall have the right to demand from him a delivery of the stock, at a specified figure, at any time during the period limited by the call.

SERVICES OF WITNESS AT WASHINGTON.

Q. What services did you render with regard to the passage of this bill? How long were you at Washington, and how extensively did you work?—A. I was there quite a time—from the time the bill was presented until it was passed.

Q. Was it a month?—A. Yes; I think more. I think it was two months; but I cannot tell that exactly. I gave my attention right to it. I understood the matter thoroughly—the necessity of it, and everything else about it; and there was no reason why the bill should not be passed. It was a proper bill to pass; and it enabled us to build the Missouri River bridge.

Q. Did you remain at Washington continuously all the time?—A. I think I did; all the time.

Q. How often do you suppose you appeared before the committee?—A. I cannot tell. I went before them several times, and I went to see nearly every member of the House and every member of the Senate.

Q. Were you compelled to employ any assistance to get the facts?—A. No; I don't think I did employ any one. I might have employed attorneys.

Q. This payment, then, covered your own individual services?—A. My own individual assistance; it was for my own benefit.

INFLUENCING LEGISLATORS.

Q. Was any money used by you for the purpose of influencing any member of the committee, or any legislator, in procuring the passage of this bill?—A. Certainly not. I have been to Washington ever since I have been connected with the Union Pacific Railroad; I have been called there upon nearly every measure; and I never saw the necessity of such a thing, and I do not think a man would dare to do it; I would not. There was no necessity for such a thing.

AS TO SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC RAILROAD.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. You were at one time a director of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad?—A. I think I was at one time, but I could not state positively unless you have the data. I have been a director of so many roads that I cannot tell; I think I was.

Q. Were you there actively connected with the road?—A. No; I don't think I ever attended the meetings; it is possible I may have done so.

Q. Do you know who built that road?—A. John I. Blair built it, I think.

Q. Our examination of the books failed to disclose that John I. Blair built the road.—A. Then I am mistaken. I only know it from the fact that he built a good many roads through Iowa. I have no knowledge, only the supposition that I have in my own mind.

Q. We fail to find any history of its construction, or any paper or book in relation to its construction, and we fail to ascertain what construction company, or what individual or individuals, built the road?—A. I think if I had anything to do with it, it was after it was built and completed. I know that I had nothing to do with it when it was being constructed.

Q. As a director did you take any active part in the management of the property?—A. Not at all.

Q. Did you ever attend any meetings of the board?—A. I would not like to say that I did not or that I did. I do not remember. I do not even know why I was made a director there.

Q. You practically know nothing about the construction of the road nor its operation?—A. I know nothing about it.

CHARACTER OF THE COUNTRY.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What do you know about the country through which it passes?—A. It is a road running down through the Missouri Valley, across to Fremont. It is a light country from Sioux City to Omaha, and a heavy country from the Missouri to Fremont.

Q. What is the ability of the country now to sustain that road by its local traffic?—A. That is a very serious question—there is so much serious competition there. You will have to go to some operator to ascertain that. It would be a mere matter of judgment. I think that the competition there is very strong.

Q. Has the road an advantage over its competitors by reason of its location along the Missouri bottom?—A. It is a light grade there along the Missouri bottom, and they can probably haul material cheaper than a road crossing the country.

Q. Has not the population been centered about Sioux City longer than about the competing line?—A. My recollection of that country is that the Missouri Valley is about the first settled, but that the country back has heavier settlements than the Missouri Valley.

Q. Are you familiar with the products, and the population through which the Sioux City road passes?—A. Yes; I have lived in that country ever since 1853.

Q. Have you been there lately?—A. I go there about once a year.

LOCAL TRAFFIC.

Q. What in your judgment is the ability of the productions of that country, and the population, to sustain the road by local traffic?—A. Do you mean just to pay operating expenses?

Q. I mean to support the road by its local traffic, as distinguished from through traffic?—A. I should think the local traffic would pay the operating expenses of the road.

Q. What advantages has it as a line in connection with the through lines?—A. I believe the line runs in connection with the Northwestern road; and of course there is a part of that road that has the same advantage as any other through line.

CONNECTIONS WITH THROUGH LINES.

Q. What advantage does it give to a through line by its connection?—A. It allows the Northwestern to reach Sioux City in that way. It reaches it also in two other ways. I do not think there is much advantage to it crossing Iowa; but they have used it to cross Nebraska, and to connect with the Freemont and Elkhorn Valley road.

Q. What other through line is connected with it?—A. I don't know any except the Northwestern.

Q. Does the Illinois Central cross it at any point?—A. No; the Illinois Central connects with it at Sioux City.

Q. Has the Northwestern, in your judgment, an advantage over the Illinois Central in having the possession of the Sioux City road, in getting into Sioux City?—A. No, I do not think it has; the Illinois Central runs direct to Sioux City.

Q. Has the Northwestern Railway in the possession of the Sioux City an advantage over the Illinois Central in having possession of the Sioux City and through lines and the country through which they pass?—A. I should say not. I should say that they were about on equal terms.

Q. So there can be no strife between the Illinois Central and the Northwestern for the possession of the Sioux City road in the event of its being an independent road?—A. I don't see where there could be say, because the Illinois Central comes into Sioux City from the north, and the Sioux City road from the south.

Q. Would the possession of the Sioux City then be an advantage to the Illinois Central?—A. I cannot see where it would be an advantage to them, unless they have some objective point to the south and west. The Illinois Central always has run into Sioux City on a leased road.

FINANCIAL STANDING OF SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC ROAD.

Q. What, in your judgment, is the capacity of the Sioux City road to pay the Government debt?—A. That is a matter that I know very little about. I would want to see its earnings, which I have never seen independently. I know that in its early days it earned very little money.

Q. I understand you to say that the Sioux City through local traffic would pay operating expenses?—A. That is a mere guess.

Q. With that local traffic in view, what, in your judgment, would be the ability of the Sioux City road to settle with the Government? I am asking for your opinion.—A. I believe that the Sioux City has all that it can do to pay interest on the first mortgage from its earnings. That would be my idea; but it is mere guesswork of mine, because I have never given any thought to it.

DEBT OF THE UNION PACIFIC.

Q. Have you given any thought to the subject of the settlement of the debt of the Union Pacific?—A. Yes; I made a proposition once to the Government to settle it, and have given it a great deal of thought.

Q. What proposition did you make?—A. As soon as the Union Pacific got what we call upon its feet, so that we saw it could take care of itself, the company, of course, began to think about the debt. They supposed that they would not be called upon to pay the debt, or any interest upon it, when the road was built.

Q. Why do you say that the road would never be called upon for that?—A. If you had ever traveled through that country, as I did, before the road was built you would not think there was anything in it to pay. The men who knew the country had no idea, in those days, that it would be possible to make a road pay there. Even when I had completed this road, and made estimates to the Union Pacific Railway Company that in five years it would earn $5,000 per mile, they thought that I was crazy. That was the first estimate that ever was made as to its earnings; but I worked its earnings up to $5,000 per mile in five years. I do not think there was anybody who would sustain me in that estimate at that time; but we went on, and in ten years earned a great deal more. It then seemed that the country west of the Missouri would never be productive, because of the lack of water. Then came a change of climate and a development of the country, so that people could go into that country and settle; and that has enabled this company to earn the money to pay its interest and dividends upon its stock. If the Government had let us alone, and let us go on and use our credit, and pay the debt when we wanted to, we would have been free from all this trouble. We could have had five, six, or seven thousand miles of branches attached to it as feeders. Take the branches away from the Union Pacific road to-day and it could not pay anything.

PLANS OF SETTLEMENT APPROVED BY SECRETARY BRISTOW AND PRESIDENT GRANT.

Q. Now, go back to your proposition about the payment of the debt, and state what that was?—A. When Mr. Gould came into the road he commenced giving it a good deal of consideration; and we formulated a plan—two plans; it is impossible for me to state exactly what they were, but I can give the substance. One was a plan in which we calculated the then present value of the debt, and agreed to make a payment that would pay that debt off in a certain length of time. Another plan was one by which we agreed to pay so much per year that should be made a sinking fund, and increase upon the gross earnings. I went to Washington with the propositions, and went before the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Bristow, and called his attention to it; I got him to consider it; he took it up and made some changes in it; it was then taken before the Cabinet; it was approved; I went with it before the President, General Grant, and he approved it; and they wrote their messages, and were about to present them to Congress, when it commenced getting into the papers. There was an immense short interest in Union Pacific stock here; and they sent representatives to Washington who went to General Grant and made him believe that this proposition of the company was for the purpose of booming the stock, and that laid the plan by. General Grant has told me a great many times since that he regretted very much that he did not put the matter before Congress and settle the thing then. The proposition that we made then would, I think, have paid the debt off within twenty years after it was due.

Q. In what year was that?—A. That was in 1874 or 1875. It was when Mr. Bristow was Secretary of the Treasury.

Q. Were the propositions made in writing—A. Yes; everything was in writing.

Q. Were they printed at the time?—A. I do not think they were. I have been unable to find, although I have looked everywhere, but have not found a copy of them. Of course if Secretary Bristow is disposed to testify he can tell better than I can about it.

Q. Do you know whether copies are on file in the Treasury Department?—A. I do not. I suppose they are, though, because it was a matter of long calculation and discussion, and it was given a great deal of consideration.

PRESENT DIFFICULTIES OF THE UNION PACIFIC.

Q. What advantage, if any, has an immediate settlement with the Government by the road, based upon the commutation allowance, over an extension through a series of years to maturity, and leaving the present arrangement unchanged until maturity?—A. The difficulty with the Union Pacific road to-day is that it is tied, hand and foot. It cannot defend itself. The law that I think was put upon us in 1873 was made for the purpose of destroying the Union Pacific. If we go outside to defend ourselves we must do it indirectly. Whereas if we were allowed to use our credit to defend our territory, and to take care of it, the Union Pacific Railroad property would be one of the best properties in the United States. But it is being destroyed just by the fact that we are tied hand and foot. We are hauled up in Washington, and everywhere else. Everything we do is criticized. It seems that everything we ever did, from the time we started until we got the road built, is treated with suspicion. It is thought that there is something wrong in it. I have been connected with the road, and with every administration of it, and I have seen its best men fail; and I have never yet seen anybody connected with that railroad who did not give his best effort, as he saw it, for the benefit of the property, and for the benefit of the Government. I want to say here that the Government has little interest in the matter while we built the road. Even the reports which we sent to the Government were hardly considered. When first called upon by Congress the Secretary of the Interior snubbed me by saying that Congress did not know by what right our reports happened to come there. When we needed help from them to take care of the property, they did not pay much attention to us; but as soon as we got the road up so that it appeared to be a success, we were attacked constantly.

ADVANTAGE OF AN IMMEDIATE SETTLEMENT.

Q. I repeat my question. What would be the advantage of an immediate settlement by the taking possession through purchase for cash or otherwise, of the roads by the company, and separating them from the Government, over an extension based upon annual payments?—A. If I get your idea, you mean an immediate payment to-day, so as to leave the company free. There may not be so much advantage in that as there would be in making the settlement by time, if you will relieve us and release us from all conditions except taking care of the property and paying our debts. You ask what is the difference between a settlement to-day and a settlement by payments from time to time. Is that your idea?

ADVANTAGE OF FREEDOM FROM GOVERNMENTAL SUPERVISION.

Q. Yes. I ask what are the advantages to the Government in divorcing the roads from the Government, and leaving the roads to look after themselves—the roads paying the Government its debt, and taking possession, over an extension of the present relation of the road with the Government?—A. It would be a great benefit to the company, of course, if they were free from Government supervision, and were allowed to carry on their business in the best way, and to go on and build branches. It would be a great benefit to the property.

Q. When you made your proposition to the Government, what time did you give for the extension?—A. That is a matter it is impossible for me to state. In one way the payments ran until the sinking fund met the debt. When that would be, I forget. In the other way, it was by the payment of so much money, increased from time to time; but I think the time was not stated in that proposition.

ADVANTAGE OF PAYMENT BY SPECIFIED SUM OVER A PER CENTAGE OF NET EARNINGS.

Q. What advantage has a specified sum paid per annum in an extension system over a percentage of net earnings?—A. Net earnings, as you know, are an uncertain quantity. Net earnings are dependent upon what you obtain, your rate per passenger, and per ton per mile.

Q. Has the plan of a specified sum an advantage over a percentage?—A. I think a specified sum is much better, because we would know then exactly what the company would have to do. But I do not want to speak in relation to that matter. The company can speak for itself on that point.

ABILITY OF UNION PACIFIC TO MEET DEBT.

Q. What, in your judgment, is the ability of the Union Pacific to pay the debt?—A. There is no question as to its ability, if you give us full control of the property and give us time. Let us pay this debt the same as we would any debt, by either selling a low-priced bond or fixing it at something that we could meet. If this road was independent of the Government they could issue new bonds the same as all roads do under a system of interest that could be met.

JUNCTION OF SIOUX CITY AND UNION PACIFIC.

Q. How far is the southern point of the Sioux City road from the Union Pacific road—the track is what distance?—A. It is at Fremont—just at Fremont.

Q. How many miles is that from the main line of the Union Pacific?—A. It is right at the main line. The Sioux City and the Union Pacific join at Fremont.

Q. Is that the original main line of the Union Pacific?—A. The Sioux City road runs right across from Fremont, on the Union Pacific, and goes to Sioux City.

Q. Who has control of the road between the main line of the Union Pacific and the junction at the Valley?—A. I do not know, but I suppose the Northwestern Company. I have no knowledge of those matters.

Q. Are you familiar with that country?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the distance?—A. I suppose about 30 miles.

OBJECT OF CONSTRUCTING SIOUX CITY ROAD.

Q. Was the purpose of the construction of the Sioux City to give an outlet to the Northwestern in Iowa down to the main line of the Union Pacific, and from the Union Pacific to the West?—A. The charter shows that. I suppose that it was. I paid very little attention to those matters. The idea, as I understood it, in the scheme was to give an outlet in Kansas City and Saint Joseph, and another at Council Bluffs, and another at Sioux City.

Q. Were you familiar with the construction of the Sioux City at the time you were connected with the Union Pacific?—A. I knew of its construction. I was not over its line.

THE CONTROL OF THE SHORT LINE.

Q. Can you give the Commission the reason for the omission or failure to connect with the Sioux City by which it would be under the immediate control and in direct connection with the Union Pacific?—A. They did build a road to Fremont, to a connection with Union Pacific, did they not?

Q. No; there is a leased line, under the control of another company, between the main line and Fremont. The Sioux City seems to have terminated within 25 miles of the Union Pacific and given the short line to the control of a stranger?—A. If I ever knew that fact I have forgotten it.

THE BRANCH SYSTEM.

By Mr. JOHN F. DILLON:

Q. You have already expressed an opinion that what is termed the branch system of the Union Pacific is essential to its prosperity?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On what is that view based?—A. Branches would develop and control the territory along the line of the road and bring business to the main line, by which we get a longer haul upon it. If we had not developed that country, and some other road had come in and built these branches, we would only have the business contributory to our road along the main line. The efforts of all railroads is to obtain control of as much territory as they can, and especially the farther west they go, so as to get longer hauls on the main line.

Q. Is that the case with all competitors of the Union Pacific?—A. It is.

COMPARATIVE COST OF CONSTRUCTION.

Q. Among the subjects of inquiry by this Commission is this: To ascertain the comparative cost of the construction of the road, as compared with what it would have cost with the prices of labor and commodities prevailing five years preceding and five years after the completion of the road. How extensively have you been engaged in building railroads?—A. I have built railroads, or have been connected with building railroads, ever since I was nineteen years old.

Q. The act of Congress allowed the company, I think, until the 1st of July, 1875, to complete this road. Suppose they had taken that time, what would have been the relative cost of construction as compared with the actual cost at the time and under the circumstances under which the roads were built?

Commissioner ANDERSON. The answer to that question can hardly be valuable, because you do not say when they commenced to build the road. If they commenced in 1867 and ended in 1875 it would depend upon the percentage of work done in each of those years.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I want to give it within five years—how much less it would have cost if they had taken until 1875?

Commissioner ANDERSON. It seems difficult to answer that unless he knows how large a percentage of the work was delayed.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. He can give his best judgment.

The WITNESS. If we had taken the whole time from 1866 to 1875 to build the road it probably could have been built for half what it was built.

Q. How much more would it have cost, in your judgment, to have completed the work in 1869 than to have taken five years beyond that time in which to complete it?—A. That is a hard question to answer. I built railroads from 1870 to 1875 and I know about what railroads cost then. I suppose that it cost 33½ to 50 per cent. more.

WHY THE WORK WAS PUSHED.

Q. Do you know why the work of completion was pushed with such rapidity and at such great cost?—A. It was the demand of the Government and the demand of the country.

Q. Did you have any interviews with any of the officers of the Government about it?—A. Yes; with the President, and with different members of the cabinet, and every one was pressing us. It was desired apparently all over the country. We all felt the necessity of getting the road built.

CONVERSATION WITH PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Q. Did you have any conversation with President Lincoln on the subject at any time?—A. At the commencement of the work I did. When I first made my surveys I met Mr. Lincoln in Council Bluffs, in 1856 or 1857. He took great interest in them and obtained all the information he could. He owned some property in that town and came there to see it, and I happened to come in from the mountains and met him, and he took great interest in the matter. I was a young man, and of course he got from me all that I knew. In 1863, when I was at Corinth, Miss., I received a dispatch from General Grant, directing me to proceed to Washington, as the President wished to see me. I went there, and he again took up this question of the building of the Pacific roads, having known that I had been connected with it up to that time. He expressed a great desire to have it built. I thought that the Government ought to build it. He seemed to think differently, but he said that the Government was ready to do almost anything that would assure its completion. He said he looked upon it as a necessity. He went through the subject with me, in relation to where the initial points of the road should be. In fact, he said that the Government would do whatever was necessary to insure the people taking hold and building the road.

THE OREGON BRANCH.

Q. Did you make any surveys at any time with reference to what was termed the Oregon Branch?—A. I made the original surveys, and I suppose it was from my recommendation that the company took it up.

Q. What was the general nature of that Oregon line?—A. The direction was northwest. It gave us an outlet on the Pacific Ocean at the mouth of the Columbia River.

Q. How far, in a general way, was it coincident with the present line—the Oregon Short Line to Oregon? Were the two lines in the same general direction?—A. No. The Oregon Short Line goes to the northwest, and really comes in and joins the Union Pacific a very short distance from the western terminus of the Union Pacific. Everything that goes up over the Oregon Short Line the Union Pacific gets the haul upon nearly its entire length.

Q. What I ask is, what point were you seeking to reach, acting for the Union Pacific, when you made your surveys?—A. I meant to reach tide water at Portland.

SEEKING AN OUTLET TO THE PACIFIC OCEAN.

Q. What was the object of the company in seeking that connection?—A. The object was to give it an independent outlet to the Pacific Ocean, for the purpose of obtaining the trade from Oregon and Washington Territory, which, we believed, would have a very large trade for us and help maintain and build up our main line.

Q. The company has recently obtained a lease of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company. Did you investigate that matter, and did it have the approval of your judgment?—A. I did. I went out there before the lease was made, I think last November, and made a careful examination of the line and of the country; and I put myself on record as very strongly in favor of obtaining the right of traffic over it by lease, or by some other method, by which there would be no possibility of our losing our right over that road to the Pacific.

THE WITNESS ALWAYS WILLING TO TESTIFY.

Q. There have been some statements made in the public press as to a disinclination on your part, or an attempt even, to evade the service of the process of this Commission to appear and testify. Have you anything to say as to that?—A. I would like to ask the Commission upon what that statement was based. Certainly I have never shown any indisposition to come here. A note to me at my office at any time, or to the president, or to any officer of the Union Pacific Railway, would have brought me. I never knew that anybody had any difficulty in finding me. I saw a statement in the papers that I had been followed 2,200 miles in order to get me here.

The CHAIRMAN. You are mistaken about that. We first sent a note to General Dodge, and in addition to that sent a subpœna, as to any other witness. That was all.

AS TO NEWSPAPER REPORTS.

The WITNESS. Here is the statement made in a Philadelphia paper: "Home from California. Work of the Pacific Railroad Commission. Governor Pattison talks of the inquiry in San Francisco. A subpœna for an evasive witness." Then follows: "A clever capture of Dodge."

Commissioner ANDERSON. That is a Philadelphia paper, is it not?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. I would like to read this:

One of the principal witnesses whom the Commission will examine on September 11, when it shall meet in New York, will be General Grenville M. Dodge. The latter has been evading the service of a subpœna ever since the appointment of the Commission. He is considered a very important witness, as he is well acquainted with the secret history of the Pacific roads. He had charge of the construction of the Union Pacific Railway, and was the chief engineer of that enterprise. He is also president of the Construction Company of the Fort Worth and Denver Railroad, a director of the company, and president of the Saint Louis, Des Moines and Northern Railway. The sergeant-at-arms of the Commission chased General Dodge 2,200 miles over the country for the purpose of serving a subpœna on him to appear before the Commission, but the wily general always succeeded in giving his pursuer the slip. Governor Pattison appointed John J. Curley, of the Record, a special sergeant-at-arms for the purpose of serving the subpœna. The necessary documents arrived from San Francisco on Monday night. Mr. Curley proceeded to New York on Tuesday morning, and after four hours hard work finally located General Dodge at No. 1 Broadway, the big Washington building, which contains 330 offices. The general's name not appearing on the directory of the building, it required diligent inquiry to locate him in an office on the eighth floor. Admission to his presence was impossible, but a three hours' wait rewarded Mr. Curley with a glimpse of General Dodge as he emerged from one of the four elevators in the building and endeavored to lose his identity in the throng on Broadway. He was soon overtaken, however, and accepted service of the subpœna in the middle of Broadway.

THE CHAIRMAN HAS NOT BEEN INTERVIEWED.

The CHAIRMAN. I will say that at no time during my association with this Commission have I ever given expression to any newspaper upon any question whatever in connection with it. I have never submitted to an interview upon any subject at any time; furthermore, I did not know that you had been subpœnaed until some time subsequent to your subpœna; furthermore, while at Council Bluffs we simply addressed a letter to you, hoping to find you at Omaha, and then on the failure of that notice, and in order to carry out what we believed to be our duty under the law, we sent a subpœna by the sergeant-at-arms. That is all that the Commission has done in connection with the service of a writ upon you. As to your efforts to evade the subpœna, I was not aware of any such allegation, and did not know anything at all about it, and have no knowledge now upon the subject.

The WITNESS. This purports to be an interview with you, Mr. Chairman, and I supposed that it stated the facts. Did you address a letter to me at my home in Council Bluffs?

The CHAIRMAN. I sent Mr. Walsh, the sergeant-at-arms, over.

The WITNESS. If a letter had been addressed to me it would have reached me. I was here in New York until the 27th of April, then went West with Mr. Adams, stopped at Denver, attended public meetings at Pueblo, rode across the country to Fort Worth, Tex., and came back here. Mr. Adams, when he got here, told me that he had heard that you were going to examine me here; and I supposed that when you wanted me you would send for me. I saw this article, and there was a column in the New York papers also about it. I do not like to be placed in such a position.

The CHAIRMAN. The Commission is not responsible for that in any way. Have you any further suggestions to make to the Commission?

The WITNESS. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any further information to give?

The WITNESS. I have given all that I know of. I shall be glad to give you anything that you ask me for.

Q. Were you connected with the Union Pacific during the presidency of Mr. Scott?—A. Yes.

WITNESS WAS A DIRECTOR.

Q. Were you a member of the board?—A. Yes, sir; I was a member of the board for a long time, I think. I believe that I was a member of the board all the time, except one or two years, when Horace F. Clark was president.

Q. Do you recall the compensation paid to Mr. Scott as president of the Union Pacific during that time?—A. No; I do not. I was in Texas and did not attend the meetings of the board.

Q. Have you any knowledge upon the subject of what sums of money were paid to him for assuming the presidency of the Union Pacific?—A. I have not.

HOSTILE INDIANS AN ELEMENT OF COST.

I would like to say that there is one element of cost in building the Union Pacific Railroad not yet stated. The road from Loup Fork to Green River had to be surveyed and constructed when the Indians virtually had possession of that country, and were at war. A great deal of stock was taken from the contractors, and numbers of their men were killed. In surveying the line not a mile could be run except under the protection of troops or armed men, and the chiefs of four of my parties were killed while engaged in the performance of their duties in the field. While the Government aided us in every way possible, furnishing military escorts and trying to protect us to the best of their ability, it was impossible to give complete protection to men stretched out for hundreds of miles grading, cutting ties, laying track, and everything connected with the construction of the road. I have myself stood at the end of the track and seen the Indians swoop down and drive off hundreds of head of stock near the graders, and get away with them before they could be intercepted, as the cavalry along our line in those days was limited in numbers. When the graders would go out to work each day they would have to carry their muskets and stack them upon the dump or in the cut, ready for use at any moment. I remember once or twice, when I had been out with the Government commissioners examining the road, the Indians cut our trains off by burning bridges ahead of us. This was a continual source of anxiety, cost, and trouble during the entire construction of the road to Green River, and it was a percentage of cost that could not be estimated, because no person would do work as cheaply where he had to risk his scalp as he would in a country free from such troubles, like Iowa and Illinois.

THE UNION PACIFIC CAN PAY IF IT GETS AN EXTENSION.

I wish also to say, from my knowledge of the Union Pacific road and its capabilities, that there is no question in my mind but what if the Government will give the company an opportunity by allowing it time, or allowing it to issue a bond of low rate of interest to meet the Government debt, they can pay it and make the property one of the best railroad properties in the United States. They must immediately repeal the law of 1873 to enable the company to use its credit with which to build branches to defend the main line, in which the Government has so much interest. The Government, in my opinion, should allow the company to invest the amount of the sinking fund at this time in its hands in building branches to the road, taking in lieu of the sinking fund either the first mortgage upon the branch, or a bond of the Union Pacific Railway upon the branch. There is no question but that the Union Pacific could pay the interest upon this bond, thus increasing the sinking fund itself much more rapidly than it is increasing now. I think that the branches already built (which we have had to build indirectly) have been the salvation of the main line of the Union Pacific Railway. Without those branches I do not believe it to-day would be able to earn its interest, much less pay anything to the Government. I remember distinctly that it was Mr. Lincoln's idea that the saving to the Government by the building of the road would compensate for any aid the Government might give it. I also remember that in 1865–'66, when I made the Indian campaigns in this country, where the transportation in these campaigns from the Arkansas River to the Yellowstone was said to have cost over $12,000,000, had the Union Pacific been in existence it need not have exceeded $1,000,000 to subdue those Indians. In fact, by the completion of the road, the Indian troubles were virtually settled.

THE COMPANY'S EARNINGS ENCOURAGING.

There has been a wide-spread belief throughout the country that the Union Pacific Railway Company was not disposed to pay the Government, or pay its interest, but that is not a fact. From the time the railway company was able to make any payment they sought a settlement with the Government. If the settlement which was proposed by the company when Mr. Gould was president, and which was fully agreed upon by the President and Cabinet, had been carried out at least one-half of the Government debt to-day would have been wiped out; for the earnings since that time have shown that it was amply able to make the payments then proposed.

STOCK-JOBBING OPERATIONS INTERFERE.

The Government was then frightened out of a settlement by a mere stock-jobbing operation in Wall street; and my experience is that in every attempt that has been made since to settle with the Government we have been defeated by just such operations as defeated us then. The desires and advances and efforts of the company have invariably been laid aside upon the strength of any report or any lie that could be started against us through the press, or any other way, to help a stock operation. It is the Government and Congress that are to blame to-day for the Union Pacific Railway Company not having paid or provided for the payment of the Government debt long before it or the interest was due.

GRENVILLE M. DODGE.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Friday, September 23, 1887.

JOHN M. THURSTON, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. At Omaha.

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY OF UNION PACIFIC—HIS DUTIES.

Q. Are you connected in any way with the Union Pacific Railway Company?—A. Since the 1st of July, I think, 1877, I have been the assistant attorney of the Union Pacific Railway for the State of Nebraska.

Q. What were your duties as assistant attorney?—A. My duties have been confined almost wholly to the actual trial of litigated cases, mostly in the United States circuit court for the district of Nebraska, and in the State courts of that State, and in a general way having under my charge the interests of the Union Pacific Railway Company in the legislature of the State. My employment by the Union Pacific Railway Company was subject to the condition that I was only to devote such time as they needed to their service, and I was permitted to continue the practice of law upon my own account.

Q. Who was the principal solicitor of the company?—A. Mr. A. J. Poppleton.

Q. Were you subject to his orders?—A. Within the line of duty which I have stated, I was.

COMPENSATION.

Q. How were you compensated, by special case or by a salary?—A. My first engagement was made with the then general superintendent, afterwards called the general manager, S. H. H. Clark, who arranged with me the terms of my employment and proposed to pay me a salary at the commencement of $3,000 per annum. The idea was that if I proved efficient and matters were satisfactory my salary would be increased. On making the actual arrangement with Mr. Poppleton I discovered that Judge Wakely, who then held the position which I was to assume, under his arrangement with the Union Pacific Company was entitled to three months' notice before terminating his contract with them. Mr. Poppleton for that reason paid me one-half salary for three months, so that my real salary commenced three months after my employment.

VOUCHERS.

Q. Did you render vouchers for your salary and for the expenditures which you made from time to time?—A. I did.

Q. Were the vouchers subject to the approval of Judge Poppleton?—A. A part of them. The vouchers for my salary, as arranged with Mr.

Poppleton, were subject to his approval. Some time early in the year (I cannot tell without referring to the vouchers, which I saw and looked over on Tuesday for the first time), Mr. S. H. H. Clark made me a voucher for $500.

INCREASE OF SALARY.

Q. What year was that?—A. I should judge it was very early in 1879. I had called Mr. Clark's attention to the fact that he had promised me an increase in salary. He then said that he was not prepared to make a regular increase, but he made me a voucher for $500, which was in addition to my then regular salary. In December, 1879, if I am not mistaken about the date, Mr. Clark, the general manager, wrote me a letter in answer to my request for an increase in salary, which letter I filed with Mr. J. W. Gannett, the auditor of the Union Pacific Railway Company, in which letter he stated that he had considered my request for an increase of salary, and that in response to it he would make me a voucher on the 31st of December for $1,000, which was to be an addition to my salary for the then current year; that from the 1st of January following my salary should be $5,000 per year, but that for reasons personal to himself he preferred that the additional $2,000 should be carried by separate vouchers, subject to his own approval. So that for the year 1879 I received in addition to my first stated salary a voucher, early in the year, for $500, a voucher on the 31st of December for $1,000, making my salary for 1879 $4,500. From that time on I drew my salary under two systems of vouchers; one at the rate of $3,000 per year, subject to Mr. Poppleton's approval, and the other for $2,000 per year, subject to Mr. S. H. H. Clark's approval.

ATTENDED THE LEGISLATURE OF NEBRASKA.

Q. When did you first attend the legislature of Nebraska in reference to the company?—A. I attended the legislature for the Union Pacific Railway Company in a certain instance, and for a special purpose, before my regular employment by them, at the session of 1879, if my memory serves me as to the date. I attended there on the special employment of Mr. Clark, and went to Lincoln, taking with me the draft of a resolution prepared by Mr. Poppleton, which it was desired to have passed, if possible, by the two houses of the legislature. That resolution was a resolution directed to the Congress of the United States, concerning bill, commonly known as the Crounse prorate bill, which was being urged by the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company, for the purpose of compelling the Union Pacific to prorate with it at points of connection; that is to say, to take its business at a prorate, for the distance passed over, of the entire sum charged for the whole distance. This resolution was a resolution drawn somewhat in this general way, asking Congress to pass a general prorate bill compelling all railroads to prorate with each other, and asking it to oppose any special prorate bills in the interest of any one company, or directed solely against any one company. That resolution was introduced into both houses of the Nebraska legislature one morning and was passed by a unanimous vote, and, I think, perhaps was a sort of surprise, as I think but very few people in the legislature knew what they were passing. After its passage the Burlington road concentrated a large number of people at Lincoln for the purpose of securing a reconsideration. I had had this resolution signed by the officers of the two houses, and telegraphed to Washington, within fifteen minutes after its introduction, as passed by the unanimous vote of both houses. Then they attempted for the balance of the session to reconsider it. I stayed there to do what I could to prevent a reconsideration. For that service I was paid whatever I charged for it; I forget how much.

SPECIAL SERVICE.

Q. In addition to the compensation allowed you regularly by the company, you were paid an additional compensation, and your expenses during the year 1879 at the session you refer to?—A. This was in 1877. This was before my employment as an attorney of the Union Pacific. I was employed for this special purpose, and up to that time I had had no connection with the Union Pacific Railway Company.

Q. How long during the session of 1877 did you remain at Lincoln in this special service?—A. My judgment is that I was there during the last two weeks of the session.

Q. Who assisted you at the time?—A. No one.

Q. Had you present with you any employés of the company detailed to assist you at that time?—A. I had not.

METHODS USED TO INFLUENCE LEGISLATION.

Q. What effort did you make to prevent the passage of the resolution reconsidering the original resolution?—A. I interviewed as many of the members of both houses as it was possible to see, laid the matter before them, and stated the reasons which the Union Pacific Company urged against the passage of the Crounse pro-rata bill in Congress. I also appeared before the assembled committees of the two houses, and made an oral argument to the same effect.

Q. Did you use any other measures?—A. I did not.

SERVICES AS TO MERRICK COUNTY BONDS.

Q. Where did you meet the members of the legislature?—A. I met the members of the legislature at whatever place I could see them most conveniently. For the most part I saw them at their seats on the floor of the house, or at the hotels. Perhaps there is one matter that I overlooked here in replying to your question asking me when I was first employed by the Union Pacific Company. I was employed on a special service as far back, I should say, as 1875. I was sent for by Mr. Poppleton, and was employed to represent the Union Pacific Railway Company in a series of joint discussions in Merrick County, Nebraska, in which county the Burlington road, under the name of one of its organizations, was attempting to carry bonds. I went through that county and participated in a series of joint discussions with an attorney from Lincoln representing the Burlington road. The bonds were defeated. I charged compensation for that; I have forgotten the amount.

Q. Were the discussions at public meetings?—A. Yes; joint discussions.

Q. What charge did you make to the Union Pacific Company for your services?—A. I do not recollect. I think I charged them something like twenty or thirty dollars a day for the time actually employed.

Q. Were there any legal services rendered during your employment during that time?—A. Only as I have stated.

Q. By public speeches?—A. Yes.

Q. I hand you a voucher reading:

1875, AUGUST 9TH.

Union Pacific Railway Company to John M. Thurston, Omaha, Nebr., Dr.

For professional services in opposing issue of bonds of Midland Pacific Railroad Company in Merrick County, by public speeches, and cash paid expenses..... $235

I ask you if this is the bill referred to in the statement you have already made?—A. Yes; that is the charge which I made at that time. I also returned to that county and made one speech afterwards, for which I made another charge.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. You claimed Merrick County as a part of your territory, and thought that the Burlington Company was invading it; is that it?

The WITNESS. That was as it was submitted to me. I was not in the employ of the Union Pacific at that time. I was given a large number of facts, which I digested as hurriedly as I could do, and went up there and commenced this series of joint meetings.

Q. Were your services at that time, and the public speeches which you made, solicited by the company?—A. Yes; I was sent for by Mr. Poppleton, and asked if I would go and perform that service.

Q. After the session of 1877, when did you attend the next session of the Nebraska legislature?—A. I presume I was there for a part of the session in 1879. I was there a part of that session, I think.

RAILWAY LEGISLATION.

Q. What was pending, of interest to the Union Pacific Railway Company, in the Nebraska legislature in 1879?—A. It is impossible for me to state what bills were pending at any particular session. It is, however, a fact in the history of the legislature of Nebraska that for the last six or eight years there have been introduced a very large number of bills aiming to reduce the rates of transportation on all railways in the State, both passenger and freight; also perhaps different methods of what the railways considered unfair taxation; and also regulating the operation of their roads in the various ways that legislation seeks to control them. How many bills were introduced in the legislature as far back as 1879 I am unable to state. My judgment would be, however, that at recent sessions of the legislature there have been from one-third to one-fourth of all the bills introduced directly affecting the railway interests.

Q. Have the bills been regarded as bills hostile to railways?—A. Yes; wholly so. They have been so regarded from a railway standpoint.

Q. Have any of the bills been enacted into laws?—A. They have; yes.

MULTIPLICITY OF BILLS INTRODUCED.

Q. What proportion of the bills introduced as hostile to the railroads have been enacted into laws?—A. There have been but very few hostile enactments; the proportion I am unable to state. The fact of it is that almost every member of the legislature has in a general way duplicated every other member's bills. There has been a great deal of strife in the Nebraska legislature by the members to see how many bills they could introduce for the satisfaction of their constituents attacking railway interests. There were not enough avenues of attack open to go around; and they were necessarily compelled to duplicate each other's bills; so that the committee which had the matter of freight transportation before it, for instance, would have bills introduced by probably half the members of the house for consideration at one time.

HOW SUPPORTED.

Q. Were the bills supported by the members of the legislature—largely supported?—A. That is difficult to state. They were supported, I think, most of them, by quite a number of very honest converts to the so-called anti-monopoly doctrine. They were supported by a great many other people who were so afraid of adverse newspaper criticism that they were willing to vote for anything which attacked railways, no matter how much it was opposed to their own honest judgment.

SENTIMENT OF THE COMMUNITY.

Q. Then the number of bills introduced into the legislature upon the subject was not a fair measure of the sentiment of the communities of Nebraska upon questions of railroad legislation?—A. I beg your pardon; I am not here to express my opinion as to the sentiments of the people in the State of Nebraska, and I do not care to guess.

Q. Were the bills introduced into the legislature of Nebraska a measure of the views of the constituents of the members introducing them?—A. I have no means of knowing, and I do not care to express my opinion upon that subject.

Q. Was there any feeling in the State of Nebraska or any sentiment upon the question of the burdens that the railroads had put upon them, and therefore they desired legislation upon the subject?—A. If the Commission will read the different newspapers they can get the best opinion upon that subject. I have no opinion to express.

PERSONAL EFFORTS AT LINCOLN.

Q. Did you meet the members of the legislature when you were in attendance?—A. Very few of them. I will state to you what I did personally at the sessions of the Nebraska legislature. This matter, as every one there knew (it was a public matter), was in my charge for the Union Pacific Railway Company. I was able, however, to give it but very little of my personal attention, for the reason that the United States circuit court for Nebraska holds one of its three sessions at Lincoln, commencing at the same time that the legislature sits; and I was there during the sessions of that court (which lasts as long as the legislature), and engaged in the almost daily trial of cases, both for the railroad and in my own personal practice. I was, therefore, able to do but very little except to secure the services of whatever employés I thought necessary to obtain for me as rapidly as they were introduced copies of all bills, which I endeavored to examine evenings, referring such as I thought were necessary to the officers of the different departments at Omaha, and then expressing to the officers at Lincoln in the employ of the railway company my views with reference to what manner I thought the bills affected railway interests, and in what manner, if any, I thought they should be amended, so as to be reasonable from a railroad standpoint. Bear in mind I was not there arbitrating between the people and the railways. I was there representing the railway interest from a railway standpoint and endeavoring to modify proposed legislation as the managers of the company represented to me were proper for railway interests. That comprises nearly the whole that I did personally at the sessions of the legislature, except this: Whenever there was a meeting called for the purpose of a committee considering any pending railway legislation, I went before that committee and made a public argument, sometimes meeting the representatives of the measures in joint discussion, and at other times presenting the matter without any opposing argument. I also at times saw some leading members of the legislature and explained to them the points in which I thought the proposed legislation was wrong, and gave them the views of the company, and appealed to their honest judgments as to whether or not our views were correct. But, generally speaking, I neither had the time, nor did I in fact attend to personal interviews with members of the legislature.

Q. Had you been a member of the legislature prior to your employment by the company?—A. As far back as 1875 I was a member of the house. That was in the January and February sessions of the legislature in 1875.

Q. Were you a member of any subsequent sessions?—A. No, sir; I did not care to repeat my experience as a member of the legislature.

ASSISTANTS.

Q. In the sessions of 1879 what assistants had you, if any, to aid you in your work at Lincoln?—A. It is impossible for me (unless there is some memorandum available) to state who I had, or how many. I think that perhaps I had some persons at Lincoln representing the Union Pacific Railway at different times during the session of the legislature. My recollection would be that in 1879 I was at Lincoln but very little during the session; and at that session, if I recollect rightly, there was not very much proposed legislation.

Q. Were employés of the company detailed from time to time to assist you at Lincoln?—A. Whenever there was anything pending which was peculiarly within the province of the freight department, or of the passenger department, some representatives of those departments would come to Lincoln and explain, as far as they could, either to the committees in open session, or to the members individually, their views upon those subjects.

A CALL FOR NAMES OF EMPLOYÉS.

Q. Can you recall the names of any of the gentlemen at the head of the departments which you have named who assisted you?—A. I can recall that Mr. Kimball was there. I will not state with regard to any particular session, but generally. I can recollect that Mr. Kimball was then the general passenger agent, and he was there at times, and he participated in several discussions before committees of the house. I know that Mr. Vinning, the general freight agent of the Union Pacific Railway Company, was there at times. I know that Mr. Shelby, who was in the freight department, was there at times; and there were others there at one time and another. I know that at times Mr. Hamlin, who was a regular employé of the railroad, was at Lincoln; but I do not think that Mr. Hamlin was ever there at my instance, and my recollection now is that he never did anything there under my direction, although I may be mistaken in some slight degree as to that.

Q. Was Mr. Shelby a member of the legislature while in the employ of the company and in attendance upon you?—A. I can recollect that Mr. Shelby was a member of the legislature, but when he was a member I have not the slightest recollection.

EMPLOYMENT OF MR. CRAWFORD.

Q. Do you recollect a Mr. Crawford who assisted you?—A. I see in looking over this voucher a receipt from Mr. Crawford for $100. I have no recollection in the world about it.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Crawford?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he employed by the company during your attendance upon the legislature in the interest of the Union Pacific?—A. Mr. Crawford was employed there last winter, during the months of February and March.

Q. Was he employed by you?—A. No, sir; but he was employed; I was away from Lincoln very much of the last session of the legislature, and another gentleman there reported to me that he wished Mr. Crawford to stay there. Mr. Crawford had been there on his own hook, for what reason I do not know, only as he stated, that he was a straight Democrat and wanted to oppose the election of a man who was attempting to prostitute both parties to secure his election as United States Senator. After the Senatorial fight was over, a gentleman who was in the employ of the Union Pacific told me that he would like to have Mr. Crawford remain there. I authorized him to have Mr. Crawford remain at a salary of $200 per month for the rest of the session of the legislature.

WITNESS OBJECTS TO GIVING NAMES.

Q. What was that gentleman's name?—A. Well, Governor, I have no hesitation in giving you or any member of this Commission, if you want to call them as witnesses, the names of any men who were at Lincoln; I am perfectly willing to give them to you in that way; but unless you require me to put it in this record (not knowing what their wishes are about it) I prefer not to do so. If to give you personally the names of any persons who were employed there will serve your interest, I will gladly do it.

Commissioner LITTLER. Do I understand, Judge Thurston, that you desire to give these names to the Commission privately?

The WITNESS. Yes; if you wish me to do so. I do not know, unless they are given an opportunity to appear before the Commission, but what they might feel sensitive about having their names entered into this record through my lips, but I will give you the names of every person who has in any manner been employed by the Union Pacific Railway Company in attendance at the sessions of the Nebraska legislature.

MR. LEE A WITNESS.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Lee of Omaha, or Lincoln?—A. I do not recollect any Mr. Lee; no, sir.

Q. Was he employed by you in the session of 1879 in any capacity, or by Mr. Hanlon? I hand you a voucher and ask you to examine it.—A. I don't recall any Mr. Lee. That Mr. Lee [referring to the voucher], whoever he was, was certainly not in attendance at Lincoln upon the session of the legislature. It is very likely that that Mr. Lee was in attendance at Lincoln as a witness, or for some purpose connected with some pending litigation.

Q. Was he employed in any way in the interest of the Union Pacific Railway Company in preventing or obtaining legislation?—A. I am certain that I never had anybody at Lincoln in the employ of the Union Pacific Company by the name of Lee; and that $28 item I can only explain on the theory that he must have been there as a witness in some Union Pacific lawsuit, and that I paid his hotel bill or expenses.

AS TO MR. HANLON.

Q. What was Mr. Hanlon doing there during that session?—A. As I have stated, Mr. Hanlon was there; sent there, I presume, by the Union Pacific Railway Company for the purpose of representing our views on railway questions.

Q. How did he represent them?—A. You will have to ask him for that; I do not know.

AS TO MR. GURLEY.

Q. Was Mr. Gurley in attendance upon the session of 1879?—A. No, sir. Mr. Gurley has never been in the employ of the Union Pacific Company but once. I employed him generally, last year some time, I think, along about the 1st of June, at a salary of $100 per month, to continue until his services were dispensed with.

DUTIES AT LINCOLN.

Q. What were his duties as to the legislature?—A. I will state to you generally, as to all persons representing the Union Pacific Railway Company at Lincoln, what their duty was. It was allotted among them, to a certain extent——

Q. Who made the allotment?—A. I think perhaps that I told Mr. Gurley what to do; but at the session of the legislature at which he was present I was not there, I might say, more than half of the session. During that time I was very busily engaged in trying cases in the United States circuit court then sitting, and Mr. Manchester, who is one of our regular employés, was there, and I think that he generally directed what these different gentlemen were to do. But the general scope of it was this, and this and no more: Certain gentlemen, I think Mr. Gurley, and if I recollect rightly, Mr. Mercer, who was a regular employé of the Union Pacific Company, were directed to secure, as soon as they could after introduction, copies of all railway bills, and submit them either to myself, or in my absence to Mr. Manchester, or to one other gentleman who was there, and whose name I feel perfectly free to give you individually. But, whoever was there, when it was possible for me to examine these bills I examined them, and then sent such ones to Omaha as I thought needed examination there; received reports from there as to what ways they were looked upon as being dangerous to railway interests, and prepared such amendments as were thought by the officers of the department at Omaha in matters submitted to them were proper, or which, in regard to what might be be called legal legislation, I thought were proper means; and these employés of ours at Lincoln were then instructed as to what points we thought the proposed legislation was bad in, from a railway standpoint, and as to what proposed amendments we thought were proper; and they were instructed to secure, if possible, whenever the matters came up for consideration, a public hearing by the committee of the bills referred to; and they were instructed to notify me of any time and place fixed for such public hearing, when I would be present; or, if it were necessary for any head of a department or freight or passenger agent to be there, he would be present. They were further under the general instruction to see every member of the house possible and lay before them the railway's views as to the bad character of proposed legislation. This was more particularly necessary for the reason that the reports of the committees of the Nebraska legislature carry but little weight, and are just as apt to be reversed by the action of the house as they are to be adopted, making it, if one wishes to look after the character of proposed legislation affecting any interest, absolutely necessary for some person representing particular views, as you might say, to see every member of the house and lay those views before them.

Q. Did these gentlemen report to you from time to time?—A. They reported to me partially, but there was very little reporting made to me as to what members they had seen, or what particular views the members they had talked to expressed concerning the proposed legislation. I was altogether too busy to attend to any matters of detail of that kind.

SPECIAL ABILITIES OF EMPLOYÉS.

Q. What special ability had Mr. Crawford in addressing committees of members of the legislature?—A. I don't know. I have heard Mr. Crawford talk but very little.

Q. Have you ever heard Mr. Hanlon talk?—A. I have heard Mr. Hanlon make some observations on various subjects.

Q. What special ability had he in addressing a committee or a member of the legislature upon a question?—A. You are as good judges of that as I am, as you have heard him testify. I presume that was as much on a railroad subject as I ever heard him speak. Mr. Hanlon was a regular employé of the Union Pacific Railway, and was in its employment at the time I was employed, and had been there for years before, and his comings and his goings were not subject to my direction.

EXPLANATION OF VOUCHER 53,274.

Q. I call your attention to voucher 53,274, to John M. Thurston, for $6,262.35, and ask you if you will explain that voucher to the Commission. Read the voucher.

A. It is as follows:

John M. Thurston, of Omaha, June 29, 1879, for expenses incurred and moneys disbursed upon business of the company from April 22 to date.. $6,262.35

RESISTING AN ATTACK UPON UNION PACIFIC TERRITORY.

At this date stated, or within those dates, there had been a proposition submitted by the Elk Horn Valley Road to vote bonds in Madison County, and I think some other counties in Nebraska, but more especially in Madison County, which was a county whose business at that time went entirely to the Union Pacific Road, although it lay 30 miles from its track. There was also a proposition submitted to Platte County, Nebraska, at about the same time, which is a county from which our road then ran, and the business of which we had exclusively, to vote bonds to this same Midland Pacific Railroad, which was the Burlington and Missouri River Railway under another name, for the purpose of building a line to Columbus, in Platte County, to strike us

I was requested by the general manager of the Union Pacific to take whatever steps could be taken to defeat both those propositions, as it was considered to be a very serious attack upon our territory, and one that the company was justified in resisting and defending, if possible. I went more especially to Merrick County (although other parties went also, and went into Platte County) at the request of Mr. Clarke. This business was not within the line of my employment as it had been agreed upon with the company; and I was instructed that for this service, little or great, I would be compensated. I went into Madison County, which I then reached by a ride across country of 30 or 40 miles; I filled that county with public meetings for thirty days; employed every local man in the county that I could find who could make a speech of any kind; I hired men and teams to go and see every individual voter in the county, as far as possible; and I retained three or four attorneys there, whose duties were mostly in making stump speeches, which may not be a part of the duty of an attorney East, but an attorney West is a poor man unless he does a little of that in connection with his other business. Mr. Clark, as I now recollect, also authorized another party in Madison County to take hold of the matter on his own hook. Parties were also employed in Platte County for about the same purpose. As the result of that the bond measure in Madison County, where I was, was defeated. During the time that that canvass was going on we got the county commissioners (or I did) to submit a proposition for the Union Pacific to build a branch line up there. We did that for the double purpose of making a campaign document to beat the other bonds with, and we were also desirous of building a branch line into that territory. After we had obtained the Elk Horn Valley Road the next contest followed right on its heels, in which they pursued the same policy which we had pursued against them; and that county was, you might say, ablaze for another two or three weeks. At the end of that time they beat our bonds, it being necessary to have a two-third vote to carry the bonds. Their bonds had a majority of all the votes of the county, and so did ours; but both series were defeated. Still, I think before the vote was decided we submitted precinct bonds to some precincts in that county, and had another fight over those and carried them. When we got through there there were different bills of expenses coming in, some through me, and some went to Mr. Clark directly. My recollection would now be that of that voucher Mr. Clark had expended money in employing men whom I had no connection with, I should say, covering about half of that amount. I don't remember the exact sums. There was an item allowed me for my services, the amount of which I do not recollect. It may be one of these items; I cannot say about that. I had not thought of this voucher until last Tuesday, since the time it was made. Anyway, some item here represents the amount paid to me for my services, possibly that $400 item; but my recollection would be that it was more than that. I don't know why I did that amount of work for $400; I cannot explain that. I ought to have charged a thousand dollars at least, and it is possible that I did; but I do not remember, and I have no memorandum here to govern me. Anyway, when it was all cleared up, my own services, my own expenses, and those made by Mr. Clark were, aggregated; and Mr. Clark asked me if I had any objection to signing a voucher for the whole expense for those bond elections, including his disbursements and my own. I did not see the least objection to it, and I signed the voucher; and that is it.

PERSONAL RECEIPTS.

Q. Did you strike your name out afterwards upon one of the receipts for some money?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you explain that to the Commission?—A. It was the habit in going anywhere where we needed to expend money to obtain money from the cashier, giving one of these personal receipts, which would be accounted for by voucher. That receipt stood against me in the cashier's office of the company as so much money drawn by me unexpended. On putting in vouchers to cover such moneys these receipts were ordinarily taken back and torn up. They stood for nothing in the world except as representing a personal advance of money, to be accounted for by voucher. I recollect nothing about those receipts, except that I see there is $400 received by me on April 22. That was when I started out, as I judge, upon that expedition. I took $400 along for expenses. On May 9 I must have drawn $100; on May 21 I must have drawn another $100; and when the voucher was made out which covered these different amounts my name would be either torn off of there or erased.

Q. In other words, you had drawn from the company, from time to time, in cash, $6,262.35 to be accounted for?—A. No.

Q. That is what I wish explained.—A. I don't know just how much I had drawn. I say that Mr. S. H. H. Clark expended a portion of this money to parties that I was not able to cover in this territory.

AMOUNT OF PERSONAL ACCOUNTING.

Q. How much did you account for, and how did you account for it?—A. I submitted to Mr. Clark my figures, whatever they were. My judgment would be that what was allowed me for my expenses and what I expended would amount to just about half of this voucher. That is my recollection. I see here that Mr. Clark had drawn out $2,000, which I think was forwarded, and I think he probably turned that over himself to a party in Madison County who was working on his employment to defeat these bonds.

Q. Did you ever render any other account of that sum of money than the voucher you hold in your hand?—A. No, sir. Well, with this exception: I probably submitted to Mr. Clark a more detailed statement of the expenditures made by me than anything which appears here. That is, I may have done it, and I may not. Mr. Clark would have taken my word for the expenditure of that entire sum without any subvoucher. If I had told him I had expended that sum, he would have taken my word without question. But, as matter of fact, I did not expend to exceed one-half of the money covered by that voucher.

Q. Did you keep an individual account from time to time of the amount of money expended?—A. I made some memoranda at different times.

Q. Did you submit all the memoranda to Mr. Clark as the general manager?—A. That would be my recollection.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Clark filed anywhere, in any department of the Union Pacific Company, any memorandum showing in detail the expenditure of that sum of money?—A. I have not the slightest idea.

HOW COUNTY BONDS WERE ISSUED.

Q. How were the bonds issued in the county?—A. By vote of the people.

Q. Through the county commissioners?—A. Yes. The proposition was submitted to the people to be voted upon; if two-thirds of the vote was cast in favor of the proposition, the county commissioners acted.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Is there anything in this act of Congress which makes it the duty of this Commission to criticise the action of the company in defeating a rival road, or warrants the Commissioners in going into all the details which are now sought to be obtained? Obviously it was an effort to protect the property of the company.

The CHAIRMAN. My next question will lead up to that.

The WITNESS. I have no objection to explain, as far as possible, anything that was done.

INFLUENCING VOTES.

Q. Was any part of this voucher expended directly to a voter for the purpose of securing his vote upon the bond question?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were any votes bought with any part of this sum of money represented by the voucher which you hold in your hand? Was any of it paid by the Union Pacific Company for the purpose of securing bonds, or preventing bonds being issued by the counties you have named?—A. Not within my knowledge or belief. I do not think that any attempt was made in that or in any other bond election to buy votes.

Q. Were not sums of money, parts of the voucher that you hold, given to others for the purpose of securing votes for or against bonds?—A. No, sir; not at all.

HALL COUNTY BONDS.

Q. I hand you Voucher No. 66496:

Union Pacific Railway Company to John M. Thurston, Dr.

Nov. 10, 1870. For expenses and disbursements upon business of the company in Hall County $336

Please explain that voucher to the Commission.—A. That was the expenditure incurred in the voting of bonds at Grand Island, in Hall County, in aid of the erection of the Union Pacific Railroad shops at that point.

Q. How were the expenditures made by you; directly?—A. No, sir. I think that they were made by the employment of persons at Grand Island to canvass the precincts. I think that there are also some expenditures there for persons whom I employed to attend one or two public meetings which were held, and to make speeches; also the expenses of teams and carriages on election day to bring voters to the polls.

Q. Did you regard the voucher as a sufficient voucher?—A. I have nothing to say on that subject. I considered that it was for my superior officers to say whether they wished any further items of account than the voucher of my expenditure.

Q. That was the only statement of expenditures you filed with the company?—A. I am not certain about that. I have no possible means of knowing, and I have no recollection except as it is assisted by this voucher which is presented to me.

Q. If you filed any other voucher would it appear among the records of the company?—A. There would be no other voucher filed. I may have presented a statement to the general manager of the company. I may or may not; I don't know.

NATURE OF EXPENSES AT LINCOLN.

Q. I hand you Voucher No. 5144:

Union Pacific Railway Company to John M. Thurston, Dr.

Feb. 28, 1879. For amount paid for board, traveling, and other expenses, and disbursements upon business of the company..... $[illegible]

Please explain for what the amount named in that voucher was expended by you.—A. That was for expenses incurred while in attendance upon the legislature at Lincoln.

Q. What was the nature of the expense?—A. This is comparatively a small amount. I should imagine that at least half of it was for board bills, carriage hire, and like expenses.

Q. Did you render any other statement to the company of the expenditures of that sum of money?—A. That I do not know.

Q. What authority, or what limit, had you for the expenditure of money at Lincoln in the interest of the company?—A. I don't know as I was limited at all. My recollection is that at that session of the legislature I was there in person a portion of the time, and that I had no one regularly employed to attend on that session of the legislature. I presume that that expense was all, or nearly all (there may be some more; I am not certain; I don't think there is much more), of the expense attendant upon that session of the legislature, which would include my own board bill, carriage hire, and moneys paid out for clerical assistance in copying bills, writing at my dictation, and matters of that kind.

PROBABLY NO DETAILED ACCOUNT RENDERED.

Q. Did you keep a detailed account of your expenditures, and enter them upon any book?—A. No; not upon any book. It is quite possible that I may have kept a memorandum; but of the expenditure of that amount of money for those purposes I do not think that I kept any memorandum, except the mere entry of the amount on a little slip of paper carried in my pocket.

Q. Have you any of the slips of paper in your possession now?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you any other memoranda which would show the detailed expenditure of the amount named in that voucher?—A. Not of this voucher; no, sir.

Q. Or any other voucher for the Union Pacific Company?—A. No, I do not think I have any in my possession at all. It was my custom to submit to some officer of the company a statement in a general way of an amount covered by a voucher; and when that voucher was approved whatever memoranda I had was either turned into the office of the company or torn up. I considered that when I had satisfied my employer as to the character and amount of the expenditures there was no other person interested in the matter.

SUBMITTED MEMORANDA.

Q. Then in addition to the vouchers I have handed you your recollection is that from time to time you handed in memoranda of expenses?—A. I will not say that I handed in any memoranda, but my recollection is that I submitted them.

Q. And that the memoranda were returned to you by the company?—A. I should say that on such a voucher as that, whatever memoranda

I had, as soon as I had satisfied the general manager of the company of the character of the expenditure, the memoranda was simply torn up—the voucher representing the disbursement.

Q. The purpose of my examination is simply, under the provisions of the act of Congress, to ascertain as to the sufficiency of these vouchers. We have found large numbers of vouchers, consisting of mere general statements, without giving any details. Therefore I am trying to ascertain if there is any other detailed statement which the Commission can secure. If so, we would be glad to have it, to enable us to pass upon these general vouchers.—A. I know of none. My superior officers never required any more of me in the way of vouchers than those you see before you. I think that when I stated to them that I had expended a certain amount of money for certain purposes they considered my statement satisfactory and took my signature to the voucher.

FURTHER EXPENSES AT LINCOLN.

Q. Voucher No. 12858:

Union Pacific Railway Company to John M. Thurston, Dr.

J. L. Mitchell's expenses and services as attorney	$220
F. F. Ireland's expenses and services as attorney	350
Paid hotel bill, January and February	716
Miscellaneous expenses and disbursements	500
	1,800

Please explain the expenditure recorded in that voucher?—A. That is for legislative expenses at the session of 1881. It is for the different parties who were employed by me to appear at Lincoln, at different times, for the purpose of looking after legislation affecting railways in the manner I have already stated in my examination. I should say that this voucher was for the total expenses of that character incurred at that session of the legislature.

Q. Were they instructed by you as to their methods of looking after legislation?—A. Yes, sir.

CHARACTER OF WORK.

Q. What were they to do in the interest of the company?—A. They were, in the first instance (at least certain designated ones of them), to secure, as soon after their introduction as possible, copies of all bills affecting railway matters, and submit them to me. Through me they were submitted, whenever I deemed it necessary, or they related to a branch of the railroad business with which I was not perfectly familiar, to the officers of different departments of the company to which the proposed legislation related. The views of those officers were obtained and given to me, and if it was thought that amendments were proper for the bills, the character of the amendments were outlined to me, and I prepared those amendments. I then gave these gentlemen representing the company at Lincoln the views of the company upon the character of the proposed legislation; and they were under instructions to see as many members of the legislature as possible, and give them by word of mouth the objections which the company had to the proposed legislation, and explain to them the reasons for those objections, and also present to them the character of the proposed amendments which the railroad company thought were desirable.

PASSES TO LEGISLATORS AND STATE OFFICIALS.

Q. Had you authority to issue passes to members of the legislature or their friends?—A. At the sessions of the legislature—I was going to say what sessions, but I cannot say what sessions—but at some of the sessions of the legislature while in attendance at Lincoln, passes have been sent to me to be issued subject to my discretion—trip passes; none others. It was, however, the custom of all railroads in the State of Nebraska—the Union Pacific and all others—a custom which antedated my employment with the company—to issue to all members of the legislature, and to all State officials, time passes over the railroads, covering the duration of their terms of office. Except in the case of members of the legislature these passes were made annually to public officers. At the time of my employment with the railroad, it was the custom of all railways, I think, to issue to all members of the legislature annual passes, good for the session of the legislature, over their entire lines. Afterwards and probably more at my instance than for any other reason, the passes which were issued to members of the legislature by the Union Pacific Railway were limited, I think, first to six months, and afterwards to three, and made good only in the State of Nebraska. With the policy of issuing passes to members of the legislature I had nothing whatever to do or say. I found that system in full operation with all railroads in the State of Nebraska when I was employed as an attorney.

AUTHORITY TO ISSUE PASSES.

Q. Had the subordinates or those employed by you authority to issue to members of the legislature passes while at Lincoln?—A. No, sir; except in this instance: I had but very little to do with the actual filling out of any trip passes issued at Lincoln to any one. There was usually some one there who did that, mostly on his own responsibility; that is, I intrusted him with the responsibility of doing that, and especially in my absence. I was not at Lincoln, I think, over half the time during any session of the legislature; but there was generally some one there, either myself or some one, to whom the authority was delegated, who had the right to fill out a blank pass, good within the State of Nebraska, and to issue it at his discretion.

MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES.

Q. In voucher No. 12858 can you explain to the Commission what the miscellaneous item of $500 was for; it is under date of February 28th, or about that time, at the session of the legislature?—A. That was very largely, if my recollection serves me right, for the hotel bill of myself and these other gentlemen. I think perhaps the hotel bill would cover that; I should say there must be at least one hundred days or more of board.

Q. That is to say, in addition to the bill at Lincoln during January and February, for $716, the miscellaneous item of $500 was also for that?—A. No; I was mistaken. I did not glance at the voucher. I had not noticed that there was anything there except the $716 item. The $500 item would cover the expenses paid for carriage hire, and matters of that kind. It would also cover payments for clerical work for making copies of all bills introduced, and probably would cover the expenses of persons employed by me, as I might need them, to whom I dictated considerable correspondence, and who prepared for me the drafts, as dictated to them, of proposed amendments. That, in a general way, is all the expense that I know of that is included in that item.

Q. Do you make the same explanation as to the sufficiency of the voucher and the details as to the prior vouchers?—A. I do. The voucher shows for itself, with the exception of that one item.

A VOUCHER FOR "SPECIAL BUSINESS."

Q. Voucher No. 14151:

The Union Pacific Railway Company, to John M. Thurston, Dr.

Apr. 30, 1881. Travelling and incidental expenses and disbursements on special business under direction of assistant general manager $595

SPECIAL BUSINESS.

Please explain to the Commission the item in that voucher "special business"?—A. On looking that voucher over last Tuesday (which was the first time I had seen it since it was signed) I was unable to satisfy my mind as to what that expenditure was for, more than this: I should now say that it must have been for the expenses of some one of the several elections in some one of the counties of the State to carry bonds. I am utterly unable to locate the expenses at any particular county, but I think, and I am satisfied of it in my own mind, that that voucher is to cover that kind of expense. The legislature was not in session at that time, and that had nothing at all to do with legislative matters.

Q. Were you on such special business under the direct superintendence of the general manager in the matter of looking after counties where the bond question arose?—A. I was. I only looked after matters of that kind when I was specially directed to do so by the general manager or his assistant, or by the general superintendent. My recollection now is that they paid me for special services. I think that portion of the voucher was for my own individual compensation, outside of my regular salary. How much I do not know, as I cannot locate the particular bond election to which that voucher refers.

Q. Were written instructions given you on such occasions?—A. None, whatever.

VOUCHER FOR SALARY.

Q. Voucher No. 17775:

Union Pacific Railway Company to John M. Thurston, Dr.

Aug. 18, 1881. Special services from June 1, to September 1..... $500
Disbursements and expenses on special service 185

Will you explain to the Commission that voucher?—A. The first item of $500 is for my own pay under the increase of salary allowed me by Mr. Clark, commencing on the 1st of January, 1880, as I have already stated. It will be found by the Commission that the two series of vouchers appearing here constitute a payment to me—by one set of vouchers, of $3,000 per year, and by the other set of vouchers, of $2,000 per year. As I have already stated, those two series of vouchers are for my own salary, and for no other purpose. I used that money to take care of my family with.

Q. And it was designated as "special services" on the voucher?—A. Yes; it was, in these vouchers. As I have already stated, it was done at the instance of Mr. Clark, the request being conveyed to me by letter, which I filed with the auditor, with the vouchers. I had nothing to do with that manner of receiving payments. It did not make any difference to me how I got my salary so long as I got it.

AS TO "DISBURSEMENTS AND EXPENSES."

Q. In whose handwriting is that voucher?—A. That voucher is in my own handwriting. I suppose that Mr. Clark did not care to have it known among the members of the legal department generally that he had raised my salary. The disbursements and expenses for special services of $185 I have no manner of recollection concerning. There are in my vouchers items of expenses of that character (and I should judge by the amount that this was one of them) where I attended some court, or courts, during this length of time, and paid the hotel bills and expenses of witnesses at the places where I tried my lawsuits. The amount of that item would indicate to me that that was to cover some one or more cases of that kind.

Q. Were you asked by the head of the legal department at any time to designate in your vouchers the cases that you were engaged in?—A. No.

Q. They accepted the general term "disbursements and expenses"?—A. The expenses that were incurred in going out and trying a lawsuit were simply put in as "disbursements and expenses." They did not amount to much. The Commission will see that in the ten years of my employment there was not much money expended in that way. Usually when we went out to try a lawsuit, and had a lot of employés attending as witnesses, we did not require special vouchers for the expenses of every man; but I simply paid the hotel bills for the whole lot, and put it in in that way.

ANOTHER SALARY VOUCHER.

Q. Voucher No. 24,707:

Union Pacific Railway Company to John M. Thurston, Dr.

Apr. 30, 1882. Services as attorney on special business, January 31st to date.. $500.00

Explain that.—A. That is a part of my regular salary.

Q. Under the circumstances that you have explained?—A. Yes. You will notice that for a while Mr. Gannett, the auditor of the company, filled out those vouchers; but after that I think I filled them out myself when I wanted to put them in, and the language may vary a little.

FOR SERVICES IN CONNECTION WITH BOONE COUNTY BONDS.

Q. Voucher No. 29,581:

Union Pacific Railway Company to John M. Thurston, Dr.

Sept. 12, 1882. Disbursements and expenses on special business of the company ..... $[illegible]

BOONE COUNTY BONDS.

A. I should say that those expenses were incurred on some bond election, and I think it was on the bond election in Boone County. I don't say that positively, but I think so. I know that I conducted that campaign in Boone County, and secured the vote of an issue of bonds as large as the county could vote—which was 10 per cent. of their assessed valuation. The county got those bonds.

BOND ELECTION IN NANCE COUNTY.

Voucher No. 37,028:

Union Pacific Railway Company to John M. Thurston, Dr.

July 9, 1883. For expenditures and disbursements on special business of the company.

What special business?—A. I should say that that was the expenses of a bond election, probably in Nance County. I am not quite certain about the location or the dates of those different bond elections. I went through a number of those, and I returned vouchers for my expenses, and this is a voucher of that character for some one of those bond elections.

Q. In the voucher which you now hold in your hand the same explanation would apply to the expenditure as with reference to the other vouchers?—A. Yes, sir; in the same manner. I think, perhaps, that in each of those vouchers there was some portion of the amount allowed me for my services.

OTHER BOND ELECTIONS.

Q. Can you give to the Commission the number of bond elections that were participated in?—A. I think so. There was a bond election in Madison County, as I have stated, in which we antagonized the issue of bonds to the Elk Horn Valley road. Following that was an election in the same county in which we endeavored to secure the issue of bonds to our own branch line. Following that was an election in certain precincts of the same county in which we did secure precinct aid to the full extent that it could be voted in the precinct through which our branch extended.

PRECINCT BONDS.

Q. How were the precinct bonds issued?—A. Precinct bonds are issued in our State by virtue of an election held in the precinct upon the call of the county commissioners, which call is issued upon petition of certain freeholders of the precinct. The vote being favorable, the county commissioners, in the name of the precinct, issued the bonds. In addition to those I have named, I took part in the election which resulted, as we claimed, in carrying bonds in Pierce County, Nebraska. The Pierce County bonds, however, were enjoined by the action of the court, and I think that, pending the preliminary injunction, we abandoned the intention of extending our branch line into Pierce County, and therefore refused to carry on the litigation, and did not get the bonds. Then I had charge of the bond election which resulted in voting the limit of bonds in Boone County, to which the county was entitled—10 per cent. of their assessed valuation. We secured those bonds. Then I was in charge of the bond election by which the bonds of Grand Island precinct, in Hall County, were voted to aid in the construction of shops; and also the construction of the branch line north to Howard County. I was also to a certain extent (not so actively in person) in charge of voting bonds in Hall County for the extension of the branch from Grand Island to Saint Paul, Nebr. I was also in charge of the bond election by which bonds were voted in Fullerton precinct, Nance County, to aid in the construction of the branch there. I also had more or less to do with opposing the proposed voting of bonds by counties through which our road ran, including Merrick, Platte, and some other counties, in favor of our competing lines.

Q. In all of the elections which you have named sums of money were expended in looking after the bond election?—A. Yes, sir.

A BILL FOR BOARD.

Q. Voucher No. 34,134:

Union Pacific Railway Company to John M. Thurston, Dr.

1885. Hotel bill of self and employés of the company at Lincoln for January and February $600,00

Please explain that service rendered by the employés?—A. I think this receipted bill explains the voucher. That was simply for our board, as is shown there. I think they figured that by the day. It is rather a light board bill.

Q. What employés were there during that session of the legislature?—A. I was there myself; I think Mr. Manchester was there; I think I had a clerk there about that time. Whether any of that board bill covered the rooms which Mr. Hamlin occupied a portion of the time, or not, I do not now remember. I have not looked at the bills sufficiently to state. It does seem to me that at different times I employed four or five lawyers—perhaps that is too many—three or four or five lawyers, to come there for a week or two at a time, from different parts of the State. I have no way of refreshing my recollection about that. I think perhaps I did. But there were but very few people there at that session of the legislature representing the railway company. In fact, there were not enough there to properly examine, let alone present the objections of the railway company, the bills introduced, and give them such consideration as they ought to have.

FOR SPECIAL SERVICES.

Q. No. 41,629:

Union Pacific Railway Company to John M. Thurston, Dr.

1885, Oct. 17. For expenses and disbursements on special services of the company by direction of the general manager.

I understand this to be the voucher you have referred to as the other voucher in connection with the arrangement made with Mr. Clark.—A. No.

Q. Please explain that voucher to the Commission?—A. I had forgotten any such voucher as this when I examined it last Tuesday; that is, of a voucher of that late date. I think that voucher is to cover a matter of expense for persons employed at Lincoln during the legislative session of 1885. The management of the Union Pacific Railway Company changed along in 1884 some time, and my recollection is that part or all of the expenses of the persons attending the legislature in 1885 were paid by me; and that the cashier of the company held my individual slip, like the one or two you have seen here, for the money, and that the account was not closed up until this date.

Commissioner LITTLER. How much is that?

The WITNESS. One thousand dollars.

Q. In whose handwriting is this voucher?—A. That is in my own handwriting.

FOR EXPENSES DURING LEGISLATIVE SESSIONS.

Q. Voucher No. 57031.

Union Pacific Railway Company to J. M. Thurston, Dr.

Dec. 23, 1886. For expenses during the year 1886 on special services under direction of the president..... $5,500.00

Other than the items accounted for in the separate bills, amounting to $2,900, will you explain the balance of the voucher?—A. The moneys received by me on the balance of that voucher were received just prior to the commencement of the last legislative session, and were designed to cover the expenses of the legislative session of January and February following. Members of the company would understand the fact that after the cashier's office was changed into that of assistant treasurer at Omaha, the habit which we had formed of going there and putting in our individual receipts and drawing out money whenever we wanted it, and accounting for it afterwards, was broken up, and it was no longer the practice for me, as I would want money to pay parties at Lincoln, to go to the cashier's office any day I wanted it, and draw a certain amount of money. I would want money before I could make out a voucher and put it in. In addition to these items, and some matters of personal expense of my own, the balance of the voucher, I think $2,500 of it, was used by me in paying parties and expenses at the last session of the legislature.

AS TO SPECIAL DIRECTIONS.

Q. What special direction had you from the president?—A. I simply had the direction of Mr. Adams, who instructed me that I was expected to have in charge and look after the matters of legislation affecting the railway interest at the coming session of the legislature; and I was instructed to use my own judgment entirely with reference to the matter.

Q. Were the sums of money expended in the same way as the expenditures you have already named?—A. In the same way exactly.

AID FOR BRANCH LINES.

Q. I call your attention to one item of the voucher, "Services and expenses in procuring aid for branch line, $660."—A. I had forgotten that there was that much of an item. Mr. Regan was engaged in voting bonds in aid of the Saint Joseph and Western road; and in connection with that he was requested by me to take charge of the matter of ascertaining for the benefit of the Union Pacific Company the probability of our securing aid for proposed branch lines. It is a fact that the Union Pacific Railway Company have had in contemplation for some time the construction of a series of branch lines in the State of Nebraska, which they have deemed almost absolutely necessary for the preservation of their future interests. They have made preliminary surveys, and laid out lines, and investigated the matter of the probability of securing aid from different counties and precincts along the proposed lines, hoping and expecting (which was particularly true at this time) that that session of Congress, or the forthcoming session, would take such action with regard to legislation affecting their interests as would leave them in the near future free to go on and prosecute these enterprises. The failure of Congress to act simply put an end to them. I have no idea of the financial situation of the company, but I know that the failure of Congress to act terminated the present possibility of the company to go on and build these branch lines.

NO MONEY EXPENDED TO SECURE VOTES.

Q. During your attendance upon the legislature during the years you have named, while in the employ of the Union Pacific Railway Company, were any of the sums of money named in the vouchers which have been presented to you, or in any other voucher paying the money of the Union Pacific Railway Company, expended for the purpose of securing from members of the legislature their vote or support of measures?—A. Not one dollar.

Q. Have you any knowledge through any other source of the expenditure by any other person of the money of the Union Pacific Railway Company, or of any other money, for the purpose of securing the vote or support of members of the legislature in the interest of the Union Pacific Railway Company?—A. I have not; and in my own judgment no money, not a dollar, has ever been used for any such purpose.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. My recollection is that there is a voucher, to which your attention has been called, for about $6,000?—A. Yes.

MARKET VALUE OF VOTES.

Q. Assuming that you had undertaken to use that sum of money directly for the purpose of buying votes in one of those counties, where the people mostly own their own lands, how far would you have succeeded? My object is to ascertain whether there is any established market value for votes out there?—A. It depends upon what kind of votes you mean. I have no means of judging except from rumors, and I do not like to put myself on record as supporting rumors. There never is an election there, nor anywhere else, I guess, but what the newspapers are full of alleged uses of money.

Q. From your knowledge of the character of your people through those country counties, what is your opinion as to attempting to carry an election by means of purchasing votes, where they were not in favor of the proposition? Could it have been done at all?—A. In the State of Nebraska, its more newly settled counties, where these propositions have been voted upon, are settled in very large part by men who carried muskets on the Union side, in what is now called "the late unpleasantness;" and in my judgment those men cannot be bought.

BORN IN THE EAST, THROUGH NO FAULT OF HIS OWN.

Q. You were born in the East, I have understood you to say?—A. Yes; but not through any fault of my own.

Q. How, in your opinion, does the integrity of your people compare with that of the people of Pennsylvania and New York, when it comes to buying votes?—A. I can only judge by what the newspapers say. Those people have a bad reputation in the newspapers.

AS TO WITNESS'S WILLINGNESS TO TESTIFY.

The WITNESS. There was some comment in the newspapers in my State about my having been fishing when the Commission was at Omaha; and I wish to submit some telegrams that passed between myself and the Commission at that time. I would like to have them attached to my testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. You may read them.

The WITNESS. The first is a telegram from Windham, Minn., dated June 29, 1887, to A. J. Poppleton, the general attorney for the railway company at Omaha.

I have just ascertained that the Commission wish me as a witness. I had no intimation that I was wanted, or I should have been in Omaha. It would break up the plan of myself and wife for our summer vacation to return now, but I am most willing to appear; and if the Commission require can be with them on Friday morning; or I can meet the Commission at any time or place they may name. Please arrange for me, and telegraph me here, care of John G. Redding.

J. M. THURSTON.

To that I received the following answer:

OMAHA, NEBR., June 29.

To JOHN M. THURSTON (care J. G. Redding), Windham, Minn.:

Poppleton out of town. Have notified Commission of your willingness to appear. They do not wish to cause you any inconvenience, but would prefer to have you appear on Friday next. If it suits you better they will take your testimony at Kansas City the latter part of next week, or in New York next September. Please answer.

G. M. CUMMINGS.

To that I answered, at about 2 o'clock the next morning, as I was changing cars at Worthington:

G. M. CUMMINGS,
Omaha:

Can best meet Commission in New York in September at any date they may name. Please express my thanks for their courtesy in the matter.

J. M. THURSTON.

I have appeared here at my own expense, and am glad to do so. I do not charge the Government anything for it; and I wish to thank the Commission for their kindness in excusing me at that time.

---

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Friday, September 23, 1887.

JOHN CHARLES FRÉMONT, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Question. General Frémont, you were engaged, I believe, at one time in connection with the construction of what was known as the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad?—Answer. I was.

Q. What connection had you with that enterprise—I mean from what year to what year?—A. In 1863 and 1864.

Q. Who was associated with you?—A. Samuel Hallett.

Q. Please give us a short statement of how your connection was formed with that railroad, and generally what happened with regard to its construction or development while you were connected with it, and to whom it was afterwards passed.—A. The story of it may be a little longer if I give it in that way. Perhaps I could better give it in answer to questions.

PURCHASE OF LEAVENWORTH, PAWNEE AND WESTERN RAILROAD

Q. We wish it more to fill in the historical sketch that we have of the construction of that road from its inception, in 1861, down to the consolidation.—A. Samuel Hallett and myself negotiated with the president and directors of what was then the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company. We purchased it, and began payments for it at the end of May, 1863. The payments for the road were continued along until they were finished in October—at the end of October—of the same year. The negotiation was with General James C. Stone, General Thomas Ewing, jr., Colonel Isaacs, and Mr. McDowell. The payments were made at different times to these gentlemen, and the last payment was made to Washington Hunt as trustee. The sum paid for the road was $203,000, which I paid.

CHARACTER OF THE PROPERTY PURCHASED.

Q. Please tell us what it was that you bought, and how far the construction had proceeded.—A. There was little or no construction when I bought it, so far as I remember. Perhaps some surveys had been made and some grading begun; but I do not remember of any construction worthy of note having been made at the time we purchased it.

Q. Had there been any titles to land obtained through contracts with the Indians?—A. The titles to land, I think, had been acquired from the Pottawatomie and Delaware Indians. The road was considered to own over two million acres of land, of which the principal part was obtained from the Indians.

Q. So that what you bought was substantially the franchise of the road under its charter, and such rights as had been acquired from these tribes of Indians, and such surveys as had been made?—A. Exactly.

NO PROGRESS MADE IN CONSTRUCTION.

Q. Please describe the construction after you acquired the title, as far as it went.—A. I scarcely remember, as the construction was so unimportant, so slight after I acquired it, because I held it but for a very short time, and estrangements took place between Samuel Hallett and myself, and from that time nothing was done. That took place in 1864.

CANADIAN CONTRACTORS.

Q. Then the enterprise simply languished during those two years, nothing special being done about it?—A. Pretty much so. The contract had been made by the contractors of the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western road, with a Canadian firm; and they were to a certain extent more or less at work at the time we bought it; but very little advance was ever made. Attempts were made to continue the building of the road by that same company; and contracts were made to complete it in January, 1864, but nothing was done under them.

SALE OF ROAD TO KANSAS PACIFIC COMPANY.

Q. How did the interest in the enterprise pass from you and Mr. Hallett, and to whom did it pass?—A. It passed from me to the Kansas

Pacific Company. I think that Mr. Filly, of Saint Louis, who was a director of the road, was the person with whom I had the transactions and negotiations; and the assets, all that we had, were turned over to him for the company. That was some time in December, 1864.

Q. Do you mean Chauncey R. Filley, of Saint Louis?—A. I don't know whether his name was Chauncey or not.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I think his name is G. H. Filly.

The WITNESS. Then it was not Chauncey. It is a long time ago, and I do not remember; but it was to a Mr. Filly, of Saint Louis, one of the directors of the road, that we transferred what we had.

Q. After December, 1864, you had no personal knowledge of the construction whatever?—A. None.

Q. And had no interest in the Kansas Pacific after that date?—A. None other except to receive the payments which were made to me of the sum for which I sold it. I paid for it $203,000, and I received for it about that sum.

CERTIFICATES ENTITLING HOLDERS TO STOCK.

Q. What knowledge have you of certificates, not of stock, but certificates entitling the holders to receive stock in the company, which purported to have been issued before you and Mr. Hallett acquired your interests in 1863?

The WITNESS. Do you refer to the list of which some mention has been made in the newspapers?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

The WITNESS. Those two lists were turned over to me among the papers showing the condition of the property at the time of its transfer to me.

THE INTERVIEW REFERRED TO BY GENERAL STONE.

Q. Were you present at the interview referred to by General Stone in his testimony, by which it appears that certain entries or memoranda were made on the face of that list?—A. I cannot say. I may have been present, but I doubt if I was. They were turned over to me among the other papers, and were laid away and treated as dead letters, pretty much. They were never given any effect to, but remained in that condition until I transferred the property to the Kansas Pacific.

Q. You say that you do not remember whether you were present at that interview or not, when these remarks were noted by Mr. Stone. As he described it, a number of gentlemen were present, and the remarks noted by him appear to have been the result of an interchange of sentiment among the gentlemen present; and these memoranda were entered in the margin of the paper. Do you recollect being present at an interview of that character? I may say that General Stone does not know that you were present. I merely inquire for your memory about it.—A. I was about to say that among the number of interviews that we had in the course of the negotiations it would be difficult for me to say at which particular ones I was present; but I have no recollection of having been present at any such interview as you mention.

Q. Where is the original of this statement which was prepared and which you say was handed over with the other papers?—A. I do not know where they are at this time. They may be among my papers, or they may have been transferred with the papers showing the condition of the company at the time I sold it to the Kansas Pacific. I lost a number of papers at the burning of Morrell's fire-proof warehouse on Fourth avenue, and they may have been there. I have been surprised to see how many duplicates of those, or copies of those, were out. They never were put out by me.

DOES NOT KNOW HOW THE PAPERS BECAME PUBLIC.

Q. The paper, I presume, was in manuscript?—A. In manuscript. There were two papers; one referred to the Delaware and Pottawatomie land business, and the other to the Congressional affairs.

Q. You have no idea at whose instance or on whose motion this manuscript found its way into print?—A. I have not.

Q. Please look at the copy I now show you, and state whether you recognize it as being a copy of the paper you have referred to.—A. This appears to be the same, though I gave much less attention to this particular paper than to that which had on it the names of the parties purporting to influence members of Congress.

Q. That appears to have on it the memoranda, if you will examine it.—A. This is not the paper which I had. It is not a copy of that paper. The paper which was turned over to me was much more full than that, and there were many names on it which I do not see here.

Q. Do you know Mr. Clark Bell and Mr. McDowell whose names appear to be affixed to the certificate stating this to be a copy?—A. Yes, I know Mr. Clark Bell very well.

Q. Did he do business for you at any time? Would it be possible that he had the possession of the original paper?—A. No; I should think not. This may be a copy, but so far as my recollection goes there are discrepancies. It does not address itself to my memory as being quite the same as those which were turned over to me. The papers certainly resemble each other, but it is impossible for me to say that this is a full copy of those which I had.

Q. Is there any special difference which strikes you, such as the absence of any particular name, or of any particular remark?—A. There are some names which I remember as being on the other paper that are not on this.

WITNESS HAS NO PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge whatsoever as to the facts which are alluded to in this paper? I mean as to the fact of the delivery of any certificates to the parties named; or facts relating to services which they were not supposed to recollect; or facts relating to the motives which actuated the policy which is indicated under the column of "remarks" to be pursued in respect to these different persons?—A. No; I have no personal knowledge whatsoever in regard to those matters. All this business took place a year before I bought the road.

NO EFFECT GIVEN TO THE CERTIFICATES.

Q. And your best recollection is that you were not present when this column of remarks was written; and that you did not receive from any of your predecessors in this interest any information relating to the persons named on this paper. Is that correct?—A. That is my general recollection. It would be difficult for me to say that I never heard anything from them with regard to these things. They were turned over among papers which went to show the condition of the company. I know that no effect whatever was given to the certificates. No stock or lands were ever transferred by me to any one of the parties named on those—any of them.

Q. Do you know whether, subsequent to the time when you passed the property over to your successors, any proceedings were had with regard to these certificates, or whether any of them were recognized?—A. No, I do not. There might be a recollection of some things floating in my mind, but I would not be willing to speak of it or mention any name unless I had positive personal knowledge; because a stigma of that kind once affixed does not go away.

Q. We do not ask for the names. Have you any general information derived from your great familiarity with the western country, and with the relations of the Union Pacific to the Government, that you desire to lay before the Commission to help us in our investigation?—A. No. I know not nearly so much as those more nearly engaged. It has always been an object of interest to me, but I do not know anything which would be of special interest to you which you do not already know.

WITNESS WAS NOT ENGAGED IN SECURING PASSAGE OF BILLS.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. I understand you to state that if the list shown you contains a list of names to whom promises of stock, or other valuable thing was given, to any public man, either in Congress or out, you had nothing to do with it?—A. Nothing whatever.

Q. You were not engaged in the business of bribing members of Congress about that time?—A. No; I was in the field about that time, and pretty actively engaged—at the time of the passage of that bill.

Q. If anything of that kind was done it was done without your knowledge, and you had nothing whatever to do with it?—A. Entirely without my knowledge. All that I know of that part of the business of the road, or the passage of the bill, is contained in these papers.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Friday, September 23, 1887.

THOMAS EWING, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. I believe your name was referred to in a deposition made before this Commission by General Stone, referring to some matters connected with the early history of the Kansas Pacific Road. I understand that you desire to make some statement, and we shall be happy to hear it.

CONNECTION WITH LEAVENWORTH, PAWNEE AND WESTERN COMPANY.

The WITNESS. I have asked this opportunity to make a statement respecting my connection with the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company, which in 1862 became a branch of the Pacific Railway, and especially to tell what I know about certain contracts alleged to have been made by that company in aid of the passage of the first Pacific Railroad law—that of 1862.

I was connected with it as a director about one year—from June, 1861, to June, 1862; but never had an active part in its management. The real managers of the company were the president, J. H. McDowell, the vice-president, A. J. Isaacs, and the treasurer, General J. C. Stone. They had absolute control of the affairs of the company for more than a year before I became a member of the board, and for a still longer time after I left it to enter the Army. They went to Washington at the opening of the session of Congress of 1861-'62, to aid in passing the proposed Pacific Railroad bill. I did not go there until late in the session, in fact until after the bill had passed the House of Representatives and was well on its way in the Senate. I remained there but a few weeks and left before the bill passed the Senate. I never again met with the board or executive committee, for the reason that immediately on returning to Kansas I was offered and accepted a commission to raise the Eleventh Kansas Infantry Volunteers, and I thereupon dropped the business of the railroad company, and never had anything to do with it thereafter.

CONTRACTS FOR STOCK AND LANDS.

While in Washington on that occasion, I recollect to have joined with one or more of the gentlemen named in executing four or five contracts with persons whose names are set down in the list in regard to which General Stone was recently examined by this committee. The company had at that time a charter, some surveys from Leavenworth, and a right of purchase of certain lands of the Delawares. It had nothing else except the hope of being made part of the Pacific Railroad, which the Kansas people greatly needed and desired to have built. There was no possibility of building it except with Government aid. The people of the country were then both ignorant of and inattentive to the pressing national need of the Pacific Railway, and the feasibility of its construction; the immediate war exigencies absorbing all interest. To pass the bill it was indispensable that the subject should be thoroughly and ably presented to Congress and the country through the press and by personal discussion with committees and members of Congress. The company had no means whatever to obtain such service except by contracts for stock and lands, the value of which were wholly dependent upon the passage of the bill. I am not at all willing to admit that such employment of men was proper. Like contracts are recognized and enforced by the courts as legitimate, and every man knows that no measure of mixed public and private interest is ever enacted in Congress or any State legislature without employment of men to present and discuss it before committees and in the press.

NEVER HEARD OF THE LISTS UNTIL 1872.

I never heard of these lists until 1872. General Stone is reported to have testified that they were prepared in the fall of 1863, a year and a half after I ceased to have any participation in the affairs of the company. I never heard of one-fifth part of the contracts named in these lists. More than half of the names mentioned in them are of persons I never knew nor met. Whatever contracts may have been made by any of the gentlemen named while the Pacific Railroad bill was pending in Congress before I went to Washington and after I left there, I knew nothing whatever about. There was no occasion to have them made known to me, and they were not. The only contracts named in those lists as published of which I was cognizant, according to the best of my recollection, are those with McBratney, Lathrop, Lathan, Johnson, and King. I may have known of one or two others, but with the list before me I cannot recall any. I never knew of any contract or arrangement with McDowell. The contracts, so far as I had any knowledge whatever of them, were made in consideration of legitimate service of the character I have indicated. I never knew or had reason to believe that any person with whom any contracts were made had or professed to have any corrupt or improper understanding or arrangement with any member of Congress respecting the bill.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. When did you first learn of the existence of this list?—A. It was during the campaign of 1872 in Ohio, when it was published in some one of the New York papers.

Q. And you examined it, I suppose, at that time, as well as later?—A. I did; and I came out with a card stating in effect, but more briefly, what I have said here.

USE MADE OF CERTIFICATES.

Q. Was the use made of the certificates you have referred to in the cases specified by you limited to those persons themselves, or were those contracts delivered with the right to them to use them in any way they pleased for the purpose of bringing about desired legislation?—A. The contracts were all personal with them, and I may say that I never knew of any stock being issued; they were simply contracts for stock.

Q. That is all they profess to be, under General Stone's testimony. Were these contracts that were prepared in the four or five cases that you know of, limited to promises for stock, or did they also embrace some of the lands?—A. My impression is that several of them embraced lands—the contracts which I have named here.

Q. There is one named in addition to those you have mentioned—Washington Cheever. Do you recollect him?—A. I recollect the person, but I have no recollection of any contract with him.

Q. Was any one of these contracts, or any promises for stock, or for land, used with your knowledge or consent in any manner, directly or indirectly, for the purpose of influencing any member of the legislature? A. So far as I know, or have reason to believe, they were not.

Q. So far as you had authority or intervention of your own it would have been without your sanction and without your privity?—A. Decidedly so.

ISSUE OF STOCK.

By Mr. JOHN F. DILLON:

Q. You were a director from 1862 to 1863?—A. From 1861 to 1862.

Q. In this list there are two columns, one giving the number of shares subject to assessment, and the other the number of shares not subject to assessment?—A. Yes.

Q. And there is a summing up, as follows:

Number of shares subject to assessment	70,140
Number of shares not subject to assessment	13,020
Original stock subscribed to organize the company	2,350

At the time when you were connected with the company had any road been constructed?—A. None.

Q. Do you know the extent to which at that time stock had been issued?—A. My impression is that there had been but a small amount of stock issued up to the time that I ceased to have any knowledge of the company or its affairs.

A PAPER COMPANY.

Q. That is to say, in 1862, when you left, it was substantially a paper company, whose hope of living depended upon being recognized by this act of Congress?—A. That was substantially the situation.

Q. And with no money in its treasury?—A. No.

Q. And no stock had been sold or paid for in cash?—A. Nor were there any responsible stock subscribers. That is to say, General Stone, I think, subscribed for all the capital stock; but it was well understood that he was not able to pay for it; and there were a few shares to each director. When I came into the board I recollect that I was put down as a subscriber for five shares. General Stone had subscribed, for the purpose of keeping control of the company, to a majority of its capital stock.

The Commission then adjourned to Saturday, September 24, 1887, at 10 o'clock a. m.

COMMUNICATION FROM JOHN M. KASSON REQUESTING INVESTIGATION OF A REPORT CONCERNING HIMSELF.

The chairman laid before the Commission the following communication, which was read and ordered spread upon the record:

CONSTITUTIONAL CENTENNIAL COMMISSION,
No. 907 WALNUT STREET,
Philadelphia, September 23, 1887.

Hon. ROBERT E. PATTISON,
Chairman of Pacific R. R. Commission, 10 Wall Street, New York:

SIR: A gentleman has just shown me the brief report of a New York journal of an examination of C. P. Huntington, esq., touching certain letters written by him some years ago. In this report it appears that my name was mentioned in one of his letters, as follows:

"Senator Kasson is an able fellow, and we have never lost any money on him."

The report never appeared before in this form and connection to my knowledge. I now come to you, whose repute is that of an honorable man, and ask you to probe the meaning of that phrase to the bottom, by examining Mr. Huntington, and any and every other agent of the Pacific road, on the question whether the indication of that expression, or the actual fact anywhere was or is that, at any time or place or under any circumstances or in any form, Mr. Huntington or his company ever paid or offered to pay any money or other compensation, or to "lend" any money to me, or were ever asked for any money or other compensation by me; in a word, whether my hands are clean or unclean.

I have the honor to request that you append this letter to your report, and that you incorporate in it the result of your inquiry.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. KASSON.

NO EVIDENCE REQUIRING INVESTIGATION.

Commissioner ANDERSON. In regard to the request contained in that letter, I desire to say, so far as my own judgment is concerned, and I presume I merely echo the judgment of every member of this Commission, that no evidence whatever has been placed before this Commission tending to show, in the slightest way, that Mr. Kasson has received any money or anything of value from the Central Pacific Railway Company, or from any of its agents or officials. I therefore move that, as to that request, a member of this Commission be authorized to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Kasson's letter, and incorporate in that letter the statement just made by me, and to state that we do not deem it necessary to make any further inquiry, as far as that matter is concerned.

The motion of Commissioner Anderson was agreed to, and he was requested to send a reply to Mr. Kasson's letter.

The Commission then adjourned until Wednesday, September 28, 1887, at 10 a. m.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Wednesday, September 28, 1887.

Mr. COHEN. I have been asked by Mr. Jackson, the agent of Senator Jones, to submit this affidavit to the Commission, explaining the transaction between Senator Jones and the Southern Pacific Company, or whoever bought the Los Angeles and Independence Railroad. It is sworn to before the United States commissioner at San Francisco. You have already had Mr. Jackson's deposition upon other matters.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to read the affidavit?

Mr. COHEN. I simply wish to let it go on the record. I do not care to read it. The affidavit is presented at Mr. Jackson's request.

AS TO SALE OF THE LOS ANGELOS AND INDEPENDENCE RAILROAD.

Mr. Jackson's affidavit is as follows:

ADDITIONAL AFFIDAVIT OF JOHN P. JACKSON.

In the matter of the examination into the affairs of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco, ss:

JOHN P. JACKSON, being duly sworn, comes and makes the following statement: In the proceeding before the Commission at the Palace Hotel, in the city of San Francisco, on the day of , 1887, the Commissioners propounded a question to the honorable Leland Stanford, then a witness before said Commission, as follows: "Have you paid any money for the purpose of influencing legislation to John P. Jones?" Which question the said witness, by the advice of his counsel, refused to answer.

Affiant further says that he is informed and believes that certain letters written by C. P. Huntington to David D. Colton and certain other letters or copies thereof, written by David D. Colton to said C. P. Huntington, are within the control of said Commission. That the said Commission intended to annex said letters to their report which they are required to make to the President under the act of Congress from which they derive their appointment. That the parties having the immediate custody of said letters and said copies, which were intended to be so introduced before the said Commission, have been enjoined by the circuit court of the United States from the production of said letters or disclosing of their contents; that affiant is informed and believes that the said letters or the said copies contain statements of certain monetary transactions between the said C. P. Huntington or the said David D. Colton or the said Central Pacific with the said John P. Jones.

That the said Commissioners have left the city of San Francisco since the said Stanford was examined, and are about to meet for further examination into the affairs of the Central Pacific at the city of New York.

That affiant will not be present at the city of New York at any session that may be held there, but for the purpose that his knowledge and information concerning the affairs of John P. Jones may appear for the information of the said Commission, and in case the injunction restraining the production of the said letters or the disclosing of their contents may be removed, he makes the following statement:

For the last twelve years I have been the agent and attorney in fact, under an unlimited power of attorney, of Senator John P. Jones, of Nevada, and have transacted all his business in the State of California. During this time Senator Jones sold to C. P. Huntington and associates the Los Angeles and Independence Railroad and wharf for about $250,000, being about one-half its cost price. It was paid for in installments. Previous to the coming due of one of the said installments General Colton wrote in one of the said letters to C. P. Huntington not to pay the next installment due, as Mr. Jones owed them money. The facts in the premises were that the only money owed by Mr. Jones was the sum of $5,400, which was due for back taxes on the Los Angeles and Independence Railroad; and this amount of money affiant paid to Mr. A. N. Towne, general manager of the Central Pacific Railroad. This I believe to be the only money transaction that took place in the last twelve years between the Central Pacific Railroad or its owners and said Senator John P. Jones.

I make this affidavit in case the said letters may be admitted or Senator Stanford may be required to answer the questions, which, under the advice of counsel, he has declined to answer, so that the facts may be before the Commission and this statement may be incorporated in the testimony accompanying its report, the information being particularly in my possession.

J. P. JACKSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 31st day of August, 1887.

L. S. B. SAWYER,
Commissioner U. S. Circuit Court, Northern District of California.

COMMISSIONER ANDERSON'S REPLY TO MR. KASSON.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I desire to say that I have written to Mr. Kasson a letter in reply to his letter of 23d.

Commissioner Anderson's letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION,
10 Wall street, New York, September 24, 1887.

Hon. JOHN A. KASSON,
924 Fifteenth Street, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: The United States Pacific Railway Commission has this morning received your letter of the 23d instant. As requested by you, the Commission has directed your letter to be entered on our minutes, and requested me on its behalf to acknowledge its receipt, and to answer the same.

We have made every effort to have the original Colton letters before us for the purpose of our investigation, but their production, as you doubtless know, has been prevented by the action of Mr. Huntington himself, or of his representatives.

The letter in question was read to Mr. H. from the printed record in the Colton suit. The exact language of the sentence to which you refer is as follows:

"Mr. Kasson has always been our friend in Congress, and as he is a very able man, has been able to do us much good, and he has never lost us one dollar."

It is of course quite possible that the word printed "lost" is "cost" in the manuscript.

In relation to your request for a further examination, the following is an extract from the minutes of the Commission:

"Commissioner Anderson stated:

"In regard to that request, I desire to say, as far as my own judgment is concerned (and I presume I simply echo the judgment of every member of this Commission), no evidence whatever has been placed before this Commission tending to show in the slightest way that Mr. Kasson has received any money or thing of value from the Central Pacific Railway Company, or any of its agents or officials. I therefore move as to that request, that a member of this Commission be authorized to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Kasson's letter, and to incorporate in that letter the statement now made by me, and to state that we do not deem it necessary to make any further inquiry in the matter referred to.

"The motion was agreed to."

With the assurances of our sincere respect, I remain,

Yours truly,

E. ELLERY ANDERSON.

AS TO DISSENTING OPINION OF JUDGE HOFFMAN.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I have also written to Mr. Carey, United States district attorney at San Francisco, ordering some copies of Judge Hoffman's dissenting opinion in the matter involving the right or duty of the courts to compel Mr. Leland Stanford to answer the questions put to him by the Commission which he has refused to answer. I stated in that letter that it was the desire of the Commission that the matter should be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States for review, if the rules of practice permitted that to be done. I stated, however, as a result of my own examination that I could find no method in the existing provisions of law by which the order of the United States circuit court in the matter referred to could be appealed; that it did not seem to be susceptible of an appeal, and I now see that Judge Hoffman has stated the same thing.

Mr. COHEN. When was that opinion filed?

Commissioner ANDERSON. It appears in this morning's New York World, as a telegraphic dispatch from San Francisco.

MR. COHEN DENIES THE EXISTENCE OF A CERTAIN LETTER.

Mr. COHEN. I desire to say that I have examined the Colton correspondence, and that there is no such letter as you examined Mr. Huntington about—a letter stating that there was nothing lost by Mr. Kasson. Mr. Huntington never wrote any such letter.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I do not think we can receive any such statement in the absence of the letters. The letters should be produced.

Mr. COHEN. No letter can be produced that does not exist.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I say no statement about letters should be made, since the letters are not produced.

Mr. COHEN. In the course of my practice when I have stated that I know a thing as a fact, I have generally had proper credence given to my statement, and when I say that there is no such letter, I mean it. I say further, that it should have been the part of the Commission to satisfy themselves that the allegation they were examining Mr. Huntington about, and which was intended to reflect upon the character of a public man, had some foundation.

Commissioner LITTLER. How are you able to state, Mr. Cohen, that there is no such letter?

Mr. COHEN. Because I have gone through all the letters.

The CHAIRMAN. If we are going to examine Mr. Cohen, we will put him on the witness stand.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I object to these statements about the letters.

Mr. COHEN. I have a right to make the statement.

Commissioner LITTLER. Are you testifying, or are you stating this professionally?

Mr. COHEN. I am stating this as counsel.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Counsel for whom?

Mr. COHEN. For the Central Pacific Railroad Company and its different members. I say that Mr. Huntington never wrote any such letter.

Commissioner LITTLER. If you want to make a statement as a witness we will hear you.

Mr. COHEN. I have made my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Cohen is through. He simply wanted to place his statement on the record. We have no objection to that.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK.
Wednesday, September 28, 1887.

HORACE WHITE, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

The WITNESS. I appear here as a volunteer, through the courtesy of the Commission.

A VOUCHER EXPLAINED.

On examining the testimony given by Judge Usher, I see that he said a voucher which had been submittted to the Commission purported to show that I had put in a bill for $745 for services of some kind. I find that Judge Usher was quite unable to explain the appearance of that voucher, and so stated to the Commission.

WITNESS PRESENTED NO BILL FOR HIS SERVICES.

I wish to say that I never put in any bill for services to the Union Pacific Railroad, or to the Kansas Pacific Railroad, or to any Pacific railroad. I was a member of the bondholders' committee of the Kansas Pacific Railway, which company went into bankruptcy in 1876. There was a committee of nine bondholders appointed to assist the receivers in the discharge of their duties. I was one of the nine. There was a special committee of three, consisting of Mr. L. H. Meyer, Artemus H. Holmes, and myself, who did most of the office work. I was not at that time engaged in any other work, consequently I was able to give most of my time to those duties. In the course of our duties it became necessary to send somebody to Washington to assist in securing the passage of a bill to compel the Union Pacific Railroad Company to prorate with the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company. The Union Pacific Railroad Company was required by its charter to receive freight at Cheyenne and transport it to the western terminus of the road at Ogden on the same terms that it received its own freight at Omaha or Council Bluffs, but it refused to do so, and, refusing to do so, the Kansas Pacific Company believed, and the bondholders believed, that they were disabled from paying their interest, and that the bankruptcy of the road was in consequence of such refusal. The Kansas Pacific Company and the bondholders, of course, were at variance on a good many points, but they were in entire harmony on that point, and both agreed that it was necessary that a bill should be passed to compel the Union Pacific Railroad Company to perform its duty in that regard in order that the Kansas Pacific Company might meet its interest obligations. I was designated as one member of the committee to go to Washington on that business, and Mr. Holmes was designated as another. I went there several times, and was there two or three months altogether, and paid my own traveling expenses and hotel bills and printing bills.

ASKED AS TO EXPENSES, HE STATED THE AMOUNT.

Now, as to this voucher of $745, the only way I can account for it is this: Mr. Carr, the president of the Kansas Pacific Company, was there at one time when we were all of us engaged in this endeavor; and my recollection is that he asked me what my expenses had been and that I told him and that he drew a draft on his treasurer at Saint Louis and handed it to me to pay my expenses. That is my recollection. This voucher, which purports to be for services, does not seem to have any signature, either mine or anybody else's. I have never seen that voucher, but I intend to see it if I have to go to Omaha to look at it. I have no recollection of it myself. I intend to see whether any signature is attached to it. I only desire to see it because I never put in any bill for services to the Union Pacific or the Kansas Pacific or any other Pacific company.

I remarked that I was in Washington on this business several months. I have in my hand here a volume of literature compiled on our side on that subject, a volume of 747 pages. My small contribution is bound up in that volume. Judge Usher, I observe, has a low opinion of it. In that I agree with him.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Question. If you ever received the money evidenced by this voucher you think it was for your expenses, hotel bills, &c., while you were in Washington?—Answer. I do, sir; emphatically.

Q. And that you never received any consideration and never charged any for your services?—A. I know that positively.

EVIDENCE THAT THE BILL IS NOT FOR SERVICES.

Q. Is not the fact that the bill is so small pretty conclusive evidence that you never made out a bill for your services?—A. Well, I never worked for such low wages as that since I arrived at man's estate. If, after deducting expenses, there was any balance left it was so small that I should refuse to accept it for services.

A LETTER TO JUDGE USHER.

Judge Usher is considerate enough to say in his testimony that he never liked me, because I was always attacking Lincoln in my newspaper during the war. I have written a letter to Judge Usher to say that I was not an editor of any newspaper during the war and that the question of his personal likes or dislikes was not made a subject of inquiry under the resolution of Congress which appointed this Commission. That is my "tit-for-tat." I have nothing further to say, unless you gentlemen wish to ask any question.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe we have nothing further.

The WITNESS. I desire to thank the Commission for its courtesy.

LETTERS AND DOCUMENTS ACCOMPANYING MR. WHITE'S COMMUNICATION.

Mr. Horace White subsequently addressed the following letter to the Commission:

NEW YORK, October 15, 1887.

To the UNITED STATES PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION:

GENTLEMEN: Since I appeared before you as a witness I have been allowed to take from the files temporarily, and I now present to you for inspection, the original voucher which purported to show that I had rendered a bill for "services at Washington" to the Kansas Pacific Railway in the year 1878, for the sum of $745, or had received that sum for services rendered to said company. You will observe that this voucher is not signed by me, and that there is attached to it, by pasting a paper, evidently in the handwriting of Mr. R. E. Carr, the then president of the company, containing a memorandum of six payments, in words and figures following, viz:

Brooks & Son, board bill $72.85
J. H. Wadsworth, legal services 1,250.00

Horace White, expenses at Washington (order of H. Villard)..... $[illegible]
R. S. Elliott, printing and advertising..... [illegible]
Geo. L. Vose, calculations made by him (on grades and curves)..... [illegible]
J. H. Rickey, one month's services..... [illegible]

It is plain that the person who made up the voucher in my case from Mr. Carr's memorandum used the word "services" when he should have used the word "expenses." This confirms my recollection of the matter, as already stated in my testimony.

Yours, truly,

HORACE WHITE.

I certify that the memorandum referred to by Mr. White contains the entries above indicated.

CHAS. P. YOUNG, Sec'y.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
Boston, October 7, 1887.

MY DEAR WHITE: I inclose you the vouchers you requested. The delay is explained in the accompanying papers to Comptroller Mink.

You will observe that these vouchers, although made out in your name, do not have your signature, which is only found on the two drafts drawn by Mr. Carr. The explanation seems very plain that, after paying you $745, Mr. Carr, instead of making his voucher for expenses, made it for "services." This, I believe, is your explanation of it.

Will you please return these documents as soon as you get through with them?

I remain, &c.,

ISAAC H. BROMLEY,
Assistant to President.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Wednesday, September 28, 1887.

I. E. GATES, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Question. What is your occupation?—Answer. I am a clerk and assistant in the office of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or the Southern Pacific now.

CONNECTION WITH CENTRAL PACIFIC.

Q. How long have you been connected with the Central Pacific Railroad Company?—A. It is about eighteen years, I should say, since my first connection with the company.

Q. Have your functions always been discharged in New York city?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under whose immediate direction are you?—A. That of Mr. C. P. Huntington, the vice-president of the company.

Q. Do you occupy the same room with him?—A. I do not at present. In the beginning I did for a short time.

Q. Where was that room?—A. At No. 54 William street.

Q. How long did you occupy the same room with him?—A. I should say but a few months. I could not tell exactly how long.

Q. To what place did you then move?—A. My own particular office was moved into an adjoining room.

Q. But still at No. 54 William Street?—A. Yes.

Q. How many years did you remain there?—A. I could not tell without referring back. We remained there until the plastering broke through over our heads when they were pulling down the building.

Q. To what place did you then remove?—A. To No. 9 Nassau street, the Duncan building.

Q. Were you with Mr. Huntington or with the Central Pacific as early as 1873?—A. Yes.

Q. What books did you then keep for Mr. Huntington?—A. I did not keep any books for him.

Q. What books did you keep, if any?—A. I did not keep any books. It has never been my duty to keep books, nor any part of my duty.

DUTIES.

Q. Please state, then, what your duties were.—A. As nearly as I can describe I was a general assistant to Mr. Huntington, but not a bookkeeper.

Q. What did you help him in—in what kind of transactions?—A. In any transactions that he committed to me for attention. I acted under his orders.

Q. Was not his business attending to the interests of the Central Pacific—the purchase of material for that road, and the sale of its securities in general?—A. He probably could tell what his business was better than I could.

Q. I am not asking you whether he could or could not. I am asking you what you know about his business, derived from your employment and acquired in the discharge of your duties?—A. He was vice-president of the company and the executive officer of the company in New York.

Q. What I want to get at is what you did for him, and for that reason I refer you to things that he did in which you say you assisted him.—A. It is a very difficult matter to specify.

GENERAL SUPERVISION OF WORK.

Q. Did you visit or communicate with persons with whom he had negotiations for the purchase of rails, for instance, for the road?—A. Perhaps, on occasions, I might have done so. For instance, if he had a contract for rails with any manufacturing company, after the contract was made I might be intrusted with seeing that it was carried out and that the deliveries were made. I would be intrusted with general work of that kind.

Q. That business of seeing that such a contract was carried out would involve visiting the parties selling the rails, or receiving statements from them as to the forwarding of the rails, and also involve the making of certain payments to those persons in satisfaction of their contract. Is not that so?—A. So far as payments are concerned, it would involve seeing that a check was drawn and sent to them at the proper time when payment was due—under Mr. Huntington's direction.

HOW CHECKS WERE DRAWN.

Q. Did you have any connection with that part of the work—seeing that a check was drawn and sent to them when the proper time came?—A. I should say that I did. I should say that I might have had something of that kind to do. For example, Mr. Huntington might say, "So many rails have been delivered under such a contract. Send a check to A, B, or C in payment for them."

Q. When he would say that, who would prepare that check and sign it?—A. He signed the checks himself.

Q. What signature did he affix to those checks?—A. His own signature.

Q. C. P. Huntington?—A. C. P. Huntington.

Q. Simply that?—A. Simply that. His official title was probably printed on the check.

Q. You have seen several thousand of those checks, have you not?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether or not his official title was printed under his name as written?—A. I could not say as to every case, but generally that was the fact, that the name was written and the title of "Vice-President," or "V. P." printed on the check. It was the official check of the company.

BANK ACCOUNTS.

Q. Upon what banks were those checks drawn?—A. Different banks.

Q. Please enumerate.—A. I think that for a time they were drawn on Fisk & Hatch, and subsequently we had an account in the Fourth National Bank.

Q. In what bank was your account kept in 1873 and 1874?—A. I should say in the Fourth National Bank; but I am not positive about that without referring to dates.

Q. In whose immediate charge were those check books?—A. The man who had the handling of the checks and the filling out of them was one of the clerks in the office.

Q. What was his name?—A. There have been different clerks. Sometimes a Mr. Emery wrote the checks.

Q. Please give his full name?—A. W. C. Emery.

Q. Where does he live?—A. He lives in the Twenty-fourth ward of the city of New York, I think; but I could not give you his exact address.

Q. Did you ever give him instructions which led to the filling up of checks?—A. Under Mr. Huntington's directions I may have done so.

Q. Was the same form of check used—I do not mean the same ornamentation, but a printed check drawn to the same order from 1871 down to date?—A. We have always used a printed form of check. Of course, in changing from one bank or banker to another we have had a different check.

FORM OF CHECK.

Q. Please state what the "order" was, in the form used by you—to whose order were those checks printed?—A. My name was generally printed on the face of the check.

Q. "I. E. Gates"?—A. Yes.

Q. As holding office of any kind?—A. No.

Q. Simply the person?—A. Simply the person.

Q. So that before negotiation your indorsement would always be necessary?—A. Yes.

Q. After the check had been filled up and signed by Mr. Huntington what was the course of business?—A. I do not know that I understand you exactly.

Q. After the check had been filled up and signed by Mr. Huntington some steps would have to be taken in order to make the check effective?—A. It would require my indorsement, of course.

Q. I asked what was the course of business. Would Mr. Huntington hand the check to you?—A. Not necessarily. He might say, and perhaps would say, to the book-keeper who wrote out the check, "Fill out a check for John Smith," or whoever it might be. That would be done and presented to me for indorsement.

Q. How could he fill out a check to John Smith if the check was already printed to the order of I. E. Gates?—A. He would write across the back of the check, "Pay to the order of John Smith," and I would sign it.

INDORSEMENTS.

Q. What was the order of proceeding in order to make it effective?—A. The name of the party to whom it was to go would be indorsed on the back of the check.

Q. How would the knowledge as to a particular kind of indorsement be derived? That is, how would the person who drew the check know to whose order he was to direct it to be paid on the back of the check?—A. He would know by Mr. Huntington's direction.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Exactly; that is what I want to know.

The WITNESS. Yes.

Q. Who would write that indorsement on the check?—A. The man who drew the check.

Q. Always that man?—A. I should say in most cases, if not in all cases.

Q. Did not Mr. Gates ever write that?—A. It is possible that I might have done so.

Q. Is it not true, as matter of fact, that you did very often do it?—A. I should think not. I cannot say positively that I ever did it, and yet I might have done it.

KNOWLEDGE OF BUSINESS TRANSACTIONS.

Q. You would accept the direction that you found on the back of the check without any inquiry about it, and affix your signature to that?—A. If it was a check in the regular course of business for material, or anything of that kind, I naturally should, knowing what payments were to be made. I should probably have before me a list of the payments that were to be made. I would indorse the check.

Q. You would indorse the check then in cases where you knew the transaction, and that it was intended to fulfill a legitimate obligation of the Central Pacific Company?—A. Yes.

Q. Were there cases which differed from this in character—cases in which you were required to indorse a check without knowing the object to which it was to be applied?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. How frequent were such occasions as that?—A. I could not say. There were cases of that kind, I know; but I could not tell now what they were.

PROCEEDINGS AS TO CHECKS.

Q. In cases of that character please describe the proceeding between the filling up of the face of the check and its actual application to its purpose.—A. It would in such cases be only under the direction of the vice-president.

Q. What kind of directions would he give you as to checks of that character?—A. I do not know that I can state exactly. If he should bring a check to me for my indorsement I should indorse it at his direction.

Q. In such checks would the indorsement be in blank?—A. It might be, or it might not.

Q. Were there many cases of indorsement simply by writing your name on the back of the check at Mr. Huntington's request?—A. I should say not very many; and still I cannot give any number.

Q. Were there many checks drawn in this way and indorsed by you for which, at the request of Mr. Huntington, you procured bills and delivered them to Mr. Huntington?—A. Very few, I should say; still I cannot tell how many.

Q. What would you do with checks indorsed in blank, or indorsed by you without any specific order?—A. In that case I should follow implicitly the directions of the vice-president.

Q. Were those checks then returned to him for application or use in business, or were they used by you?—A. I should say, as a general rule, that they were used by him. There might have been cases when the currency was drawn on checks.

Q. Did Mr. Huntington keep any different account from the one you have described?—A. Not to my knowledge.

SPECIAL BANK ACCOUNT.

Mr. COHEN. What kind of an account are you speaking of, Mr. Anderson?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Any special bank account.

The WITNESS. Any other bank account for the company?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

The WITNESS. Of course he had his private bank account.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am talking now of the account from which the funds of the company came—the account with Fisk & Hatch and the account with the Fourth National Bank are the only accounts you recall?

The WITNESS. They are. On reflection, I think at one time we had an account with Eugene Kelly & Co., and possibly at one time with Speyer & Co., bankers, with whom there were dealings.

Q Who made the stub entries in the check-books?—A. The clerk who drew the check.

Q. Mr. Emery?—A. The clerk who drew the checks. Sometimes Mr. Emery might be absent and some other clerk might draw them.

Q. Do you still hold the same position with reference to the Central Pacific Company?—A. Substantially, yes.

THE STUB CHECK-BOOKS.

Q. When did you last see these stub check-books?—A. I do not know that I have ever seen any of them since they were completed, in use. When one check-book is used up, the covers are taken off and the checks and stubs are kept for a time, and are then disposed of, I suppose, as being of no further use.

Q. You say you "suppose." Is that merely a supposition, or do you know that those checks and stubs have been disposed of?—A. If they are in existence I do not know where they are. My impression is that they are not in existence. I cannot say positively.

Q. How long have you known them to be kept after the check-book was filled?—A. I have no definite knowledge about that—no knowledge of any definite time.

Q. To what officer of the company were they customarily delivered?—A. I do not know that I could trace the history of them at all after they are completed—after the last check is taken from the book.

Q. I do not ask you to trace their history; I ask you if you know to what officer of the Central Pacific Company those check-books would be delivered.—A. I do not.

Q. Can you give this Commission any light as to where they should look, or what officer they should examine, for the purpose of ascertaining the stubs of the check-books used by Mr. Huntington from 1873 to 1880?—A. I cannot.

NAME OF WITNESS UPON VOUCHERS.

Q. Are you aware that in many of the vouchers which Mr. Huntington was in the habit of remitting monthly to San Francisco your name was entered opposite many and large sums of money in the body of the voucher as sent to San Francisco?

Mr. COHEN. What paper is that that you are reading from, Mr. Anderson—the paper that you are examining the witness from?

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am not examining the witness from any paper.

Mr. COHEN. You consulted a paper before you asked him that question—I would like to see what that paper is.

Commissioner ANDERSON. You are welcome to see the paper that I hold in my hand; but I am not examining the witness from any paper. [Handing a newspaper to Mr. Cohen.]

Mr. COHEN. I see it is a copy of the New York World of January 15, 1887. Well, the World is good authority on many subjects.

The WITNESS. In the first place, I do not know that Mr. Huntington has remitted any vouchers to San Francisco.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I may say to you that we have seen the papers in San Francisco. Whether they are called "memorandums" or "vouchers," we have seen the papers, and Mr. Huntington has told us that it was his custom to remit many vouchers or memorandums to San Francisco. On many of those the word "Gates" was written, and opposite to the word "Gates" there was written a sum of money in the different cases. Were you aware of that fact?

The WITNESS. I have read statements to that effect in the newspapers.

MONTHLY REPORTS.

Q. Were you not aware that between 1872 and 1883 or 1884, it was Mr. Huntington's practice to make monthly reports to San Francisco?—A. Yes; I know that fact—that it was his practice to make monthly reports.

Q. Did you assist him in preparing those reports?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you ever see these reports?—A. I might have seen them sometimes.

Q. Who would assist Mr. Huntington in making them?—A. They were written out as I remember by the clerk, whoever he was, that drew the checks—the clerk that kept the check-book and kept the cash account.

Q. How many clerks were there engaged in that business at that time?—A. There was only this one who was engaged regularly in that business. As I have said, he might occasionally be absent, and some one in the office would take his place.

Q. Do you know that at that time your name was entered very commonly in those reports—that the word "Gates" was written in those reports and a certain number of dollars carried out in the column opposite the name?—A. I saw them before they were sent away, but oftener did not see them. If it was stated, I noticed the fact, of course.

Q. What would you understand from a report so prepared, with the word "Gates" on one line, and a certain number of dollars written opposite—what would you understand to be the meaning of that entry?—A. I should understand that I had indorsed a check, under Mr. Huntington's direction, in blank, procured the money on it, and handed it to him, or handed the check to him.

Q. And as far as you remember, did you ever see your name written in those reports and certain figures written opposite the name when the fact did not agree with the entry as made—when the entry did not represent a transaction which had occurred?—A. I have no recollection of ever seeing such a case.

Q. So that we may assume that, as far as your memory serves you, the entries in Mr. Huntington's reports were in conformity with the facts?—A. Certainly, so far as I can remember.

CONNECTION WITH CERTAIN CHECKS SIMPLY CLERICAL.

Q. The Commission would state to you that it appears from the reports in San Francisco that between 1872 and 1880 there were over one hundred items of the character I have described to you, the amounts of which will vary from $200 to $7,000. Have you any additional explanation to give in regard to these vouchers which we understand from your testimony to represent transactions that did occur, so far as you know?—A. The explanation that I can give is this: As I have already stated, checks of that character were drawn by Mr. Huntington's direction. The checks were either handed to him, or possibly, at times, currency might have been drawn on the checks and handed to him, and my connection with the matter was simply clerical. What he did with the money or what he did with the check never came under my observation. It was not my province to know. It did not come within the line of my duty.

Q. As to the use made of any of the funds represented by these various checks, do we understand you to state that you have no personal knowledge whatsoever?—A. I have no personal knowledge whatsoever, excepting, possibly, in some cases I may have paid some money; but, if so, small amounts, either to General Franchot or Mr. Sherrill; but beyond that I have no knowledge.

Q. Do you remember the legislation pending in Washington, and the state of affairs pending there in the spring of 1878?—A. I have some recollection of it.

NEVER IN WASHINGTON.

Q. Do you remember that the Wilson Committee was then engaged in investigating the Pacific railroads?—A. I very likely knew of it at the time, but I could not say now whether it was that year or some other year, or what committees there were. I might say here, for the information of the Commission, that I know very little about Washington matters. I have never been in Washington in my life, and was never before any committees.

RAILWAY LEGISLATION.

Q. You remember, as matter of fact, that there was an occasion when the Pacific railways were examined and a report was made to Congress in regard to bringing a suit against the Union Pacific through the Attorney-General?—A. I remember that fact; yes.

Q. Do you remember that at or about that time you had interviews with Mr. Huntington in regard to these proceedings in Washington, specially bearing on those matters?—A. I do not recollect any such special interviews.

Q. Do you remember the fact that a bill was reported in Congress in 1878, looking to proceedings against the Central Pacific, and the appointment of a special committee to examine the affairs of the Central Pacific?—A. I remember that such a committee was appointed. The year I do not remember.

Q. That there was a bill for the appointment of such a committee?—A. Yes; I remember that that was the fact.

Q. Do you remember whether the committee itself was appointed?—A. No, I do not know.

Q. What became of that bill?—A. I do not know.

Q. Do you remember any circumstances connected with its defeat?—A. No, I do not.

AS TO THE WILSON COMMITTEE'S CALL FOR BOOKS AND PAPERS.

Q. Do you remember that during that same investigation a very urgent call was made by the members of the Wilson Committee on Mr. Huntington for the production of the books and papers showing the cost of construction of the Central Pacific Railroad?—A. No, I do not remember any such call.

Q. You have never had any conversation with him relating to these subjects, then—the subject of the books or of the demands that have been made by Congress for their production at this time?—A. I cannot say that I never had any conversation with him about it, but I do not remember now any special conversation when the matter was discussed between us.

Q. What I want to know is whether you remember that he reported to you in conversation, after his examination in Washington, that members of the committee, or persons representing the Government, had pressed for an inspection of those books at that time?—A. I do not remember any such report made by him to me. He would not naturally report such a thing as that to me, I not being an officer of the company.

AS TO DISAPPEARANCE OF BOOKS.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Huntington refer to the disappearance of any of the books of the company or any books in which the Central Pacific Company had an interest?—A. I have no recollection of ever hearing him speak of any disappearance of books.

Q. Books of the Contract and Finance Company?—A. I do not remember. That company never had any books here in New York City that I ever saw.

PURPOSE OF EXAMINATION.

Mr. COHEN. I will ask the Commission if this testimony is taken for the purpose of contradicting Mr. Huntington. He is your witness. You have sworn him and taken his testimony on the subject.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We want to get all the light we can as to these missing books, Mr. Cohen. I will not say what the purpose of the examination is.

Q. You say you have occasionally made small payments to Mr. Francioni and Mr. Sherrill. Where did you see those gentlemen?—A. I do not think I said I had done so. I said I may have done so. I do not now recall any particular instance, but I may have done so.

Q. Do you remember those gentlemen?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know them?—A. Yes.

Q. Where were you in the habit of seeing them?—A. More frequently probably in our office than anywhere else. In my own room.

Q. In the Central Pacific office?—A. Yes.

PERSONS CONNECTED WITH WASHINGTON BUSINESS.

Q. What other gentlemen connected with your Washington business have you ever seen at the office of the Central Pacific Company?—A. I have met Mr. Henry Beard occasionally in the Central Pacific office, and Mr. Boyd.

Q. Have you named all the persons coming from Washington, connected with the Central Pacific business, whom you have seen in the office of the Central Pacific Company in New York?—A. It would be very difficult to recall all the parties I may have seen in seventeen years, but I do not remember any others who have been connected particularly with our business there.

Q. Have you at any time seen in the office of the Central Pacific Company any members of Congress?—A. It is quite possible that I may have seen members of Congress in the office. I cannot now recall whom.

Q. You have no recollection of any specific person?—A. No.

REGARDING MR. HUNTINGTON'S CORRESPONDENCE.

Q. Who received Mr. Huntington's correspondence in the morning?—A. I think the usual custom in the office is for Mr. Phillips, one of the clerks in the office, to take the letters from the postman who delivers them in the office. Certain letters pertaining to certain matters that he knows about he opens himself, and attends to himself. At the period to which you refer letters went directly to Mr. Huntington's desk.

Q. Did he answer his letters himself?—A. That was his usual custom.

Q. Did he keep letter-press copies of all letters written by him, or did the company keep such letter-press copies?—A. The company keep copies of letters on their own business. As to Mr. Huntington's correspondence, he is able to answer for himself.

Q. You say you are an officer of the Central Pacific Company?—A. No, sir; I did not say so.

Q. Or that you were connected with the Central Pacific? I so understood it.—A. I am not an officer of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Q. You were an officer of the Central Pacific Railroad Company during the period I have referred to?—A. I was not.

Q. In whose employ were you?—A. I was in the employ of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and in that of other companies—not exclusively of the Central Pacific Company.

Q. We will not split hairs as to whether you were an "officer" or an "employé." You received money for your compensation from the Central Pacific Railroad Company?—A. Yes.

Q. And does it strike you as extraordinary that you should be called upon to explain the disposition made of the letters of that company, merely because they were written by its vice-president, Mr. Huntington?—A. Yes; I should think it extraordinary, especially when the vice-president, who is himself an officer, has been examined by you.

LETTER BOOKS.

Q. Can you tell me where the letter books are that you refer to?—A. No; I cannot.

Q. In whose custody were they while they were in your office?—A. They were not in my office.

Q. In whose office were they?—A. In the office of the company.

Q. In the general office?—A. Yes.

Q. You cannot give us any information as to their whereabouts?—A. I cannot.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF MONEYS BEING PAID TO INFLUENCE LEGISLATION.

Q. Have you any knowledge, during the whole period of your employment by the Central Pacific Company, of the use or application of any of the moneys represented by the checks indorsed by you for the pa-

...e of, in any manner whatever, directly or indirectly, influencing leg...ation?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the payment of any of those moneys ...any person connected with the management of your business in Wash...gton?—A. Not in addition to what I have already said. I may have ...times; if so, in very small amounts, either to Mr. Franchot or Mr. ...errill, in payment of their services as their regular salary.

Q. The question put by me goes a little beyond what you have done ...sonally. It includes knowledge of anything that may have been done ...any one else. Have you any knowledge that Mr. Huntington used ...of these amounts, in any way, for the purpose referred to?—A. I ...ve not.

Q. Not only for payment for influencing legislation, but whether Mr. ...ntington was in the habit of paying moneys to Mr. Franchot or to ...Sherill, or to any of the other agents that were in Washington?—...No.

Q. You have no knowledge on that subject at all?—A. I have no ...owledge on that subject at all.

A COMMON PRACTICE AS TO CHECKS.

Q. What was the object of having these checks printed as payable to ...r order? Was it not the fact that Mr. Huntington knew that you ...re familiar with the business, and you would be careful to see that ...ks were properly used and applied to proper purposes? Were not ...se the reasons which led to the printing the checks in the way they ...re printed—payable to your order?—A. Well, I should say so; yes. ...is a very common practice here.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I understand.

The WITNESS. Frequently Mr. Huntington would be out of town for ...e or two or three days, and sometimes a month at a time.

Q. You say it is a "common practice." The person who is selected ...the general standing "order" to whom the check is made payable is ...selected because of the faith reposed in him, and because of his knowl...ge of the affairs of the company for whom he is acting?—A. I should ...ge so, yes; I should judge that was the reason.

Q. That being the case, can you shed any light at all on the use of the ...ks I have referred to, which you were called upon to indorse in ...nk, as to which you say you have no knowledge of the purpose to ...ich they were applied, the fact being that there are over one hun...d such instances, and that they amount to between $300,000 and ...0,000 in money?—A. I can give no further light than I have already ...ven.

PURPOSE OF HAVING CHECKS PRINTED TO MR. GATE'S ORDER.

By Mr. COHEN:

Q. Was not the main purpose of having the checks printed to your ...er that you might be able to carry on the business of the company ...ring Mr. Huntington's absence from New York?—A. That was cer...nly one very important purpose.

Q. He was away frequently during the last seventeen years, was he ...?—A. Quite frequently, and for different lengths of time.

Q. When you were directed by Mr. Huntington to fill out a check, or ...e a check to be filled out, or to indorse a check, that was sufficient ...rrant to you, without making any further inquiry?—A. Of course.

Q. You spoke of its being a common custom in New York to have checks printed to the order of some employé in offices doing a large business. Would it be practicable for the vice-president of such a company as the Central Pacific to sign a check as it was called for during the business hours of the day?—A. It would not. We sometimes issued 400 or 500 checks in a day.

BOOK-KEEPER WOULD INDICATE THAT CHECK WAS DRAWN TO ORDER OF WITNESS.

Q. In the monthly report spoken of by Commissioner Anderson, that was sent by Mr. Huntington to California. If the book-keeper saw a check drawn to your order, without any explanation, would he put in the report something to indicate that the check had been drawn against the bank, to your order, without making any explanation about it?—A. That would be all he could do.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Were you in the habit occasionally of seeing the entries on the stubs of the check-books?—A. No, sir; I very rarely saw them. So far as I remember I very rarely saw the entries on the stubs.

STUB ENTRIES WOULD GIVE NO FURTHER INFORMATION.

Q. Under any of the cases of the unexplained checks, have you seen the stub entries, so as to know whether the entries on the stubs would give the Commission any more information than you have been able to give it?—A. So far as I remember they would give no further information.

Q. Is there any place that you know of where that information can be obtained?—A. I do not know of any.

Q. That is to say, do you know any person of whom we may inquire as to the application actually made of all these moneys of the Central Pacific Company which cannot be traced beyond your indorsement?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. COHEN:

Q. Would not that be shown in the books kept by the Central Pacific Railroad Company in California?—A. It would be shown there if anywhere.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Why do you say it would be shown there? Do you mean at all to assert that it is shown on those books?—A. No. The books in California I have never seen or examined. The monthly statements are sent here, and the books are kept there.

Q. The books cannot show any more than the monthly statements do unless the keeper of the books should get his information from some source other than the monthly reports?—A. No.

By Mr. COHEN:

Q. The books in San Francisco are the proper place in which to enter the details concerning the business of the company?—A. The books in San Francisco show the general business of the company.

Q. And that is the only place where such details are kept?—A. The only place where such details are kept.

Q. Have the letter press books that have been required about here been in your possession, or under your control?—A. They have not been in my possession or control.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Colburn, can you give us any light in regard to the custody of the stub check-books, or letter-press books, that have been alluded to?

Mr. COLBURN. None whatever. That matter is not in my line at all.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Do you know in whose line it would be?

Mr. COLBURN. No.

CALL FOR STUB CHECK-BOOKS, LETTER-PRESS BOOKS, AND ORIGINAL CHECKS.

Commissioner ANDERSON (addressing Mr. Cohen). We make a formal call on the company to produce its check-books containing the stubs of checks drawn on Fisk & Hatch, on the Fourth National Bank, on Eugene Kelly & Co., and on Speyer & Co. between 1872 and 1880. In regard to the letter-press books, we also call on you to produce them for the same period, with this explanation, that if those books are very numerous, and you will let me know where they are, I will go personally and select such of the letter books as we may want. We also call for the production of the original checks pertaining to the stubs, for the same period.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Wednesday, September 28, 1887.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I beg leave to read an official communication to your body, signed by T. J. Potter, vice-president of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. It explains itself, and is as follows:

COMMUNICATION FROM VICE-PRESIDENT POTTER, OF THE UNION PACIFIC, ON THE RELATIONS OF THE MAIN LINE TO ITS BRANCHES.

UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY,
OFFICE OF THE VICE-PRESIDENT,
Omaha, Nebr., September 19, 1887.

To Messrs. PATTISON, ANDERSON, AND LITTLER,
United States Pacific Railway Commission:

Understanding that, at your session at Omaha, you had expressed a desire that officers of the Union Pacific Railway would submit written statements of their views on any matters falling within the scope of your investigation, I have taken the liberty of offering you briefly some facts and suggestions which occur to me as having direct bearing on the relations of the subsidized, or main line, to its branches, and which has already been treated as an important matter of inquiry by you.

After the construction and successful inauguration of the Union Pacific Railway as a main or trunk line and the most important link in the chain of roads designed by the Government and people of this country, to permanently bind the Pacific States to the Federal Union, it became evident to the managers that the enterprise would not long continue self-supporting, if left dependent on the transcontinental traffic—between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts—for which it must compete with the cheaper transportation of the ocean, as well as other transcontinental railways then projected. The company was compelled in self-defense, for self-preservation, to push out feeders, or branches, into sections capable of agricultural development, and into mining districts and the live-stock regions, from which a supporting traffic could be drawn to the main line, and, at the same time, occupy territory which would otherwise be invaded by competing railways. In this it was simply following the well-established policy of every large and successful system of railways in the West—such as the Illinois Central, the Burlington, the Northwestern, the Rock Island, and the Saint Paul.

It is within my personal knowledge that the Union Pacific Company has only followed the example of older corporations in its policy of sustaining its branches by a system of divisions of joint revenue which gives them a higher rate of compensation per mile than is accorded to the main line. I may add, without fear of contradiction, that in most cases to which I have referred the allowances to branch and connecting roads have been more liberal than those made by the Union Pacific under its constructive mileage system. You will note that in the cases I refer to there is the same diversity in the divisions made as obtains on our line. This arises from the varying circumstances which surround each case, and which must be determined on its merits, without regard to others.

I know of no exact, arbitrary rule by which to determine in all cases the ratio which the compensation of branches or connections should bear to trunk lines, and do not believe any such rule can be formulated. The whole situation in every case must be taken into account, and the conclusion arrived at should stand, or be varied only in the light of experience and by actual results.

When a new feeder is built into an undeveloped or partially developed section the manager should carefully estimate the volume of traffic and travel he can command for a given period; the average length of haul; the return lading for his cars; the grades to overcome; the best manner to utilize the power and equipment, and the forces necessary to man and operate his road at the least cost. His judgment, then, as to the relative ratio this branch should receive must be experimental and subject to change when the conditions change. But if this branch is so located that it can connect and sell its traffic to another and competing line, whatever that line would pay for the traffic should be the measure of its rights against the parent company, or should, at least, have great weight in determining them.

It seems to me this last consideration has been disregarded by the Union Pacific Company in fixing its present low divisions for some of its most important branches.

At the present time the Union Pacific Company operates nearly 3,000 miles of branches. Of these the constructive mileage divisions on about 350 miles are, in dividing joint freight earnings, 1½ miles to 1 mile of the main line; 800 miles, 1¼ miles to 1 mile; 1,000 miles, 1½ miles to 1 mile; 125 miles, 2 miles to 1 mile.

By this method of dividing it will be observed that branches get this allowance only upon traffic actually interchanged with the main line, and only upon the actual distance it transports the property. It may have all the outlays incident to collecting, storing, loading, and switching, for a haul of 5, 10, or 20 miles against a possible haul of 500 or 1,000 miles over the main line, and if, by competition or for other cause, the main line is forced to reduce its rates on business interchanged with branches taking constructive mileage divisions, these branches must stand their pro rata proportion of such reductions.

Now let me direct your attention to a few of the many cases analogous to ours, in which branches are given special advantages on joint traffic by constructive mileage, percentage, or arbitrary divisions.

The Illinois Central allows its branches an "arbitrary" of 25 per cent. for any distance until the haul on the main and branch lines becomes equal, when the division are made pro rata per mile. Thus for a haul of 10 miles on the branch and 90 miles on the main line the branch would receive 25 per cent. of the joint rate, though its service represents only 10 per cent. of the total haul.

As the Illinois Central Company pays to the State 7 per cent. of its gross earnings, the same question was raised several years ago by the legislature that has been raised by Congress in respect to the Union Pacific and its branches. Under the impression that the Illinois Central management was favoring its branches for the purpose of reducing the gross sum from which the State received its 7 per cent., a legislative committee was appointed to investigate and report. After thorough examination, including the testimony of disinterested experts, the policy of the company in developing and sustaining its branch system was fully vindicated.

One of the complaints made in the State's behalf in this case was that the Illinois Central had improperly allowed a branch $21.25 for its haul of 112 miles while taking for its main line $8 for 81 miles "car haul," the through rate per car-load being $29.25.

In its report upon this and other charges the committee says:

"This question of 'car haul' is one on which the committee had grave doubts as to its justness and fairness, compared with a due and proper regard for the interests of the State, it being entitled to 7 per cent. of the gross earnings of the Illinois Central Railroad on its lines in Illinois, as provided by its charter. But, after the most diligent and impartial inquiry and careful consideration, your committee have concluded that the fixed car haul rate of $8 from Gilman to Chicago, a distance of 81 miles, is substantially a fair and just proportionate allowance to the main line in its earnings; and that a fixed car haul rate of $6 is a fair and just proportionate allowance from Kankakee to Chicago, a distance of 56 miles.

"And said conclusion is based upon the following, among other reasons:

"First. As far as we could learn, and as shown by the testimony of other railroad managers who have no interest in the question, it is the universal rule of an auxiliary line to get a much larger proportionate share of the car haul rate than the main or trunk line, because the auxiliary line, or 'feeder,' has all the trouble and expense originating or producing the freight; they perform all the station service, switching and train service, and in many cases for only a short haul; whereas the main line has no extra train service, station service, or switching service, but simply adds it to their regular train, and, with little or no cost to them, deliver the car to its destination.

"Second. The auxiliary line that produces the business must and should have the greater per cent. proportionate to the mileage, for the reason that they have to keep up their track, station, and train service, with a comparatively small volume of business; whereas the main line requires but little if any extra track, train, or station service, to carry these through car hauls to their destination, and on account of their larger volume of business can afford to do it at a less rate.

"Third. We think it a fair rate for the reason that other roads offer to take the car loads of the Gilman and Springfield to Chicago, from Gilman, at a fixed car haul of $7 per car, and we think it best for the interests of the Illinois Central and for the State, that the Illinois Central proper should accept a car haul rate of $8 per car for Chicago than to let the Gilman and Springfield road sell its business at Gilman to the Wabash at $7 per car. In that event the Illinois Central proper would lose the $8 per car on that business, and consequently the State lose its 7 per cent., or 56 cents on each car; and the same reasons and the same principles apply in the same way to the Iuka-Ilake division.

"Fourth. We find, from investigation, that it is the practical experience of railroad men that these auxiliary lines will not pay operating expenses and interest on their bonds if they were required to do business with trunk or main lines on a strictly pro rata mileage basis."

Under a contract between the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and the Burlington and Missouri River road in Iowa for the division of joint through rates on stock shipped from points 10 to 50 miles west of the Mississippi river to Chicago, at a through rate of $50 per car-load, the Iowa "feeder" received $23 for its short haul and the Burlington received $27 for its haul of 207 miles to Chicago.

After the Burlington and Missouri of Iowa was completed to the Missouri river and consolidated with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, divisions for interchanged traffic were established between the lines east and west of the Missouri river, by which the Burlington and Missouri River Company in Nebraska received 50 per cent. of the through rate for an average haul of 125 miles and the main line 50 per cent. for its haul of 486 miles. This concession was made because any competitor of the Burlington would gladly have purchased the traffic at that rate, and for the further reason that it was the settled policy of the Burlington management to amply sustain its feeder branches and enable them to push into and develop new territory to feed the main trunk. And this, to my mind, is precisely the course to be pursued by the Union Pacific Company. The Burlington has now a system of branch lines west of the Missouri which earns for itself from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 annually, besides contributing a vast amount of business to its lines east of the river. The same policy was adopted in respect to its Kansas City branch, which was allowed 40 per cent. of through rates on an average haul of 75 miles, the trunk line from Chicago taking 60 per cent.

I might cite many instances in which other strong corporations have built up extensive systems of auxiliary and feeding lines by similar liberal policy, but think it unnecessary to burden you with further details. I will only add two instances which have recently come to my knowledge on the Pacific coast.

The Oregon Railway and Navigation and Northern Pacific companies allow the Palouse branch a constructive mileage of 2 miles to 1, and the Northern Pacific has recently contracted to give the Oregon and Washington Territory Railroad a pro rata division on traffic to and from Tacoma, with an arbitrary added of 20 per cent. of its own revenue between Wallula and Puget Sound, or the equivalent of 34 miles to 1 mile in favor of the connecting road.

Having spent most of my active railroad life in connection with and in the midst of the development of these great "systems" of railway to which I have referred, and which have grown from single stems to vast aggregations of branches, each averaging from 3,000 to 6,000 miles of prosperous and successful railway, it appears clear to my mind that the surest, if not the only, way to insure the permanent success of the Union Pacific system is to pursue the same policy that has produced these results. The small divisions allowed to some of its present branches hardly afford enough revenue to properly maintain their efficiency and discharge their fixed liabilities.

With the consent of the Government, the Union Pacific should support its feeders in the same liberal manner as its powerful competitors have and are now doing. This would bring to its aid private capital, if needed, to occupy rich sections of tributary country, swell the volume of business to the main line, and make more certain its final payment of its debt to the United States.

Respectfully submitted.

T. J. POTTER,
Vice-President.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you anything else to add?

Mr. DILLON. I have a request to make, which I have put in writing because I think it is important enough to justify it, and, with your permission, I will read that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. A communication from whom?

Mr. DILLON. From myself, as counsel of the company. It is as follows:

COMMUNICATION FROM MR. JOHN F. DILLON.

[The Union Pacific Railway Company, law department. John F. Dillon, general solicitor. Office, 73 Broadway.]

NEW YORK, September 27, 1887.

To the PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION:

GENTLEMEN: As representing the Union Pacific Railway Company, I make the following statement and request: As early as May last your investigations began in this city, and were devoted for some weeks constantly to an examination of the books, accounts, and methods of the Union Pacific Railway Company in this city. It was then resumed in the city of Boston, at the main office of the company, and afterwards continued at Omaha and other places along the line of the railway company. In May the Commission issued a public circular, addressed in blank, widely distributed and published, stating in detail the lines of inquiry mapped out for the Commission by Congress, and concluding with the request that if the person who receives it has no information on the subjects mentioned in the circular he would refer it to persons who may possess such information. This circular was signed by the Commissioners. This request has been made public, and the whole world has been invited to appear as witnesses before the Commission. This invitation has been availed of here and elsewhere by scores of persons, among whom have been persons who have had business litigations or disputes with the company, and who have sought to use the Commission for personal and private ends. Everything anybody had to say, whether admissible by the rules of evidence or not—hearsay, rumors, idle gossip—has been received without objection by the company.

Immediately upon the Commissioners commencing their labors the question arose whether the company would avail itself of its legal rights and refuse to produce any books, papers, or documents which would not be demandable in a regular judicial investigation; and the management of the company decided to interpose no obstacles or objections of any kind to the most thorough possible examination, and the Commission will bear witness that they have not. Accordingly the company has produced every book, paper, or document in its possession or under its control which has at any time been demanded by the Commission or by their experts. In Boston, where the records and main archives of the company are kept, the company set apart for the use of the Commission a room in which a large corps of the assistants and experts of the Commission have been examining the books and papers of the company for more than one hundred days, with liberty to make extracts or copies therefrom ad libitum. This has been done ex parte; and now, on behalf of the company, I make the request that, as a simple matter of justice, if anything has been found by the Commission which requires explanation, we shall be notified of the specific matter and be given an opportunity to make such explanation; and I am instructed by the company's management to say further, that if the Commission desires on any point any other information which is in the company's power to give, it will be glad to comply with its request.

Having gone through this long ex parte scrutiny, withholding nothing from the Commission, whether in the form of documents or in the personal examination of witnesses, the management of the company is, above all, most anxious that if the Commission wish for any other evidence or information bearing upon the company's affairs it will call for the same. For months, and even years, through the public press, in Congress, and elsewhere, a demand has been made for an investigation of this sort, and allegations have constantly been put forth that it would lead to developments of a character most injurious to the company's interests. The company has always been aware that such would not be the case, and courted investigation. An investigation of the most complete kind has now been made, and if anything can be done to make it more complete the company calls upon the Commission to do it, in order that those who have made such allegation may produce such evidence, or, if they fail, they may hereafter hold their peace.

Furthermore, there are two points which the law creating the Commission especially directed them to inquire into. One of these related to the construction of branch lines, which, it was currently asserted, the company had operated in the nature of suckers rather than as feeders of the subsidized line. The second related to alle-

...ges in the division of traffic which had been made to those lines. A large body of evidence has been placed before the Commission bearing on these points. The company is most anxious at this late stage of the investigation not to delay the Commission or encumber its record with unnecessary evidence. It is the opinion of the management that freedom to develop the system of the Union Pacific and to build branch lines in order to do so is vital to the salvation of that system and to the ability of the company to meet its obligations to the Government at maturity, or at any time subsequent thereto. Investigation on these points, therefore, goes to the very essence of the company's case. If the Commission desire, the company stands ready to produce other and further witnesses as to what is necessary in the construction of branch lines and what has been the practice generally in regard to allowances to such lines. The company will not bring forward this evidence unless the Commission desire it to do so. The company is satisfied that the evidence already adduced is entirely adequate to make out the company's case. The management therefore is willing to rest its case on the record as now made up. If, however, the Commission desire further or additional evidence on these points, the company stands ready to produce anything that may be called for.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN F. DILLON,
General Solicitor Union Pacific Company.

Mr. DILLON. I understood that the Commission desired to close the testimony on Friday. We have witnesses that we can call in regard to branch lines. I am aware of your having devoted a large amount of time to that investigation. These witnesses would speak generally, I think, as to the practice of other railway companies and, perhaps, produce nothing but cumulative evidence on those points.

AS TO CALLS.

Commissioner LITTLER. Do you know whether the Union Pacific people have furnished all the calls we have made from time to time? [To Mr. Mink.] Do you know, Mr. Mink?

Mr. MINK. Not all. There are a few that we should like to put in.

Commissioner LITTLER. What calls have remained unanswered?

Mr. MINK. Some few calls for copies of contracts, one with the Western Union and one with the Pacific Hotel Company—one statement with reference to rebates and one as to cash receipts.

Commissioner LITTLER. And one as to aid from municipal and public bodies.

Mr. MINK. That is another. I think it doubtful whether you can get them all by Friday, but we will do our best. I think everything is ready except that one statement. Some of the statements are on the way from Omaha now.

AS TO MR. DILLON'S REQUEST.

Commissioner LITTLER. We can answer Judge Dillon to-morrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Potter is here and is anxious to return. He is one of the witnesses whom I should like to call if you wish to hear further testimony on the points I have indicated.

Commissioner LITTLER. Will to-morrow morning do for him?

Mr. DILLON. Yes; I will request him to remain.

MR. FRENCH HAS NO STATEMENT TO MAKE.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Do I understand that Mr. French desires to give any information to this Commission in regard to those moneys?

Mr. THEOPHILUS FRENCH. I believe not.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I believe it appears on record that early in the investigation we invited Mr. French to appear before us and desired to hear what he had to say.

Commissioner LITTLER (addressing Mr. French). You say you have no desire to make any statement to this Commission?

Mr. FRENCH. No, I have not.

Mr. DILLON. I may say that the telegraphic relations of the company to the Government have been very fully investigated.

The CHAIRMAN. We want to get it on our record without putting in the printed record of the Congressional inquiry—the Warner report of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. DILLON. There are two sides to that telegraph question. If Mr. Bates, who, I understand, is to be examined, goes into that matter I should want to present the other side.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Wednesday, September 28, 1887.

Afternoon session.

D. H. BATES, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your business?—Answer. I am president and general manager of the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company.

Q. How long have you been connected with that company?—A. Nearly four years.

Q. Were you before the Committees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in March, 1886?—A. Yes.

Q. Who was chairman of that committee?—A. If I remember rightly, the chairman was Hon. James H. Blount.

RELATIONS OF THE AIDED ROADS TO THE TELEGRAPH SYSTEM.

Q. Did you give your testimony in regard to the relation of the aided railroads to the telegraph system?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you anything to add or to suggest other than that which you testified to before that committee?—A. No, sir; I think my testimony then given covers all that I might state in connection with that subject.

Q. Have you a copy of your testimony with you?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you a copy in your possession?—A. I have had it in my office, and think that I could readily get a copy.

Q. Have you read it over lately?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you produce to the Commission a copy of the testimony in that matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you read the printed copy of your testimony in the report of the House of Representatives which I now hand you [handing a book to the witness], being a report of General Warner from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. [H. R. Report No. 3501, 49th Congress, 2d session.]—A. Yes, I have examined this as carefully as possible.

Q. Can you say that that is a correct copy of your testimony before the committee?—A. Yes; that is a correct copy.

TESTIMONY OF WITNESS IN THE WARNER REPORT PUT IN EVIDENCE.

(The testimony of Mr. D. H. Bates before the Warner committee, above referred to, is offered as matter of record in this proceeding.)

Q. Have you anything further to suggest to the Commission in reference to the telegraph system in connection with the aided roads?—A. No; I think General Warner's recommendation and report covered the whole ground thoroughly.

Q. Have you any suggestions to make to the Commission?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. JOHN F. DILLON:

Q. There were other witnesses examined before that commission?—A. I believe there was, sir.

Q. Can you name some of them?—A. Dr. Norvin Green, vice-president, and Mr. John Van Horn, of the Western Union Telegraph Company. I think also W. D. Somerville, the superintendent of press transmission of that company; Mr. J. C. Reiff, and others whose names will be found in the copy before me.

Q. Have you examined the testimony of those witnesses as printed in this Congressional report?—A. Only very generally, not with any detail so as to warrant me in speaking of it.

Q. You have no reason to doubt that it is correctly reported, have you?—A. I have not; I think it is.

Mr. DILLON. I do not exactly understand whether you offer the whole report or only a part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Only Mr. Bates's testimony. I will say that I have no objection to the whole report going in, but the report is offered specially with reference to Mr. Bates's testimony before that committee, so as to place the matter on record in our report.

AS TO TESTIMONY OF DR. NORVIN GREEN AND OTHERS.

Mr. DILLON. I may state that Dr. Norvin Green and others to whom Mr. Bates has referred are in the city, and if you will accept this as substantially their testimony before the committee in like manner as you did Mr. Bates's, I will offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. So far as you know, the evidence as given in that report is correct?

Mr. DILLON. I was not present when it was given, but I have no doubt it is. It was taken stenographically.

Commissioner LITTLER. Does the act of Congress in relation to evidence make that evidence?

Mr. DILLON. I doubt whether any of it is in the nature of a judicial inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. This testimony from the Warner report is not offered before this Commission as a matter of technical "evidence." It is offered as testimony taken by Congress in an investigation as to telegraph matters. The telegraph question in connection with the Pacific roads was thoroughly investigated by Congress and witnesses from all parts of the country were examined. This Commission simply desires to place on record the fact that the matter of the telegraph system in connection with the Pacific railroads has been placed before the Commission.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. General Swayne attended here this morning as representative of the Western Union Company, understanding that this inquiry was to be gone into. He expects to come this afternoon if there is any necessity for it.

Mr. LITTLER. The only object I had in my remark to you was to say that if the act of Congress in relation to evidence and depositions makes it testimony, the whole of it may be considered in evidence.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I should prefer to offer it, and that you allow me to go through the book; and if you do not care to have the whole report come before you, let me put in such matter as I wish.

THE TESTIMONY ADMITTED.

The CHAIRMAN. It is only meant as matter to be placed on the record of the Commission so that we may inquire, as far as we possibly can, how far the railroad property reaches into the telegraph system, and whether there has been any violation of the law in reference to the contract made between the Pacific railroads and the Western Union Company, transferring this property out of the hands of the railroad company.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I move that it be received.

Commissioner LITTLER. I second the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

A STATEMENT BY MR. JOHN F. DILLON AS TO THE TELEGRAPH.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. If you will consider me as under oath, I will make a brief statement that will be useful to the Commission, and without that you will find great difficulty in understanding the exact status unless you read that report. There have been quite a number of litigations between the Western Union and other companies, and the Union Pacific and the Kansas Pacific companies, which have had the effect of defining the status of the telegraph lines and the rights of the Pacific railroads with some degree of accuracy. I state what I understand to be the result. The Union Pacific Company, under its charter, which was to build a railroad and telegraph line, built, as I understand it, on the Union Pacific line proper, between Omaha and Ogden, a telegraph line of its own, which is there to-day on one side of the track.

CERTAIN RAILROAD COMPANIES AUTHORIZED TO ENTER INTO ARRANGEMENTS WITH CERTAIN TELEGRAPH COMPANIES.

The ninteenth section of the act of 1862 contained a provision that—

The several railroad companies herein named are authorized to enter into an arrangement with the Pacific Telegraph Company, the Overland Telegraph Company, and the California State Telegraph Company, so that the present line of telegraph between the Missouri River and San Francisco may be moved upon or along the line of said railroad and branches as fast as said roads and branches are built; and if said arrangement be entered into, and the transfer of said telegraph line be made in accordance therewith to the line of said railroad and branches, such transfer shall, for all purposes of this act, be held and considered a fulfillment on the part of said railroad companies of the provisions of this act in regard to the construction of said lines of telegraph. And, in case of disagreement, said telegraph companies are authorized to remove their line of telegraph along and upon the line of railroad herein contemplated without prejudice to the rights of said railroad companies named herein.

Now, at the date of the passage of that act, in 1862, as I understand it (this is matter of history), under several acts of Congress, which had, to some extent, subsidized the line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, these three companies named in section 19, namely, the Pacific Telegraph Company, the Overland Telegraph Company, and the California State Telegraph Company, owned an independent line then in operation from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean.

UNION PACIFIC BUILT ITS OWN TELEGRAPH LINE.

In regard to the Union Pacific road, between Omaha and Ogden, no such arrangement as this authorized to be made was entered into. If it had been there would have been but one line of telegraph. The Union Pacific, between those points, built its own telegraph line.

Under the authority of section 19, and without any consent by or contract with the Union Pacific Company, these companies, whose rights have since been acquired by the Western Union, moved existing line of telegraph on to the right of way of the Union Pacific, where it now is. So that there exists to-day two lines of telegraph on the Union Pacific Railroad: one built by the Union Pacific Company, and the other built under authority of this act of Congress by the companies therein named, to whose rights of ownership the Western Union Company has succeeded.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC LEASED UNION PACIFIC'S TELEGRAPH FRANCHISE.

I may say further, that long anterior to my professional connection with the Union Pacific Company, the Atlantic and Pacific Company obtained a lease from the Union Pacific Company of its telegraph franchise; it then perhaps being the owner of the other line, though I will not say that with certainty. It was decided by Judge McCrary, in an opinion which you will find reported in his reports, that that lease was ultra vires, but as the Union Pacific had received a large pecuniary consideration for it, namely, if my memory serves me rightly, a large amount of the stock of the Atlantic and Pacific, which they had sold, the Union Pacific could not be permitted to resume possession of the property until it had accounted for that on equitable principles, and reimbursed the Atlantic and Pacific Company, and the Western Union as its successor, and we are enjoined from taking possession of that telegraph line until such accounting.

Commissioner LITTLER. That case will be found in the Supreme Court reports, I presume?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That case is referred to in the report of the Warner committee.

UNITED STATES TELEGRAPH COMPANY GIVEN RIGHTS.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. On the 2d of July, 1864, if my memory serves me—the date of the passage of the amendatory Pacific Railroad act—Congress passed another act which I have been in the habit of calling the Idaho act, which gave to the United States Telegraph Company the same rights as those given by the original section 19 to these three companies; that is, the same rights in respect to the Kansas Pacific line that that section gave to these other companies in respect to the Union Pacific line. But there is this difference between the two cases: Congress, by this act of 1864, gave to the United States Telegraph Company, a corporation of New York, the same powers which it had given to these three other companies in the original act of 1862, and under that authority (which you will find reported in Judge Miller's opinion, to which I will presently refer, and which was the basis of that opinion) the Kansas Pacific and the United States Telegraph Company (or the Western Union, its successor) entered into a contract by which the line of telegraph now on the Kansas Pacific road was constructed by this company, or jointly by it and the Western Union Company; and Mr. Justice Miller, when the litigation ceased in respect to it, decided that the authority to make such an arrangement given by the act of Congress justified the making of that contract and that it was neither illegal nor ultra vires, but valid.

KANSAS PACIFIC AND UNION PACIFIC ENJOINED FROM TAKING POSSESSION OF TELEGRAPH LINE.

The result of that was that he enjoined the Kansas Pacific and the Union Pacific, as its successor, from taking possession of the telegraph line on that road or doing anything in violation of that contract, which he held to be valid. That you will find in his opinion, which is printed in this compilation.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and it is in that report.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The result of that was he sought to enjoin us when we sought to take exclusive possession of that road. If my memory does not deceive me, he also held that the terms of that contract by which the company was to do an exclusive commercial business were legal.

In that condition of things, after these adjudications, in both of which the Union Pacific Company was, substantially, defeated in the courts, the existing contract between the Western Union Company and the Union Pacific Company was made. That appears in the report, and is, as I understand, the contract under which those companies are working to-day.

That is all the explanatory statement that I have to make.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Who represented the Union Pacific Company in the litigation before Judge McCrary?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I did.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Who represented the Kansas Pacific in the litigation before Judge Miller?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. It was then consolidated, and the consolidation was represented by Judge Usher, myself, and the company's counsel. We made the best fight we could. The companies were hostile then.

The CHAIRMAN. You delivered an opinion that is quoted here concerning the transfer of that property at the time.

AN OPINION BY MR. DILLON CONCERNING THE TRANSFER.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I am glad you have referred to that. The American Union at that time was a rival of the Western Union. Quite early in 1880, soon after the consolidation, the American Union Telegraph Company made a demand, the nature of which I infer from a copy of the opinion which Mr. Bradley and I gave, that the Union Pacific Company was bound to receive and transmit messages for the public or for any other telegraph company under the penalties prescribed in the act of Congress. When that demand was made on the Union Pacific Company by the American Union, the Union Pacific Company consulted its counsel (Mr. Bradley and myself) as to its legal obligations, and we gave the opinion to which you have referred. Acting on that opinion, the company undertook to seize possession of the line on the ground that the transfer to the Atlantic and Pacific and through it to the Western Union was ultra vires. Judge McCrary sustained that view of the matter so far as concerned the line which the Union Pacific built, but he also held that we should be restrained and enjoined from taking possession of it until we had repaid the amount we had received under the arrangement. In giving that opinion my attention, or Mr. Bradley's, was not directed to this 18th section of the act of Congress of 1862, nor did we know the rights which had grown up in favor of the Western Union Company under that. That was really the turning point of the litigation in the courts.

AMERICAN UNION AND WESTERN UNION CONSOLIDATED.

The CHAIRMAN. What took place immediately after that decision of the court; was there not a Union of all the companies?

Mr. DILLON. Some time after that (I cannot recall the date) the American Union and the Western Union were consolidated.

Mr. SWAYNE. In January, 1881.

Mr. DILLON. General Swayne fixes the date as January, 1881. So that, a year after the giving of that opinion, the companies were consolidated.

The CHAIRMAN. So that all the wires, whatever companies they may have belonged to prior to the consolidation, are now under one control—that of the Western Union?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. No, sir; I do not so understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it not so found in the investigation in Congress by the Warner Committee.

WESTERN UNION DOES NOT CONTROL UNION PACIFIC'S TELEGRAPH LINE.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The existing contract between the Western Union and the Union Pacific is here. It shows, on the other hand, according to my understanding of it, that the Western Union does not control, on the Union Pacific road, the line of telegraph which the Union Pacific Company owns. Of course the Western Union controls its own line. The peculiarity of the situation, you perceive, is that the Western Union has a line of its own on the Union Pacific road. The railroad company has also a line of its own; and this existing contract is a contract for joint work and division of profits.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the railroad company operate its lines for general messages, other than the railroad messages.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Yes. It receives messages from everybody. You had better get that detail from the company. But nobody that offers a message to any point at which there is a commercial office is refused, as I understand it, by the officers or agents of the Union Pacific Company.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they known as the agents of the Union Pacific Company or of the Western Union Company?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. As to the relations between the two companies, there is a provision as to how they shall be, but I think in most cases the agents are agents and operators of the railroad company.

The CHAIRMAN. Was not the consideration to be paid for the surrender of the wires of the Union Pacific Company to the Western Union Company, under the contract, one-half of the receipts that are monthly or annually accounted for by the Union Pacific Company to the Western Union, and paid over.

NO SURRENDER OF UNION PACIFIC'S WIRES TO WESTERN UNION.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I do not understand that there has been any such surrender, or any surrender, of the wires of the Union Pacific to the Western Union.

The CHAIRMAN. I call your attention to the fact that some items of receipts in Omaha consisted of amounts, from time to time, paid over by the Western Union Company to the Union Pacific in consideration of the contract to which you have referred.

PROVISION FOR A DIVISION OF EARNINGS.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. There is a provision here for a division of the earnings (I cannot state what it is) of the two lines. I may state, in reference to the matter of that contract of July 1, 1881, that Mr. Frederick L. Ames, as a representative of the Union Pacific, had it in charge, and, although I had a general relation of counsel to the Union Pacific Company in the matter of that contract, I notified the Western Union that I acted for the Union Pacific Company. This contract recites on its face the existence of these various litigations—unsettled litigations, really. Those suits were never pressed to final decision; and the very moment this contract is terminated, by its provisions, these suits and the original rights of the Western Union and the Union Pacific revive.

POWER OF UNION PACIFIC TO MAKE CONTRACT WITH OTHER THAN WESTERN UNION.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the contract would it be within the power of the Union Pacific to make a contract with any telegraph company other than the Western Union, east of the Missouri River, for the purpose of sending messages?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I have not read it for a long while. I do not know whether there is any prohibition—whether this is an exclusive contract—or not.

The CHAIRMAN. As matter of fact, would they not be compelled to recur to the Western Union for the purpose of making any such arrangement?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Read section 3.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON (reading):

SEC. 3. The railway company, so far as it legally may, hereby grants and agrees to assure to the telegraph company the exclusive right of way.

NO OTHER COMPANY HAS LEGAL RIGHT TO DEMAND SAME CONTRACT AS WITH UNION PACIFIC.

"So far as it legally may," no farther. I may say that since that time the Supreme Court of the United States has decided in two cases, in effect, that no other telegraph company has any legal right to say to the Union Pacific Company, "You have made a certain contract with the Western Union Company, and we come to you and demand that you shall make a like one with us." I refer to the case from Colorado, of the Denver and New Orleans Railroad Company, and also to the more recent case in the Supreme Court of the United States, known as the "Express case."

Commissioner ANDERSON. You mean it is reported in the Supreme Court reports.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Yes.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Could you give us the volume?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I will supply it to you. That was the point in both those cases. You can readily see, gentlemen, that that must be so. We own that property. You have a mortgage on it. You are the Government. Here are rival lines of telegraph. We own one and a private telegraph company own the other. Now, the act of Congress says that we may make such arrangements as we see fit. If they are fair arrangements they hurt nobody. That is the contract, and the Baltimore and Ohio or any other company has no legal right to go to the Union Pacific and say, "You have got to duplicate with us your contract with another company."

UNION PACIFIC OBLIGED TO TRANSMIT ANY COMMERCIAL MESSAGE.

Commissioner ANDERSON. In regard to what you have stated with reference to the Union Pacific Company having its own line, the power of operating it, and the practice of receiving the railroad company's messages, I call your attention to the second section and the fourth Article:

The railway company further agrees that the employés shall transmit over the lines owned, controlled, or operated by the parties hereto, all commercial telegraph business offered at the railway company's offices, and shall account to the telegraph company exclusively for all such business and the receipts thereon, as provided herein.

So that if you do any business over this line it is for account of the Western Union.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. This makes it obligatory on us to transmit any commercial message, to do our whole duty to the public. Then the receipts coming from that are disposed of by later provisions of this contract, by which, upon some basis, they are divided between the two companies. The only question that can possibly arise under the provisions is whether the Union Pacific is getting a fair proportion of its receipts, so as to make it a fair contract to its stockholders and the Government.

Commissioner LITTLER. What do you know about that?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I only know that the Union Pacific think it a very advantageous contract for us. I, of course, have no personal knowledge.

OPERATION OF TELEGRAPH LINES BY LAND-GRANT ROADS.

The CHAIRMAN. At page VII of the Warner report the committee say:

Do the land-grant roads now maintain and operate telegraph lines as they operate their roads, affording equal facilities to the public in general, or do they not? The evidence presented to the committee seems conclusive that they do not, but, on the other hand, that they have entered into contracts with the Western Union Telegraph Company by which said company does most of the business for the roads themselves and practically the entire commercial business done over the wires stretched along the land-grant roads. Copies of these contracts will be found in the appendix to the report. These contracts are exclusive in their nature, and practically place the entire control of the business between the Atlantic and Pacific States in the hands of one telegraph company.

Further on in the same report the committee say:

The right of the Western Union Telegraph Company, or any other telegraph company, to construct and operate telegraph lines from the Missouri River to the Pacific and to erect poles on the right of way of the railroad companies, upon terms to be agreed upon between the parties, does not arise in the case under consideration, which is simply and solely whether or not the land-grant railroads do maintain and operate for the use of the Government and the public, with equal facilities and rights to all, telegraph lines as required in the several charters and grants constituting contracts between said companies and the United States. Your committee finds that telegraph lines are not maintained and operated as railroads are, nor, in the opinion of your committee, as was contemplated in the acts making the grants, but, on the other hand, that some or all of said companies, or their successors, have, in violation of the true intent and meaning of said acts, transferred to the Western Union Telegraph Company the use and operation, in whole or in part, of the telegraph lines property belonging to them, and the exercise of their telegraph franchises, thereby impairing the lien of the United States on the property of said companies, as well as preventing the public use of such telegraph lines.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. That report shows on its face that the members of the committee who made it are not acquainted with either the statutory or the adjudged rights of the respective parties.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Without referring to any question of rights, is it not true that the actual results of the arrangements which have been made leave the complete and exclusive control of the telegraph business in the hands of the Western Union?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I do not so understand it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I mean the practical control. Does any other company forward any messages?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. As respects the Kansas Pacific line, it is adjudged by Mr. Justice Miller that the company built it and have the exclusive right to do a commercial business upon it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Not exclusive of the Kansas Pacific Company itself?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I think that is his decision.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Exclusive of the railroad company?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Exclusive of the railroad company, because that was the contract, and he says it was valid. I want you to read that opinion.

Commissioner ANDERSON. If that is the scope of the decision, of course they do the exclusive business because the courts say they are entitled to it.

A VERY GOOD CONTRACT.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. We think we made a very good contract, by which we get part of the commercial receipts of that road. I do not know what Mr. Bates testified before the Warner committee, but I understand at that time the Baltimore and Ohio was not within hundreds of miles of either terminus of the Union Pacific road, either at Kansas City or at Omaha. The point in dispute is this, I think: There is no pretense that any message tendered either by any individual or by the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company, or any other telegraph company, is not received and transmitted on the same terms that it is received and transmitted for anybody else. Mr. Bates does not say that that is the case. But the point in controversy is whether the Baltimore and Ohio Company, or any other company, has a right to come up to Omaha and Kansas City and say to us, "You have made one contract with the Western Union Company. You have got to duplicate that contract, and make it with us."

Commissioner ANDERSON. You say, if I understand you, that Judge Miller went further, and said (and that I cannot understand) that the rights which the Western Union Company had acquired under the act of Congress and by purchase from the companies enumerated, were exclusive of the right of the railway company.

DISTINCTION TO BE BORNE IN MIND.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. No; I say that on the Kansas Pacific (you must keep the distinction in mind) there never was more than one line built, and that was built jointly by the railroad and the telegraph company. A provision of that contract was that the telegraph company should have the exclusive right to do commercial business, and Mr. Justice Miller said that that contract was authorized and was valid. On the Union Pacific line each of these companies has a line of its own, and they have made, under the act of Congress (the eighteenth section of the act of 1862), the contract of 1881, an arrangement in regard to this business which we say that committee was not justified in reporting as legal or unauthorized. The committee's report is in that respect in the teeth of the adjudications on that subject.

Commissioner LITTLER. What action of Congress, if any, followed that report?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I am not aware of any.

The CHAIRMAN. A bill was presented. That was all. It was not enacted into law.

INCONSISTENCY OF OPPONENTS OF UNION PACIFIC.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. It is only another instance of the inconsistency of the opponents of the Union Pacific Company. In one breath they say, "You owe this debt to the Government, and you must pay it to the last farthing." In another breath they say, "This is public property, and if you make a contract with one person you must make a similar contract with every other person." That is a principle that no one would think of applying to the New York Central, or any other railroad.

THE ARRANGEMENT A CESSION TO THE WESTERN UNION COMPANY BY THE UNION PACIFIC OF ALL TELEGRAPH PRACTICE.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Omitting all questions of the relations of the Government as a creditor, and simply for the purpose of ascertaining whether what the Union Pacific has done is or is not in violation of the law under which it was chartered, please tell me, in regard to that road, whether there was a separate railroad telegraph line, and whether the arrangement which you have made is not, substantially, a cession to the Western Union Company of all practice on the part of the railroad company to operate its telegraph line?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I answer that, by the very provisions of the contract to which you called my attention, the stipulation is that the company should do a commercial business, and do all that is offered. My understanding of the practice under that contract is that it conforms to the provision, but I have no personal knowledge on that point. You will have to get that from either the railroad officers or the officers of the Western Union Company.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Wednesday, September 28, 1887.

JAMES MIDDLEDITH, being further examined, testified as follows:

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Question. At the close of your examination heretofore taken, you were asked whether you had any suggestion to offer as to what, in your judgment, ought to be the terms of adjustment between the United States and the Pacific Railroad Companies. To that question you made answer that you would submit your views within two or three months. Have you any views to submit to the Commission on that question?—Answer. I have not get them ready, but I will submit them.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We are unable to wait much longer.

MISREPRESENTATIONS OF THE NATURE OF THE GOVERNMENT LIEN.

The WITNESS. You can have them in the course of a couple of days. I submit to this examination at the request of the chairman, simply to show the nature of the bills presented to the last Congress, to show where they failed to do justice to the Government in the matter of calculation, and to expose the misrepresentations that have been made as to the nature of the Government lien, as far as I am able.

GOVERNMENT LIEN EXTENDS OVER ALL BRANCHES OF UNION PACIFIC.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What are the misrepresentations to which you refer?—A. In the first place I hold that, according to the Thurman act, the Government lien extends over all the branch lines that have been constructed out of the proceeds of the income of the Union Pacific Company's subsidized line, or any of its properties or assets used in that way; because, under the Thurman act, the property and assets and the income of the Union Pacific Company are held for the lien of the United States; and any shape that they have since taken must, of course, be subject to that lien.

Q. On what do you base your views that you have just given to the Commission?—A. On the words of the law.

Q. What words of the law?—A. I could not quote it literally.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. I understand that you propose to submit your views in writing, do you?—A. Yes; I will do so.

Q. When can you do that?—A. I can give them to you in the course of a couple of days.

By Mr. JOHN F. DILLON:

Q. What is your business?—A. I am living on my income.

Q. Are you a lawyer?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not hesitate to give an opinion as to the legal construction of the act of Congress?—A. No.

Q. Were you summoned to attend here before?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you receive a circular from the Commission inviting you to come?—A. I received a summons by messenger O'Mara, I think.

Q. Your opinion is that if you have a mortgage on my house, lot, &c., and you are not satisfied with the mortgage, all you have to do is to and it is to say, "I will extend this mortgage to lot 9"?—A. No; nothing of the kind.

Q. Has the Government any more power than an individual to create a lien?

The WITNESS. Will you be kind enough to read that law of 1878?

SCOPE OF THE ORIGINAL LIEN.

Q. How extensive was the original lien of the Government?—A. It covered the railroad, the telegraph, and the lands to a certain extent.

Q. What part of the railroad?—A. The line between Omaha and Ogden.

Q. What part of the Kansas Pacific?—A. The eastern half, I think. It has about 1,400 miles, I think, altogether.

Q. That was the limit of the original line, was it?—A. Yes.

LIEN EXTENDED BY THURMAN ACT.

Q. In what way was the lien extended?—A. By the Thurman act, which has been determined by the decision of the Supreme Court.

Q. There was no question of lien in the case, was there?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you sure of that?

The WITNESS. Will you be kind enough to read it?

Q. Was there any question in the Thurman act case as to whether the lien extended to any particular property or not?—A. The Union Pacific, as I understand it, appealed from the Thurman act—appealed from the jurisdiction of Congress to extend its lien. The Thurman act was confirmed, and that lien was extended.

Q. And that is the basis of your judgment that the Supreme Court has decided that the Thurman act extended the lien?—A. I should think that ought to be final.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. That is all I have to ask the witness. It is about as useful as most lay opinions are on matters of law.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When did you first make yourself acquainted with questions affecting the Pacific railroads?—A. In 1885.

A GOOD CHANCE FOR A REFORM PRESIDENT TO MAKE DEMOCRATIC CAPITAL.

Q. What were your associations with railroads then?—A. A neighbor of mine, Mr. Coudert, was appointed Government director, and I incidentally told him I would look up the Union Pacific. I looked it up and found, in my judgment, a violation of the laws of 1873 and a diversion of the assets of the road, and presented those facts to Mr. Coudert; and I thought it would be a good chance for a reform President to make Democratic capital out of it, and I presented it to Mr. Cleveland.

JUDGE EDMUNDS SAYS UNION PACIFIC REPEATEDLY VIOLATED THURMAN ACT.

If Judge Dillon has any doubt as to whether I am wrong or not I can refer him to an authority that stands very high, that confirms my views as to the violation of those laws, namely, Judge Edmunds. In the debate in the Senate, on February 25, 1887, on the bill to which this Commission owes its origin, he will find that Judge Edmunds says the Union Pacific Company has repeatedly violated the provisions of the Thurman act, violations which the preceding Administration, though Republican, had not punished. He will also find that by the Thurman act the Government is entitled to interest on the advances made on coupons of the subsidy bonds. In both bills presented to Congress for the settlement of this debt that has been omitted. In the Outhwaite bill, the Union Pacific Company has been credited with $2,000,000 on its partial payments, which the Hoar bill omits. The Outhwaite bill makes the indebtedness of the Union Pacific $52,000,000, while the Hoar bill makes it $54,000,000.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I suggest that Mr. Middledith embody in his written communication to us any errors of computation or calculation that he may have discovered.

The WITNESS. I simply say it is known that the Union Pacific pays 5, 6, 7, and 8 per cent. on its mortgages and has even professed to earn 4 or 5 per cent. on its stock. I had a computation made by Professor Elliott, the Government actuary, at Washington, of what would be the difference between extending the debt on the Outhwaite plan and 5 per cent.; and the difference which the Government loses by accepting a settlement of 3 or 3½ per cent. is $111,000,000. In other words, even giving the company such an extension, they are getting a fresh subsidy from the United States greater than the debt.

As far as questions of law are concerned, I believe the Judiciary Committee decided against Mr. Dillon on the matter of the necessity for the indictment of these gentlemen who have violated the law of 1873, although the bill was simply reported favorably to the House. It never came to any question.

WITNESS BELIEVES IN AN EXTENSION.

Q. Have you considered the question of the adjustment of the debt to the Government on the basis of extension?—A. Yes, sir; I believe in making an extension of the debt. I do not believe in crippling the companies in any way.

Q. Will you submit to the Commission, in writing, your statement of it?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you considered the question of the settlement of the debt with the Government on the basis of an immediate settlement?—A. I have not.

Commissioner ANDERSON. A cash settlement.

The WITNESS. You mean the amount that would be proper to pay?

The CHAIRMAN. I mean an immediate settlement, whether cash or otherwise, provided it be immediate.

INTEREST PAID BY GOVERNMENT LUMPED IN COMPUTATION.

The WITNESS. I have not. I would like, before leaving the question of bills, to say something about how this Outhwaite bill was prepared. The Government has paid annually the interest on those bonds since 1867; $2,000,000, for instance, in 1867, and $2,000,000 in 1868. Every one of those $2,000,000 has been lumped in computation, and instead of the Government getting interest on it, the whole has been thrown forward to 1907 and discount deducted from their payments made twenty years before.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That seems to have been a legitimate conclusion from the decision of the Supreme Court, holding that the interest was not intended to mature until 1907.

The WITNESS. But I can give you an opinion of Senator Edmunds differing from that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The Supreme Court has given an opinion on that point.

The WITNESS. It has never been tested.

AS TO PLAN OF SETTLEMENT.

Commissioner LITTLER. Will you give us your views as to the settlement of the debt of the Union Pacific Railroad to the Government?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Commissioner LITTLER. And your reasons for entertaining those views?

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. When will you be prepared to submit your statement?

The WITNESS. I will give you that in two days.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand you are prepared to submit, first, your views as to an adjustment of the debt by the method of extension; and second, a statement containing your views upon an immediate settlement.

The WITNESS. That I cannot do. I will give you what I think will be the cash value of the debt.

The CHAIRMAN. Then I understand you will submit a statement containing your views on the bills.

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean by an immediate settl ement the plan devised under the Thurman act—a settlement by which the Government shall surrender its interest in view of a consideration that is to be given by the companies. I should like to have your views as to methods of adjustment on that basis.

The WITNESS. I understand, sir.

INVESTIGATED UNION PACIFIC ON HIS OWN ACCOUNT.

By Mr. DILLON:

Q. When was your attention first directed to the Union Pacific Company?—A. In 1885.

Q. By whom?—A. By myself.

Q. Without any suggestion from anybody?—A. Without suggestion. I can shorten your examination by saying I am under oath, and that I have acted in this matter for no one but myself. I think that will satisfy you.

Q. You took it up on your own account?—A. Exactly.

REPORTED HIS CONCLUSION, SUCCESSIVELY, TO MR. COUDERT, COLONEL LAMONT, MR. HENLEY, SENATOR MACPHERSON, AND THE NEW YORK WORLD.

Q. You made some investigation. To whom did you report the result?—A. First to Mr. F. R. Coudert.

Q. Did you ever report that to any one else?—A. When he did not have anything to do with it, I went to Mr. Lamont.

Q. And to whom else?—A. To Mr. Henley.

Q. Why did you go to Mr. Henley?—A. Because I knew he was an anti-monopolist.

Q. Are you an anti-monopolist?—A. To a certain extent; yes, sir. I believe in making monopolists conform to law as well as poorer citizens.

Q. To whom else did you report that?—A. To Senator McPherson.

PUBLISHED HIS STATEMENT IN NEW YORK WORLD.

Q. Who else?—A. When I found that Mr. Cleveland would not do anything with that, I presented one statement to the New York World.

Q. A communication?—A. Yes, sir; to get the benefit of public opinion.

Q. How was that headed?—A. I could not tell you now.

Q. Was it a communication?—A. I hardly know that it was. It was simply a statement founded on the reports of the Union Pacific Company.

Q. Did you prepare it yourself?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Was it printed as you prepared it?—A. I think it was, with several slight mistakes.

Q. Did that appear in the form of a communication over your own signature?—A. It did not.

NOT PRINTED AS AN EDITORIAL.

Q. Did it appear in the form of a communication at all, or did it appear in the form of an editorial?—A. It was not an editorial; it was printed on one of the side pages.

Q. Were you a correspondent of the World?—A. No.

Q. Where was that prepared?—A. It was to force public opinion to take notice of the issue.

Q. Was that prepared in Washington?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it sent in the form of a communication from Washington?—A. No; I gave it to Mr. Crawford, whom I knew.

Q. Did you ever prepare more than one article for the World?—A. Two, I think, were the utmost.

Q. Did you ever prepare any for any other paper?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation or report the result of your conversation to any one here in New York?—A. No; on the contrary, I refused to do so.

Q. You stated broadly this afternoon that the Union Pacific Company had violated the act of 1873.—A. Yes.

PARTICULARS OF UNION PACIFIC'S VIOLATION OF THE ACT OF 1873.

Q. I wish you to specify the particulars, and how you know it?—A. I should say that it violated the law in issuing collateral trust bonds of various dates, and in issuing the $10,000,000 of stock. I think that indorsing the Oregon Short Line bonds was a violation of the law of 1873. The indorsement of the Saint Joseph and Grand Island bonds was a violation of the law of 1873.

Q. Does that complete the catalogue of violations known to you?—A. There may be more.

Q. When, therefore, you said that the Union Pacific Company had violated law you meant that it had issued this stock, had issued these collateral bonds and made these guarantees; that is what you meant, is it?—A. Practically, yes.

Q. You also stated, if I understood you rightly, that the Union Pacific Company had violated the Thurman act. Will you be kind enough to specify in what particular it has violated the Thurman act?—A. I quoted Judge Edmunds as saying that.

AS TO VIOLATION OF THE THURMAN ACT.

Q. So that, so far as you know, of your own knowledge, there has been no violation of the Thurman act by the Union Pacific Company?—A. I am not prepared to state that. I simply quote what Judge Edmunds said in reference to that act.

Q. What did he say?—A. That the Union Pacific Company had repeatedly violated the Thurman act.

Q. In what particular?—A. He did not state. His remarks will be found in the Congressional Record of the 26th of February, 1887.

Q. You feel perfectly justified in making a positive statement and repeating it here?—A. He said that their attention had been drawn to it, and that they had taken some action in reference to the Union Pacific, and the result of that was that $700,000 or $800,000 had been paid into the Treasury of the United States by that company.

THINKS MR. DILLON WRONG.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that the Union Pacific Company is not in default one dollar under the Thurman act or any other act of Congress?—A. I think you are wrong, sir. I think it has violated the law of 1873, and if the laws were executed, that the situation would be very different.

Q. I repeat the question, whether you do or do not know whether the Union Pacific Company is or is not in default, under the Thurman act or any other act of Congress?—A. I presume they have paid all that those acts require. The Commissioner of Railroads told me the peculiar method in which Mr. Adams prepared the return of earnings of the Kansas Pacific road, dividing the earnings by two instead of taking the proper proportion of earnings belonging to the subsidized roads; and I see by one of his late reports that that makes a difference of $75,000 in one year, which the United States ought to have received.

Q. That is, the earnings of the Kansas Pacific were divided on the mileage basis instead of on your basis?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know that the Supreme Court of the United States said that that might be done?—A. I know that the road has complied with General Johnston's demand in the last instance.

Q. I want to know who it was that made a suggestion to you here?—A. It was a friend of mine.

Q. Will you give me his name?—A. No, sir; I will not.

OUTSIDE SUGGESTIONS TO WITNESS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. What is it you want, Judge Dillon?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. During his examination a gentleman made a suggestion to him in relation to his answers. I now ask the witness who it was, and he declines to give his name.

The WITNESS. I simply tell you that the gentleman knows nothing about the Union Pacific.

Q. What did he say to you?—A. He said to "look out for that question." That is simply all.

The Commission then adjourned till Thursday, September 29, 1887, at 10 a. m.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Thursday, September 29, 1887.

THOMAS M. NORWOOD, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Savannah, Ga.

Q. Were you a member of Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During what years?

The WITNESS. You mean my present term?

The CHAIRMAN. No; your past terms.

A. I was in Congress from 1871 to 1877.

Q. Subsequently?—A. Subsequently I was a member of the Forty-ninth, and am now of the Fiftieth, Congress.

Q. During what years, if you recall them?—A. From March, 1871, to 1877 I was in the Senate; from March, 1885, up to the present time, I have been in the House of Representatives, and have been elected to the Fiftieth Congress.

A STATEMENT CONCERNING A PUBLICATION IN THE NEW YORK WORLD.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that you desire to make a statement to the Commission concerning a publication in the New York World.

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Commission will be glad to hear you.

The WITNESS. I wish to inquire, first, if the statement made by the World, which I have in my hand, and which I suppose has been before the Commission during this investigation, is admitted to be correct so far as the Central Pacific Company recognizes it? In other words, does the company question the statement here as taken from the books in the Treasury by the World?

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Cohen can probably answer as to the position of the company on the question of that publication.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Norwood, I have never seen the matter concerning which you are about to testify, until a minute ago, and I do not know where the paper got its information from. I have never compared anything that appears there with the books, therefore I am not in a position to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state on the part of the Commission that all the items published in the World by their dates, amounts, and names, were verified by the accounts, as far as possible, of the Central Pacific Company, upon a call for the vouchers there published, and upon an examination the Commission is satisfied that the publication of the items is correct as set out in the World, from the vouchers of the Central Pacific Company.

AN ERROR IN REGARD TO WITNESS.

The WITNESS. The statement, then, that I wish to make is to correct an error in this account so far as it relates to me. The account is not correct. It sets forth that the Central Pacific Railroad Company paid me certain amounts of money at different dates indicated. That, I take it, is an account rendered by the Central Pacific Company to the Government, of expenses incurred by that company in the settlement of the accounts with the Government under the Thurman bill. Is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. This is a statement of unexplained accounts and vouchers prepared by Mr. French, and furnished to the New York World.

The WITNESS. Disallowed?

The CHAIRMAN. They were discovered in the audit and disallowed at the time of the investigation by Mr. French as auditor.

The WITNESS. As rendered by the Central Pacific Company?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir. To what items in the publication do you refer?

The WITNESS. All of them; every item.

Commissioner ANDERSON. All those that contain your name?

The WITNESS. I refer to those containing my name; I know nothing about the others.

The CHAIRMAN. There appears an item dated July 2, 1878, "T. M. Norwood, $1,000."

The WITNESS. Yes; you will find that the items run on from 1878 to 1879.

The CHAIRMAN. The other items are:

1878. Sept. 4.	T. M. Norwood	$1,000.00
Nov. 2.	T. M. Norwood	1,083.98
Nov. 27.	T. M. Norwood	500.00
1879. Jan. 17.	T. M. Norwood	1,500.00
Feb. 16.	T. M. Norwood	300.00
Feb. 25.	T. M. Norwood	200.00
Apr. 14.	T. M. Norwood	2,127.42
May 10.	T. M. Norwood	800.00
July 16.	(to Aug. 4) T. M. Norwood	1,283.30
Sept. 27.	T. M. Norwood	800.00

The WITNESS. The total amount paid to me is not down there, but I believe that is the last item.

NEVER RECEIVED ANY SUM FROM CENTRAL PACIFIC.

Q. Do you recollect receiving from the Central Pacific Company such sums as are named there?—A. I never received any amount, at any time, from the Central Pacific Company.

Q. Were you at any time employed by the Central Pacific Company?—A. No, sir; in no capacity.

Q. Then if these charges or entries appear on the books of the Central Pacific Company in your name, they are clearly in error?—A. They are entirely a mistake.

Q. And do not refer to you?—A. Yes, they refer to me, I suppose.

Q. In what relation do they refer to you?—A. As counsel of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. They are charged up as to the Central Pacific.

Q. How were you employed by the Southern Pacific?

The WITNESS. Shall I give a brief history of my employment?

The CHAIRMAN. If you please.

WITNESS'S CONNECTION WITH SOUTHERN PACIFIC.

The WITNESS. I left the Senate in March, 1877, and resumed my practice of law in Savannah. In May—I think it was—1878, I received a communication from a friend asking me to come on to Washington, that he wanted to see me on some important business. I went right on and was introduced to Mr. Huntington, who told me that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company was in a contest with the Texas Pacific, and that he wanted my services for that company. I engaged with him as counsel of the road, the principal work for me to do being to discuss the question among the people of the South as to the relative merits of the two roads; in other words, to advocate the building of the Southern Pacific Railroad. Mr. Scott was asking Congress for a subsidy—had been for several years. Mr. Huntington told me that the Southern Pacific Company wanted no subsidy. I entered on the work in the pursuance of this written contract, which I submit to the Commission.

CONTRACT WITH SOUTHERN PACIFIC.

The CHAIRMAN. Read it, if you please.

The WITNESS (reading):

[Office of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California, No. 9 Nassau street, C. P. Huntington, A. & A.]

NEW YORK, June 4, 1878.

Hon. T. M. NORWOOD,
Savannah, Ga.:

DEAR SIR: The Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California desire your counsel and professional services, and offer you a salary at the rate of $10,666 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments, the company, however, reserving the right to determine the engagement at any time not less than nine months.

Whenever you have to travel on business for the company your traveling expenses, including hotel bills, will be paid monthly on an account of the same being rendered at its office, No. 9 Nassau st., N. Y.

Please favor me with an answer to above and oblige, yours, very truly,

C. P. HUNTINGTON, A. & A.

I replied to this, from Savannah (a copy of which reply I have in my letter-book, but have it not here with me), accepting the terms offered in this proposition, and I entered upon the work for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

CHARACTER OF WITNESS'S WORK.

To give you an idea of the work that was done, I will say that when the legislature of Alabama was in session in the winter of 1878 and 1879 I found that the Texas Pacific Company, through its agents there, had a resolution reported by some committee of the legislature (I forget what committee, probably the committee on the railroad) favoring the Tom Scott system. I went there, and my going resulted in a public discussion between ex-Governor Watts, representing the Texas Pacific, and myself. The resolutions were referred back to the committee and never appeared again.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. What was this discussion between yourself and Mr. Watts—before what body?—A. The public, including members of the legislature of Alabama.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I mean was it before a committee.

The WITNESS. No, sir; it was at night, in the hall of representatives.

Q. You were not a member of that legislature, were you?—A. Oh, no.

JOINT DISCUSSION AS TO MERITS OF SOUTHERN PACIFIC AND TEXAS PACIFIC.

Q. I want to understand what this discussion was. Was it a private discussion between you and this gentleman, or an argument before a legislative committee?—A. When I found that this resolution had been reported, I requested that I might be heard in behalf of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and the legislature gave us the representative hall one night for a joint public discussion between ex-Governor Watts and myself.

Q. A public discussion to which the whole committee, as well as the legislature, was invited?—A. Yes; everybody. Ladies were there. I had also another discussion with ex-Governor John C. Brown, of Tennessee, before the Chamber of Commerce of Charleston. I merely mention those as illustrations of the kind of work that I did. That was all the kind of work that I did as the representative of that company. In other words, I was not about Washington at all—had nothing to do with the company there. I told Mr. Huntington that I would not go to Washington on any account. My engagement ran through 1878, and I think probably all of 1879. The account paid me was the amount set forth in that contract. But the whole amount is not in this account published by the World. Though I have no data, no dates to show that the amounts paid me were received at the several times stated in the World, still I had no doubt whatever that they are the sums paid me by the Southern Pacific. I always gave my receipts to that company.

NEVER EMPLOYED BY CENTRAL PACIFIC.

Q. Were you ever employed in any capacity by the Central Pacific Railway Company?—A. No, sir. When I was introduced to Mr. Huntington he was the first man connected with the Central Pacific Company or the Southern Pacific Company that I ever knew. That was, I think, in May, 1878. I never had any connection with that company at any time.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Then I assume that the only way the items could have appeared in the Central Pacific accounts is that the service was rendered to the Southern Pacific Company and the charge made against the accounts of the Central Pacific.

The WITNESS. That is just what has occurred, so far as I know.

Q. Do you know anything in connection with that from which you can state as a fact that it was charged?—A. No, sir. I say the service was rendered to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and those items charged in there I have no doubt are the items that were paid to me by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, because the Central Pacific Company never paid me a dollar. I never had any connection with it.

Q. At the time this contract of June 4, 1878, was made did you hold any public office whatsoever?—A. No; I had been out of public service from March, 1877, until that date; that is, about fifteen or sixteen months.

HOW ACCOUNTS WERE PAID.

Q. Will you please explain to the Commission how those payments were made to you from time to time?—A. Just as I called for them. Sometimes I would not render an account for simple expenses that had occurred under the latter clause of the contract. If I wanted money for my private use, or the expenses of my family, I would draw on them.

Q. To whom would you render the account?—A. To Mr. Gates or Mr. Huntington.

Q. How were those letters addressed?—A. Always addressed to one or the other of those gentlemen.

Q. Was there any indication on the envelope besides the name of "Vice-president of the Southern Pacific"—or was the Southern Pacific Company in any way identified on the envelope?

The WITNESS. You mean in my letter?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

The WITNESS. None that I remember.

RECEIPTS GIVEN SOUTHERN PACIFIC.

Q. Did the Southern Pacific Company appear in the account as you rendered it, as the party who was debtor to you, on the face of the bill?—A. I always gave my receipts to the Southern Pacific. I made the bill to the Southern Pacific.

Q. Is it your recollection that the Southern Pacific Railroad's name appeared on the bill as made by you?—A. Yes.

Q. And these accounts were rendered to Mr. Gates or Mr. Huntington, at 9 Nassau street, New York?—A. Yes. Several times I remember being paid when I was in the office.

Q. At No. 9 Nassau street, New York?—A. Yes.

Q. How was the payment made—whether in bills or checks?—A. I have no distinct recollection, but my impression is that it was in bills. My recollection is that when I rendered an account (I never overdrew) for whatever amount was due, Mr. Gates would draw a check and then send it out, and, as a matter of convenience to me, have it cashed and give me the money.

PAID BY DRAFTS.

Q. That could not have been done in cases where money was remitted to you. When you were not in the city how were remittances made?

The WITNESS. You mean what was the form of the draft?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

A. When they remitted to me they always sent a draft; they never sent money.

Q. Do you remember how the drafts were signed?—A. I do not.

Q. They may have been drafts on local bankers, purchased here in New York—drafts payable where you happened to be?—A. Yes.

Q. Bought of bankers here in New York?—A. Yes. I suppose, by looking back over the books of the bank with which I kept my accounts in Savannah, I might find out how those checks were drawn.

Q. Do you remember, in any case, receiving a check from Mr. Huntington which purported to be a check on the Southern Pacific Company as distinguished from the Central Pacific Company?—A. I never drew in any way other than on the Southern Pacific Company.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am addressing myself to what occurred on Mr. Huntington's side, as to the form of payment made by him, whether the checks or drafts received by you, according to your recollection, indicated in any case that they were drawn on funds of the Southern Pacific Company?

NOTHING ON DRAFTS TO INDICATE THAT THEY WERE DRAWN ON ACCOUNT OF ANY PARTICULAR FUND.

The WITNESS. I cannot say as to that, because there was nothing on the face of the draft that indicated that it was on account of any particular fund.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Was there anything in the signature which indicated it?—A. No, sir.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. In these cases of checks drawn by Mr. Gates in New York, where the Southern Pacific Company would have one bank account and the Central Pacific another, do you recollect anything in regard to the check drawn by Mr. Gates which would convey to your mind the fact that it was the Southern Pacific money that was being used and not the Central Pacific?—A. No, sir.

Q. You recollect nothing on that subject?—A. No; I do not think the checks had any ear-marks of that kind at all.

Q. Have you any recollection as to these checks that Mr. Gates sent out and got cashed, as to what the signature to those checks was?—A. My impression is that those checks were signed by Mr. Gates.

Q. Is that impression distinct at all, in any way?—A. Not enough for me to state it as a fact.

Q. Do you remember whether the body of the checks was printed or not?—A. Yes, sir; printed. But I do not know on what bank.

MR. GATES DREW THE MONEY AND GAVE IT TO WITNESS.

Q. Do you remember whether Mr. Gates, after taking the check from the check-book, was in the habit of indorsing or putting his name on the back of it?—A. My impression is that the checks were drawn by him so that he could draw the money. My name was not indorsed on them. He drew the money and handed it to me. He might, at some time, have given me a check, but I do not remember about that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I would state that Mr. Gates's statement of the general practice, as far as the Central Pacific is concerned, is this: That the funds here were drawn on checks signed by Mr. Huntington and printed, payable to the order of Isaac E. Gates, and then Mr. Gates, when he desired to use the money, would indorse the checks so made payable to him, and use them in that way. That statement would not indicate whether the check actually used was a Central Pacific or a Southern Pacific check. In either case the signature would appear to be the same.

NOTHING TO INDICATE WHETHER CHECKS WERE DRAWN ON CENTRAL PACIFIC OR SOUTHERN PACIFIC FUNDS.

The question I now address to you is, whether anything ever occurred in your interviews with Mr. Gates which enables you now to depose that the checks which were sent out in order to be cashed for your convenience were checks drawn on Southern Pacific funds or checks drawn on Central Pacific funds?

The WITNESS. Nothing whatever.

Q. You can give us no light on that point?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any personal interviews with Mr. Huntington in regard to this employment?—A. My first interview was with him and with him alone.

Q. A personal interview?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. In Washington.

Q. Had you, before that time, had any business connection with Mr. Huntington?—A. None whatever. I was introduced to him at that time by a gentleman who telegraphed me to come on.

Q. What is the name of the gentleman?—A. General Gordon, of Georgia.

Q. Did Mr. Huntington, in the course of his conversation with you, refer to a number of other gentlemen who were similarly employed in the same business?

WAS COUNSEL OF SOUTHERN PACIFIC.

Mr. COHEN. One minute. I understand the witness to say that he was the attorney and counsel of Mr. Huntington at this time.

The WITNESS. No, sir; of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

Q. And Mr. Huntington was acting on behalf of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in his communications to you?—A. Yes.

Mr. COHEN. It is for you to determine whether you want to render any communications that you received from your client for the benefit of this Commission.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Norwood understands the limit of his duty and privilege perfectly well.

The WITNESS. Go on with the question. Let me hear it.

DID NOT KNOW OF OTHER GENTLEMEN SIMILARLY ENGAGED.

Commissioner ANDERSON. My question is, whether Mr. Huntington, in the course of his conversation, stated to you that a number of other gentlemen were engaged in the same way throughout the South?

The WITNESS. He did not. I did not think there were any others; at least, not in the capacity I was.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I mean in the capacity of maintaining the advantages of the Southern Pacific project and promoting it in the South, either by argument or explanation?

The WITNESS. I do not think he mentioned the name of anybody.

Q. Did you, in the course of your employment, meet with other gentlemen who were engaged in the same line of duty?

The WITNESS. In the South?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

The WITNESS. I do not remember any one. I think there was one gentleman in Montgomery, Ala., who was taking an interest in the Southern Pacific Railroad, but I do not remember his name. I know there were several employed there by the Tom Scott system at that time. Governor Watts was employed by him (Scott). I do not know whether it was a general employment or whether he was only employed to make this argument on the night when he had this discussion.

SERVICES RENDERED SOUTHERN PACIFIC PUBLICLY.

By Mr. COHEN:

Q. Were the services you rendered to the Southern Pacific Company done openly, publicly?—A. Oh, yes, sir; everywhere advertised.

Q. Do you know whether, during the time of your employment, the Southern Pacific Railroad had been leased to the Central Pacific or not?—A. I do not.

Q. You have no information on that subject?—A. No, sir. All I can say about that is, that during the discussion that I had, it was always urged that the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad were one. I mean that was the popular argument against the position that I occupied. It was an ad captandum argument. It was urged that the Central Pacific Railroad had money that had been given to it by the public, and it was now using that money to destroy Tom Scott and the Texas Pacific Railroad to build the Southern Pacific road. That was the line of argument that several of the gentlemen that I debated with took. But it was always contended by Mr. Huntington that the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific were entirely distinct companies—not only distinct corporations but distinct companies; but that it was true that the owners of one were owners of the other, or were so in part. There may have been some corporators in one that were not in the other, but that in the main the gentlemen who owned the Central Pacific were interested in the Southern Pacific.

Q. How much of the Southern Pacific Railroad of California had been built at the time of your employment by that company?—A. When I first went out to overlook the field, to make up my mind about the advantages of the Southern Pacific, I went from San Francisco down to Fort Yuma, the eastern terminus.

RENDERED COMPANY VALUE RECEIVED.

Q. Do you consider that you were overpaid by the Southern Pacific Company for the services you rendered to it?—A. No, sir; I considered that I rendered that company value received, and I think they so considered it, because when I got through my work public sentiment in the South on this question was reversed, and the next session of Congress, I think, Mr. Scott abandoned the field. There was no complaint on either side.

Mr. COHEN. I think that is their view. I did not know what you had to say about it.

The WITNESS. I rendered value and I got value. I got what I contracted for and was satisfied. I will state that there was nothing, so far as I know, improper in the conduct of the Southern Pacific Railroad or any of its officers, unless it may be these items that are charged here, and I have appeared here for the purpose of correcting that mistake. The Central Pacific Company never paid me a dollar, and if those items are charged in there as being paid by the Central Pacific Company they are entirely incorrect. But I have no doubt that those items are the items that were paid to me by the Southern Pacific Company under my contract which lies on the table.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. All of your services were rendered to the Southern Pacific Company?—A. Entirely. I never had any connection with the Central Pacific Company or anybody connected with it, except Mr. Huntington.

WHETHER CENTRAL PACIFIC PAID FOR SERVICES RENDERED SOUTHERN PACIFIC.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Do you know, as a matter of fact, whether the relations existing between the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific Company were such that the Central Pacific had assumed and agreed to discharge this particular obligation of the Southern Pacific?—A. None at all. I know nothing at all about them.

Q. If that were the fact, then the entries as they appear in the book might be justified?—A. That is for others to determine. If the Central Pacific Company is the debtor of the Government and has to render an account of its expenses to show its net income and charges, amounts which another corporation paid, as part of the expenses of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, I do not see how it could be justified.

Q. Suppose the Southern Pacific Company paid to the Central Pacific Company a consideration in money, in return for which the Central Pacific Company agreed to pay out the operating expenses and other charges, including, for instance, these charges of yours, in behalf of the Southern Pacific Company, that arrangement would have to be examined before we could determine that there was anything improper in it?—A. Yes.

Commissioner ANDERSON. If I understand Mr. Cohen's position correctly, that these charges are intended to be justified under the lease, as my own memory of the lease does not bear me out, I would ask whether the terms of the lease imposed on the Central Pacific Company the duty of paying these particular obligations—if that is what Mr. Cohen claims?

Mr. COHEN. We will see about that, Mr. Chairman. I am not prepared to answer until I see the papers. There is this, however, to be said: The Auditor has rejected these items and they have been treated as money in the treasury, and the Government has received its part of it. It seems to me very idle to use up the time of the gentleman from Illinois, who wants to get home, in pursuing this line of questions.

Commissioner LITTLER. I am in no hurry, Mr. Cohen.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not alter the facts, however, of the attempt of the Central Pacific Company to make a charge against the Government of such an amount. The fact that the Central Pacific Company was not permitted to carry it out was not its fault, but in consequence of the attitude of the Government.

Mr. COHEN. I would like to discuss these matters with you at a future time.

The CHAIRMAN (jocularly). I would be glad to meet you at a public meeting.

Mr. COHEN. At any time after 6 o'clock in the evening.

NO FURTHER STATEMENT, MERELY AN EXPLANATION.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you any further explanation or statement to make?—A. No; I merely wished to correct that statement, which was an error of somebody. Whether it was on the part of the World man who took the account from the books, or on the part of the gentleman who rendered the account, or on the part of the Central Pacific Railroad, I know not. The error lies somewhere between those three. That is why I asked in the beginning whether that account was recognized by the Central Pacific Company as being correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The account is correct. The books and vouchers were all examined and the amounts called off.

Mr. COHEN. And they are yet retained by the Commission, who refuse to return them.

The WITNESS. Then the error is by the Central Pacific Company. I would ask Mr. Cohen, counsel for the Pacific companies, whether this is Mr. Huntington's signature [referring to the contract he had produced]?

Mr. COHEN. We will admit that signature to be in Mr. Huntington's handwriting.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Can you tell us in whose handwriting the body of the letter is?

Mr. COHEN. No.

The WITNESS. My impression is that the body of it is in Mr. Gates's handwriting, but I do not know.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Thursday, September 29, 1887.

J. C. REIFF, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In New York City.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. I am connected with the firm of Woerishoffer & Co.

Q. Is that a firm of stock brokers?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been connected with that firm?—A. Since 1881.

Q. In what capacity?—A. I have an interest in the concern.

MADE A STUDY OF THE FINANCIAL CONDITION OF THE PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Q. Have you given any special attention to the matters of the Pacific railroads?—A. Somewhat.

Q. To which railroad have you given most attention, the Central Pacific or the Union Pacific?—A. I never had any connection whatever in any way with the Central Pacific; I was connected for a number of years with the Kansas Pacific.

Q. What was your connection with the Kansas Pacific?—A. I was its eastern financial agent.

Q. During what years?—A. From October, 1866, until the early part of 1874.

Q. We are informed that you have made the subject of the financial condition of the Pacific railroads and their relations to the Government something of a study, and my question is whether that is so, and, if so, to which road you have given most attention?—A. After the Kansas Pacific to the Union Pacific, because of its connection with that road.

Q. Have you investigated the affairs of the Central Pacific to any extent?—A. No.

Q. Between what years are you most familiar with the affairs of the Union Pacific and the Kansas Pacific?—A. During the years that I was connected with the Kansas Pacific, of course.

Q. From 1866 to 1874?—A. Yes.

NOT A VOLUNTEER WITNESS.

Q. Have you any special acquaintance with the management and methods adopted by the Union Pacific after 1874?—A. I can answer that yes and no. In a general way I have. In some specific ways I have. I would like to say to the Commission that I do not know whether I can give them any information on the subjects into which they are inquiring. But I have read in the papers this morning what purports to be a letter addressed to the Commission yesterday by Judge Dillon. I would like to have it appear on the record that I do not come here as a volunteer witness. My relations with some of these gentlemen have been of a rather unfortunate character. I have already suffered considerably on account of their moneyed power and ill-will, and I do not care to increase that load if I can help it.

Q. Whose money power and ill-will do you refer to?—A. Well, I suppose I refer to Mr. Gould. He is the "boss."

Q. Mr. Gould has at present no interest that you know of in the Union Pacific, has he?—A. Not that I know of; no.

Q. Do I understand your reluctance to volunteer information to arise from a disinclination to encounter more opposition in general matters?—A. No; I have given indications heretofore that I am not backward about that, although rather unequally matched.

HAS FOLLOWED THE EVIDENCE OFFERED BEFORE THE COMMISSION.

Q. We desire from you a full statement of all matters that you know pertaining to our inquiry and resulting from such studies as you may have made of the Union Pacific system. You have followed, have you not, the general line of evidence that has been offered before this Commission?—A. As far as it has appeared in the papers.

Q. With regard to the transactions of the Union Pacific Company from 1874, we will say, to 1883, have you not examined their reports and obtained all information which was in your power, and reached certain conclusions in regard to the matters connected with the declaration of dividends, with the consolidation of the Kansas Pacific, with the acquisition of branch lines, and have you not examined these matters with reference to their effect on the general solvency of the company, and particularly to its relations with the United States Government?—A. I have given general attention to the subject, and kept as well advised as I might with the showing of their reports, and from time to time as things have been discussed in the courts and in Congress.

Q. Have you written any communications on that subject?—A. Sometimes I have; yes, sir.

Q. What communications that contain your views have you written in relation to the matter?—A. I do not know that I have ever set out my views particularly, in any special communication. I have written some letters, I think, on particular points at times to the Secretary of the Interior; at times to the Commissioner of Railroads, and, possibly, one or two to the President.

WHAT HAS IMPRESSED THE WITNESS IN REGARD TO UNION PACIFIC.

Q. What are the salient points that were referred to in those communications?—A. I cannot recall them specifically. If the Commission will permit me I will tell them what has always impressed my mind, what has been uppermost in my mind in regard to this subject.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We will take it that way.

The WITNESS. In the first place, the second section of the act of July 2, 1864, provided that the Union Pacific Railroad should accept no subscription to its capital stock except to be paid in money, and that they should assess that stock not less than 5 per cent. in each six months until the whole 100 cents on the dollar had been paid. Of course, it is notorious that that was not done. And much of the power of the Union Pacific Railroad which it used to bankrupt the Kansas Pacific Railroad, to the injury of myself and a great many of my friends, came about by their utter disregard of their obligations; because they acquired power by the creation of paper which cost them nothing, and yet extracted from the public very large returns of money which gave them control of facilities and opportunities which they denied their ally in this original legislation (the Kansas Pacific) and which led to its bankruptcy.

MR. GOULD ACQUIRES LARGE INTERESTS IN SECURITIES OF KANSAS PACIFIC.

Q. Do you refer particularly to the refusal to prorate beyond Cheyenne?—A. Yes, sir; that was the primary object. Having bankrupted that road, and before it was reorganized, further power was exerted to finish its bankruptcy, so as to make it so absolute and complete that it would be possible for the Union Pacific interest to acquire its control. After Mr. Gould had acquired large interests in the securities of the Kansas Pacific, having already practical control of the Union Pacific, he built a railroad from the line of the Colorado Central somewhere in the vicinity of Boulder, Colo., for example, to Cheyenne, which gave them a parallel line from Cheyenne to Denver, and, of course, made the Denver Pacific absolutely worthless. Through that means he was enabled to secure terms from the Denver Pacific bondholders, as well as to exert a further influence upon the Kansas Pacific people in their bankrupt condition which he would not have been able to exert in any other way.

Having accomplished that object in subsequent years, that constructed portion of the road was absolutely abandoned.

Q. State exactly what portion of the Colorado Central was abandoned?—A. I do not know the number of miles. Possibly 50 miles. It appears in one of the late publications.

ABSORPTION THROUGH FORM OF CONSOLIDATION.

Q. Fifty miles of the end nearest Cheyenne?—A. Nearest Cheyenne; yes. Having exercised this power over the Kansas Pacific, Mr. Gould finally absolutely acquired control of the junior securities of the Kansas Pacific at a nominal sum. He was a director in the Union Pacific Railroad, and was enabled, therefore, to make the contract on both sides and to fix the terms of the absorption through the form of consolidation.

As to that consolidation, I have always criticised it; and I have said that it was without any possible legal effect, for the reason that in my judgment there is not a single paragraph in any law passed at any time by the Congress of the United States which ever contemplated such a consolidation. There is a reference to consolidation in those laws, but any lawyer (which I am not) who will, in a disinterested way, read those laws as referring to consolidation, I think will be compelled to come to the conclusion that any consolidation, except by the consent of Congress, related to a period antedating the completion of the railroad.

THE EARLY COMPLETION OF THE LINE DESIRED.

The whole feature, as embodied in the laws, was for the purpose of consolidating, if necessary, the effort of all the people interested in all the lines of railroad so as to secure the earlier completion of the line. I think that the confirmation of that is reached in the fact that the only attempted consolidation on the part of the Central Pacific in its main line was made with the Western Pacific, and for that special consent of Congress was asked and obtained. I have always insisted that every reasonable authority that the Pacific railroads needed to facilitate the strengthening and development of their property they had reason to expect from Congress, if asked for, and I do not know of anybody who ever opposed the granting of any proper request. But the criticism I have passed, after suffering from their conduct in connection with the Kansas Pacific, was that they simply applied the Gould method of doing exactly what they wanted to do, trusting to the subserviency of public officers and courts, under the plea of "innocent vested rights;" that it is "too late," and that it could not be undone.

On that same ground I have criticised not only the consolidation and the issue of securities thereunder, but I have criticised the issue of the $10,000,000 of stock that was made by the Union Pacific Company in 1881, I think, soon after the consolidation.

I have criticised the issue of the collateral trust bonds for the alleged construction of branch roads because of the total lack of power, not that it might not have been good policy for the company to do it.

CRITICISM OF METHODS PURSUED IN CONSTRUCTING BRANCH LINES.

I have likewise criticised the construction of the branch lines in the manner and under the methods pursued by them for the same reason. It has seemed to me that while there was plenty of law for everybody it was differently administered to the powerful as against the poor; and that if there was anything that this company really needed to defend itself against the encroachments of other railroad corporations or for the development of its own territory, it was entitled to go to its creator and ask for it and get it. They say a great deal nowadays, during the examinations before this Commission, about the manner in which this company has been cramped by the public discussion, cramped by Congress, cramped by this means and that means. I know of nothing that they have ever failed to do, up to the time of the creation of this Commission, because they were cramped. This entire branch system that they have got was practically created after the passage of the Thurman act. Their credit has never failed them. They have always been able to borrow money as cheaply as anybody else.

ROADS WOULD NOT SUBMIT TO LAW.

My chief criticism on them has been that they would not submit themselves to the same law to which they ask other people to submit. For example, they utterly defy all criticism in relation to the consolidation. They were so arbitrary about it that when the Government directors attempted to attend the meetings at the time of the consolidation they shut the doors on them, and those directors had to apply to Attorney-General Devens to know what they should do in the premises. They took the ground that the Union Pacific Railway Company was a different corporation from the Union Pacific Railroad Company, but Attorney-General Devens said it was in effect the same company.

SPIRIT OF THE LAW WAS TO AID THESE ROADS.

I have always held that the spirit of the law was to aid these railroads. If they could not pay they were never to be called upon to pay. When they could pay they were expected to pay. The theory on which much of this discussion has been based, that the Government sought these people to build these railroads, is an entire fallacy. My own people—the Kansas Pacific—were interested alike with them, and the Government did not seek them. These gentlemen saw an opportunity. The Government being in the throes of war when the legislation was first had, of course preferred to co-operate with individuals rather than to itself build a road. The Government was fully employed about 1863 and 1863, and even in 1864.

I have always believed that the interest on the subsidy bonds was intended to be currently paid if the company earned it, especially before dividends were paid. Of course, the Supreme Court of the United States differs with me, and that is unfortunate. But the company has never made any attempt to pay except under compulsion, and from the date when compulsion was attempted the company has fought. The company has, fortunately, been possessed of facilities by which the administrator of the law has been kept off. For example, these questions that are being discussed now have been, in a way, discussed from dates anterior to the completion of the Union and Central Pacific roads.

RESOLUTION OF CONGRESS DIRECTING ATTORNEY-GENERAL TO BRING SUIT.

Congress passed a resolution in 1869 directing the Attorney-General to bring a suit on certain allegations that had been made—certain information that was supposed to be held by the Government against both the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific companies, to see whether they had taken this, that, or the other, and had issued stock without authority, and given stock away, and other things. That suit was never brought.

After the Credit Mobilier investigation, when the Union Pacific company went through the same ordeal which the Central Pacific is now passing through, the Attorney-General was directed to file a bill. After a while he did file a bill and nearly all the talent of the United States was present on one side, and the bill went off on a demurrer entered by Mr. Evarts, now Senator from this State, on the ground that the United States was not such a party in interest as a stockholder, and therefore the suit could not be maintained. But the court in submitting its opinion set forth what it believed was the intent of Congress, and pointed out possible ways by which the end could be accomplished. The matter was allowed to drop.

So that they have had practically a free course. They have glorified themselves a great deal, and instead of doing their duty, as I conceive, they have paid about as much to themselves in dividends as would pay the principal of the debt of the Union Pacific Railroad to the Government.

INTENTION OF THE THURMAN ACT.

When the Thurman act was under discussion it was intended to include the Kansas Pacific. The Kansas Pacific was then in a state of bankruptcy. I was no longer connected with it, but a great many of my friends were, and had large interests involved. Knowing the situation I went to Washington and had some friends explain the peculiar situation and relation of the Kansas Pacific to the Union Pacific; and at that instance Senator Thurman struck the Kansas Pacific out of that bill, I suggesting that, as they could not pay now, having been brought to this bankrupt condition by the Union Pacific, it was hard to jump on them. "Take that out of the bill now," I said, "and just as soon as the Kansas Pacific Company can lift its head, pass a similar bill for it." So that my chief criticism has been that these people arrogated to themselves the privilege of doing what they pleased, and when they were brought up they simply either stated that they were a State corporation, or, if the States went after them, they were a Federal corporation.

STATE OF KANSAS OPPOSED TO CONSOLIDATION.

For example, the State of Kansas filed a bill, through its attorney-general, against this consolidation, and it was in process of being decreed, as I think, to be utterly invalid when the Union Pacific people consented to meet the chief demand of the State of Kansas, which was to submit to its jurisdiction. It has always appeared to me that it would be a very fair thing for these companies instead of paying dividends on their stock, if they had any net earnings after keeping their roads in the most perfect condition for their business, to pay the excess into a sinking fund voluntarily, if possible, or otherwise involuntarily, into the treasury of the company or the Treasury of the United States, toward the liquidation of this debt.

I have never been in favor of extracting from these companies a penny that was unfair or inequitable, but when I see fortunes made out of those roads in the hands of some people who have made them, I do not think there is a fair divide as between a few individuals and the general public. Therefore I pass my criticism as a free American citizen from time to time.

AUTHORITY FOR CONSOLIDATION.

Q. Now, taking up the subjects in turn, can you state anything definite as to the facts on which they are based? The first subject you have mentioned was the power to consolidate; and your statement was that an examination of the act would show that the exertion of that power was only intended to be permitted to the time before the completion of the roads. Can you refer us to the words of the acts on which you base that assertion?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Section 16 of the act of 1862 and section 16 of the act of 1864 give the authority for consolidation.

The WITNESS. Section 16 of the act of 1862 says that—

> At any time after the passage of this act all of the railroad companies named herein and assenting hereto, or any two or more of them, are authorized to form themselves into one consolidated company. Notice of such consolidation, in writing, shall be filed in the Department of the Interior, and such consolidated company shall thereafter proceed to construct said railroad and branches and telegraph lines upon the terms and conditions provided in this act.

APPLIED TO THE PERIOD BEFORE CONSTRUCTION.

The references, both in this act and the act of 1864, practically cover the same point—that after this consolidation shall take place they shall proceed to construct said railroad. And in subsequent sections they provide that if one company shall assume to construct the line of another company for the purpose of facilitating the construction, the defaulting company may thereafter redeem its property by paying this amount; the object being, as I stated before, to hasten its completion. Because here were three or four railroads aiming at the same result. That is the theory. When the State of Kansas filed a bill against the consolidation I had the privilege of consulting with one of the counsel for the State of Kansas. He sent for me and asked me some questions about it, and asked what my view was, and I told him my view. He accepted that theory and incorporated it in his argument in the Supreme Court. On a point of law it was referred back to the State, but, as I said, the matter was compromised when the Union Pacific Company consented to submit to the jurisdiction of the State of Kansas. That was the chief interest the State had.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The next subject you alluded to was the consolidation itself and the methods by which it was carried out. This Commission has had very full evidence pertaining to that subject, and unless there is some special point indicating a violation of law in the methods that were pursued, which you are possessed of and which have not been disclosed to us, you may assume that those facts have been fully proved.

The WITNESS. I think so.

STOCK ISSUED WITHOUT POWER.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The next suggestion you made was in relation to the issue of $10,000,000 of stock after the consolidation, and the language used by you was that you criticised that issue because it was made without power, though not, perhaps, because it was bad policy to issue it under the circumstances which really occurred. Now, why do you say that that stock was issued without power?

The WITNESS. Simply because I think either the act of 1862 or the act of 1864, creating the Union Pacific Railroad and fixing the capital at $100,000,000, states, in so many words, apart from having this capital stock paid up in money, and in no other way, that the capital stock should not be increased beyond the cost of the road. Of course that originally meant that it might be possible to need more than the $100,000,000 of capital, because people had very vague notions then about the cost of this road; but the road having been completed in 1869, I can not see any authority for issuing any stock under that law in 1880 or 1881, whether they got paid for it or not. I do not say that Congress would not have given them the privilege, but they assumed that the capital stock of the Union Pacific Company was about $36,000,000 at the time of its completion, and they never assumed to increase that for any purpose until the consolidation of those companies. The further increase was after the consolidation. It was issued for the purpose, I think, as was stated, of furnishing more facilities and increasing the equipment, and possibly paying for some branch lines. As matter of fact a good deal of money went into property that was not only of very questionable value, but under very questionable circumstances, viz, the amount of money that was practically set apart to pay Mr. Gould for the Central Branch, as well as the Denver and South Park.

Q. Do you know what use was made of the $10,000,000 that were paid for that issue?—A. No, I can not answer in any way that could be considered evidence.

DATE OF ISSUE OF STOCK.

Q. Do you know the date of the issue of that stock?—A. My impression is that it was either the latter part of 1880, or early in 1881.

Q. Do you know the date of the payment to Mr. Gould for the Central Branch and the Kansas Central?—A. The Kansas Central was an entirely different transaction.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am speaking of the date. They were paid for at the same time.

The WITNESS. No, I do not know whether they were paid for or not.

Q. Do you know that the Kansas Central and the Central Branch were paid for before the issue of that $10,000,000 of stock?—A. No.

Q. Were they paid for by stock acquired by the consolidation itself—especially by stock acquired from the Denver Pacific transaction?—A. No.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We have all those facts before us.

The WITNESS. Very well. I think all those things will be capable of explanation, probably in a different way from the way in which they have been explained to you.

WAS THE ISSUE OF STOCK ILLEGAL?

Commissioner ANDERSON. I think we have the evidence pretty fully.

Q. In regard to the legality of the consolidation, is it your judgment that if the actual cost of the three consolidated roads was $60,000,000, and the stock at the time of consolidation was $50,000,000, then the issue would have been illegal?—A. Certainly; because it is absolutely in evidence, years ago, that the roads never cost the $50,000,000 of stock.

Q. My question is, assuming that it were proved that the actual cost of the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific, and the Denver Pacific roads had been $60,000,000 in money, and that the consolidated stock at the time of consolidation was $50,000,000, on that assumption would the issue of the $10,000,000 of stock have been within the permission of the law?—A. Oh, if they could show that it went to the construction of the road, certainly it would have been within the permission of the law; but they did not pretend that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am not arguing that. But you say it depended on the cost.

The WITNESS. Yes.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Their claim was that the actual cost was over $60,000,000.

The WITNESS. But their road was completed.

Q. I again put my question. Assuming that the roads had been completed some years before, that the aggregate stock was $50,000,000, that the actual cost of construction was $60,000,000 before consolidation then, in your judgment, after the consolidation, would the consolidated company have the legal power to issue $10,000,000 of stock to reach the limit of the actual cost of construction?—A. If the consolidation were legal, certainly.

THE POWER FOR CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH ROADS.

Q. Now, in regard to the construction of branch roads. You have stated that they have been largely constructed by the Union Pacific Company from the years 1877–'78 down to date, and that these constructions have all been carried on without legal power. Will you state upon what you base that proposition; in what way was there a lack of power?—A. I will say that the only power the Union Pacific Railroad has ever possessed under any law of Congress, or possesses to-day, is the power to build, maintain, and operate a line of railroad from the Missouri River to Ogden—one single line of railroad and telegraph; that is, the naked authority. All the other authority relates to the other branch roads which were to have their rights in connection with the Union Pacific, which rights, of course, have always been denied.

Q. That we understand. But that does not touch the question, because it does not pursue the inquiry as to the manner in which the branch roads were actually constructed. Take, for instance, the construction of the Republican Valley road. What act of the Union Pacific Company has occurred in regard to the construction of the Republican Valley road which you can set your finger on as being a violation of law?—A. The ownership.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Then it is not the construction.

The WITNESS. If they had constructed that line under the original charter, of course they would have been able to show where the power lay. They did not construct it directly as the Union Pacific road, because it had, I think, a State charter.

Q. Then, is it your point that by indirect methods they procured independent corporations to build branch roads, and that the ownership of the stock of those branch roads was, in effect, undertaking to do what was not permitted by law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any provision in the law that restricts their power to own or take the stock, or a portion of the stock, of a branch road?—A. There is nothing in the law in regard to it.

METHODS PURSUED IN CONSTRUCTING BRANCHES.

Q. Is there anything within your field of information in regard to he methods pursued by the directors of the Union Pacific Company in cont ducting these branch constructions—I mean anything as to which you have any knowledge, showing a divided duty by the directors, so that in the construction of the branch roads they have profited by their votes as directors of the Union Pacific Company?—A. I have no personal knowledge.

THINKS SOME OF THE DIRECTORS WERE INTERESTED IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE OREGON SHORT LINE.

Q. Have you any indications that you can give us as to the construction of any of these roads in particular where you have reason to believe anything of the kind occurred?—A. Yes; I think there were some of the directors interested in the construction of the Oregon Short Line.

Q. Are there any other roads to which you can refer us?—A. I have no doubt that they had a moneyed interest in the Denver and South Park and also moneyed interest in the construction of the last road they built into Leadville, what they call the "High Line." But, of my own knowledge, I have no information.

Q. What information have you in regard to the construction of the Oregon Short Line—the first road named by you—which entitles you to affirm a belief that some of the directors of the Union Pacific Company were interested in the construction?—A. Some three or three and one-half years ago, I think it was, I was in Leadville, and I there met a man whose name I can not now recall who had just had an interview with one of the contractors of that road, who was boasting of the amount of money he had made in its construction. He was known to have had no considerable money at all when he went into the contract, but it was believed that the contracting firm was backed by certain directors of the road and that one of the contractors was a nephew of Mr. Sidney Dillon, who on that account (I was led by this party to understand) had been given a number of favorable contracts. Therefore I draw the distinction between knowing these things of my own personal knowledge and being persuaded of them.

Q. Can you state to the Commission the name of Mr. Sidney Dillon's nephew?—A. No; there were two men in the firm. I think one was named Stevens and one named Collins. I do not know; if they were named to me I might recall them.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you give the names of the directors that were interested?—A. No; but when the directors of two concerns are practically the same it would not be very difficult to infer. I do not say that these gentlemen committed any wrong at all in the matter, but Mr. Anderson asked me whether they were in that way occupying a dual relation. I do not say that they did any wrong in that matter at all, because they may have been the only people that had faith enough in the enterprise to put in money.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The mere fact that the contractor made money would hardly justify the conclusion that the directors made profits.

The WITNESS. Not at all; but I was given to understand that two or more of them had an interest.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. In the contract for construction?—A. Yes, sir.

CALLED ON TO SPECIFY.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. You say two or more of the directors. I want you to specify to whom your belief points.

The WITNESS. I make a great distinction between giving evidence on my own personal knowledge and otherwise.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The witness started in by saying that he did not know.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. He said his belief was that two of the directors had made profit.

The WITNESS. My belief has nothing to do with it.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I want you to specify who they are.

Q. Is your belief based on anything further than the statements made by the contractor to you?—A. That is the basis of it.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Not the contractor, but some one who knew him.

The WITNESS. Well, the contractor was in town there and I was introduced to him. I have forgotten his name, now.

UNDOUBTEDLY CERTAIN DIRECTORS OF THE UNION PACIFIC HAD AN INTEREST IN ACQUIRING KANSAS PACIFIC.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any other construction contract from which you can assert that any of the directors of the Union Pacific Company made a profit out of the construction?—A. I will answer that this way: A little while ago you submitted a supposed condition of affairs in regard to the cost of the construction of this road at the time of the consolidation. Undoubtedly there were certain directors of the Union Pacific Company that had an interest in the acquisition of the Kansas Pacific; and an acquisition might be treated as construction.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We have the full evidence as to the Kansas Pacific transaction, and are satisfied as to the profits that were made in that matter. We have the proof. But I am now speaking in regard to the system of branch constructions—the Denver and South Park, the Utah Northern, the Oregon Short Line, the Omaha and Republican Valley, and all that class of roads that have been built by the Union Pacific as feeders of the main line from 1878 to date.

The WITNESS. I have no personal knowledge in regard to that and never claimed to have any.

Q. You have no knowledge that any of the directors of the Union Pacific Company made a personal profit out of those constructions, they having voted as directors on the terms of construction?—A. I have no personal knowledge; never claimed to have any.

GENERAL EFFECT OF THE BRANCH SYSTEM PERNICIOUS.

Q. What is your personal judgment as to the general effect of the branch system of the Union Pacific on its financial status?—A. I think a large part of it has been very pernicious.

Q. Which part in particular, or which branches especially?—A. I think the acquisition of the Kansas Central, for example, was without any justification whatever, certainly without any benefit. The acquisition of the Central Branch was likewise without any justification, certainly without any benefit. A large portion of the Denver and South Park was a perfectly reckless piece of business; likewise this portion of the Colorado Central that I spoke of. I think the Oregon Short Line acquisition was a ridiculous piece of business. Those are the principal features.

Q. All of the branches you have referred to, except the Oregon Short Line, antedate 1881, do they not?—A. The Colorado Central does; the Kansas Central does not. The Kansas Central was after that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. You are mistaken about that.

The WITNESS. What, after the consolidation?

Commissioner ANDERSON. The consolidation was in 1880.

The WITNESS. Oh, well, between 1880 and 1881; I do not know particularly.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Well, we will say they antedate 1883.

The WITNESS. They were of a date subsequent to the consolidation.

Commissioner ANDERSON. As matter of fact they were part of the consolidation; that is, that Kansas Central and the Central Branch.

The WITNESS. I beg your pardon.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We have all that.

The WITNESS. Well, I will not discuss it with you.

Commissioner ANDERSON. What I want to get at is, do they antedate 1882, except the Oregon Short Line?

The WITNESS. I think the Central Branch and the Kansas Central do. The Denver, South Park and Pacific was about 1880, I think.

Commissioner ANDERSON. January, 1881.

The WITNESS. My impression was that the Denver and South Park was somewhere between 1880 and 1881.

NO AUTHORITY FOR CONSTRUCTION OF OREGON SHORT LINE.

Q. Now, taking the Oregon Short Line, will you please state what, in what particular, or for what reason your judgment is that the construction of that road was without reason or good judgment?—A. First, my main reason is that the Union Pacific Company had no authority whatever to construct it or to aid in its construction. They there deliberately gave a guarantee, and subsequently, when they were charged with having made that guarantee, they attempted to repudiate it before a committee of Congress. That they did give that guarantee is borne out by the fact that Mr. Sidney Dillon was president of both corporations and signed the bond as president of the Oregon Short Line, and signed the guarantee on that bond as president of the Union Pacific Railroad.

Q. The question I ask is more with reference to the policy of constructing the road, as to whether it is a benefit to the Union Pacific or not?—A. Last year, I think, was the best year they have had, and then it earned about one-half the first-mortgage interest.

OREGON SHORT LINE NOT PROFITABLE.

Q. Still, in passing judgment on that, you have to take a more enlarged horizon than a single year. Have you so studied the question as to have formed a definite conclusion as to whether the construction of the Oregon Short Line and the union of interest between that company and the Union Pacific, taking the whole future for the next thirty or forty or fifty years—has your field of observation enabled you to say whether that was a prudent or a foolish thing to do?—A. I will answer that by saying that I do not think any railroad man (certainly not within the last ten years) has built any railroad in expectation of what will happen thirty or forty years hence. I think that is a long way to build ahead. Certainly the Oregon Short Line has not been profitable to this date. The chief aim of the Union Pacific was not to develop any local business, but to get to the Pacific coast, and they did not choose to use the line appointed for them, namely, the Central Pacific. I question its policy, even apart from what its earnings have been.

Q. To come to closer particulars, are you acquainted with the main articles of freight and transportation that are involved in that union of the Oregon Short Line with the Union Pacific, and especially in connection with the lease of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, so as to open up the field through Oregon and to Portland?—A. In a general way, yes. But the Oregon Short Line was not built in connection with the lease of the Oregon Navigation. That was at too late a date to have any bearing on this question.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am not arguing about the merits. I am interested in determining in my own mind the question whether that particular connection is going to increase the solvent power of the Union Pacific Company or not.

The WITNESS. The road is built now, and it is hoped it will be a benefit.

Q. Can you furnish any statements of facts or figures which will help our judgment as to whether that will increase the solvent power of the Union Pacific Company or not?—A. Nothing more than their own reports show.

GUARANTEE OPEN TO CRITICISM.

Q. You are aware that they have guaranteed the interest on the Grand Island bonds. Is that guarantee open to the same criticism in your judgment?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. That it is a violation of the act of 1873?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Do you understand the distinction attempted to be drawn by the company by that guarantee?

The WITNESS. Through a traffic arrangement?

Commissioner ANDERSON. No; but that the prohibition of the law is a prohibition of a pledge of its property, and not a personal guarantee for the payment of interest; have you heard that distinction before?

The WITNESS. When you issue your note you pledge your property, do you not?

Commissioner ANDERSON. As a lawyer, I would say no.

The WITNESS. As a business man?

Commissioner ANDERSON. I will say that as a business man, if I do not pay it, my property will ultimately suffer, but the criticism I make is that the word pledge is used in its legal sense.

The WITNESS. In other words, if the Saint Joseph and Grand Island road does not earn the interest of its bonds the interest is paid out of the earnings of the Union Pacific, just as they pay the interest on the Denver and South Park, and every one of their branch roads. It is known and conceded, I think, by themselves, that their branch system, as a whole, does not earn the interest on the bonds. Now, the money has got to come from somewhere, and can only come from the earnings or the result of the sale of the credit of the Union Pacific Company.

Q. In regard to your construction of the word "pledge," if it be a promise which causes the person giving the promise to lose money, and if pledging be equivalent to paying, would not that in effect preclude the Union Pacific Company from making any corporate contract on which it should lose money?—A. Not in the general administration of its business.

COLLATERAL TRUST A DIRECT OBLIGATION.

Q. In regard to the collateral trust (you mentioned that, I think), what do you understand that collateral trust to be?—A. A direct obligation of the Union Pacific Company, supplemented by certain collateral.

Q. And of what does this collateral consist?—A. Bonds of certain of the branch lines.

Q. Bonds and stocks?—A. I think no stocks.

Q. Securities of branch lines?—A. Yes.

Q. What provision of law has the company violated in effecting the collateral trust?—A. First, the organic law, which gave them no power; second, the act of 1873, which prohibited it.

Q. Which prohibited what?—A. The pledging of the property or earnings of the company.

Q. One construction put on that is that that applied to the railroad itself aided by Congress, and did not restrict it from making such disposition as it saw fit of securities which the system held, and which were not part of the railroad; have you heard that distinction made?—A. Yes; if I were as astute a lawyer as you are, or as Judge Dillon hopes he is, I could discuss this question with you, but this is a question of practical business and honorable obligation.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE UNION PACIFIC TELEGRAPH LINE.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We know that you have given a great deal of intelligent consideration to this question, and we are anxious to hear the full force of the views of those who have criticised strongly (and after considerable examination of the facts) the transactions of these companies, in order that we may have every view before us. So we invite a full statement of your views, in order that they may be fully considered. You have also given considerable attention, have you not, to the construction of the telegraph line of the Union Pacific?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Will you give the Commission your views on that subject, or will you submit a statement which has already been made by you to Congress, if you desire to shorten the examination?

A. My views in relation to this subject are fully stated in the report of the Warner committee of the House of Representatives, being House Report No. 3501, Forty-ninth Congress, second session.

Q. Do you desire to express anything in addition to that?—A. My consideration of this question grew out of my conviction that the obligation of these companies was just as mandatory and important in the construction, maintenance, and operation of an independent telegraph system furnished with growing facilities, as the business of the country grew, as the construction, maintenance, and operation of the railroad. They of course have utterly ignored that except when it was in the interest of parties temporarily in control of the Union Pacific, when their views have radically changed.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you considered the effects of the constructive mileage allowance to the branch lines by the main line?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you given any thought to the question of constructive mileage?—A. No.

THE CASE IN 98TH UNITED STATES REPORTS.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. To what case do you refer where the Supreme Court points out remedies that you suggested a moment ago?

The WITNESS. Respecting that suit?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

The WITNESS. It was an opinion that was rendered on that demurrer—not by the United States Supreme Court—I think it was by Judge Hunt, if I am not mistaken.

Commissioner ANDERSON (to Mr. John F. Dillon). To what case did you refer?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The case reported in 98th United States Reports.

WERE THE INVESTMENTS GOOD OR BAD ONES?

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Assuming that the Oregon Short Line and the Denver and South Park were bad investments, and that they have at no time paid the interest on their mortgage bonds, yet if it appears from the books of the Union Pacific Company that the traffic coming on to the main line and hauled from Granger and from Denver increases the earnings of the main line so as to more than pay the deficit of interest on its bonds, what would you then say as to whether the investments were good or bad?—A. On your premise, of course it might be very good. It took a good many years after the Pennsylvania Railroad acquired its line from here to Philadelphia before it paid its charges, but it was very good for the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Q. Is it or not fair, in determining the wisdom or unwisdom of the acquisition by the Union Pacific Company of these branches, to take into account the effect of the earnings on the main line as well as to take into account the fact that the earnings of the branch lines, with the constructive mileage allowed to them fails to pay the interest on the first-mortgage bonds?—A. Undoubtedly. But when you are considering the side of mercy to a wrong-doer, you want as well to consider the relation he bore to other parties at the time these things were done.

Commissioner LITTLER. I am dealing with the property as I find it.

The WITNESS. I am not inclined to be merciful to a man who has bankrupted me.

Commissioner LITTLER. These investigations are not for the purpose of determining what punishment shall be given to the wrong-doer, but for the purpose of determining what shall be done with the property as we find it just now. The question of what shall be done with the wrong-doers is a separate and independent one.

The WITNESS. But is it not important to consider in this connection that, if these people are wrong-doers, such hedges shall be thrown about them that they shall not hereafter bankrupt other people?

Commissioner LITTLER. Yes; that would be proper.

The WITNESS. They assisted in the bankruptcy of the Denver and Rio Grande, that I was interested in, in another way.

THE SUSTAINING OF BRANCHES A CORRECT THEORY.

The CHAIRMAN. If by the constructive mileage system all the branch lines are sustained, then the merit is with the main line, and not with the branch lines.

The WITNESS. Undoubtedly the theory of sustaining a branch line for the purpose of developing a main line is a correct theory.

The CHAIRMAN. You believe that to be a correct theory?

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe it to be a correct theory to deplete the treasury of the main line in order to build up other lines?

The WITNESS. No; but it may be a very wise thing to temporarily deplete the main treasury for the purpose of bringing more, subsequently, to the common fund.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How long is the depletion to continue?—A. That would be another question.

Q. Might it not end in severely depleting the treasury of the main line in the attempt to support the branch lines?—A. Undoubtedly; and hence that provision that is so severely tested by this case, in the Thurman act, which laid hold of all the property that they had at that time and put the lien of the Government upon it after the actual cost of the property.

CONSTRUCTION OF TRIBUTARIES TO UNION PACIFIC NECESSARY.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Are you able to state whether, in your judgment, reviewing the whole territory of the Union Pacific, it would be worth less money or more money if it had never constructed or acquired any branch interests whatever and had confined itself to the main line from Omaha to Ogden?—A. Oh, it could not have confined itself to its main line in view of the general development of the country.

Q. It would have been utterly impossible?—A. That would have been utterly impossible.

Q. The requirements of the adjoining territory compelled the construction of tributaries that would feed them and develop their business?—A. Somewhat.

Q. That was the general result—that branch lines had to be built, just as branches have to grow on a tree?—A. That will be the argument adduced.

Q. But is it your view?—A. As a general proposition, as stated by Commissioner Littler; yes.

BRANCH LINES NOT TO BE DEVELOPED AT EXPENSE OF MAIN LINES

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. But in the case now before you (the case of the Union Pacific Railroad), the branch line system, if a wise system, is not to be developed at the expense of the main line?—A. Not at all; I would be very emphatically of the opinion that very much of the disadvantage that the Union Pacific has labored under, growing out of the competition with other roads that have been built in that country, would have been avoided had they treated the Kansas Pacific Railroad, and all of the railroads that are mentioned in the original legislation, in the spirit in which those laws were enacted; because all of the companies then east of the Mississippi river would have had a common interest, and there would have been no inducement to enter into that territory in unjust competition. For instance, the Kansas Pacific was intended to furnish an outlet for that whole section running through Baltimore, Cincinnati, Louisville, Saint Louis, and Kansas City. Leavenworth was given a connection to Lawrence on the Kansas Pacific for the same reason. The Hannibal and Saint Joe was given a connection through what is now the Central Branch, intended to meet the Kansas Pacific originally, and afterwards attempted to be diverted to meet the Union Pacific, as the Kansas Pacific was originally at the 100th meridian. The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy was given a line through the Burlington and Missouri line; other roads were given connection through the Sioux City and Pacific. So that all the country there would have been served by a common interest. Of course, by the development in time you could not say what lines, purely parallel, might have been built. Some people thought there would be money in building the West Shore alongside of the New York Central. But the branch line system would have been radically different had the Union Pacific people treated the lines, which they long subsequently acquired—had they treated them originally in the true spirit of the legislation.

A GOOD DEAL OF ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE SUBJECT OF RAILROADS.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. You have disclosed a good deal of intelligence on this subject. I will ask you to state what connection you have had with railroads and whether you have been engaged in the practical operation of railroads, and, if so, how long.—A. My first connection with any railroad was, as I stated, with the Kansas Pacific. Since that date I have been connected generally as a director with one or more railroads, and my information, of course, is not so technical as the information of gentlemen, for example, like Mr. Potter.

Q. What roads are you connected with?—A. I am a director in the Saint Louis, Arkansas and Texas.

Q. Then, as I understand you, you have given the subject of railroads a good deal of attention for a good many years?—A. As much as my limited capacity would allow me.

IGNORANCE REGARDING THE SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC.

Q. Do you know anything about the Sioux City and Pacific?—A. No, sir.

Commissioner LITTLER (jocularly). There is a wonderful amount of ignorance in this country in relation to that road.

The WITNESS. That ignorance, I think, grows out of the fact that there was a great deal of ignorance as to the points of the compass when that road was located.

Commissioner LITTLER. We have never been able to find out who constructed that road.

The WITNESS. I think John I. Blair got some of the boodle.

PLAN OF SETTLEMENT.

Q. Have you thought of the subject of the best possible adjustment between the United States and these Pacific railroads; have you made a study of it at all?—A. I have given it some little attention.

Q. Have you examined the different schemes suggested or the bills that have been before Congress?—A. Yes; I have read most of the bills that have been presented.

Q. Dividing these schemes into schemes relating to an extension, with a fixed annual or semi-annual payment, and schemes looking to an immediate adjustment either by a payment in money or an adjustment of a present and immediate kind which would determine and separate the relations of the United States from the railroads, please explain to the Commission what, in your judgment, would be the best method.—A. I do not think there could be an immediate adjustment at all. I do not think either of these companies, on their own showing, or acknowledgment, is in any position to make any adjustment that would be at all reasonable to the Government, or possible for them.

THE COMPANIES SHOULD NOT BE OPPRESSED.

I do not think these companies ought to be oppressed. I think the first thing to do is to administer existing law in a spirit of equity. First compel these people to do those things that they can do, and when they have reached the limit of their power, then carry out the spirit of the original legislation and say "you shall not be compelled or asked to do more than you can do." For example, somebody ought to pay up this stock. Somebody ought to compensate these treasuries for the dividends that were paid out of the stock that was clearly issued either without authority or without consideration. Had that money never been distributed of course these companies would have had a sinking fund more than ample to provide for all these things in the near future; not that they would be able to pay these bonds at maturity, because they could not. Next, if the gentlemen will not do that——

Commissioner LITTLER (interposing.) Assuming that the Government cannot do it—not that it will not, but that it cannot, according to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Connecticut case, and that we must deal with these people as we find them—what then?

The WITNESS. Well, I will not assume that case. There was a way pointed out by which it could be done, and can be done to-day.

RIGHTS OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Commissioner LITTLER. Please point out that way to us. We shall be happy to see it.

The WITNESS. Well, if I had my way I should pass a simple bill, at first, through Congress declaring that the United States Government, wherever it had a moneyed interest in any corporation, should at all times and under all circumstances be entitled to all of the rights in regard to protecting its interest that a stockholder has. That seemed to be the rock on which the court split. That would not be an ex post facto law, because here is an unexecuted or uncompleted contract.

Commissioner LITTLER. You think that would stand a test of the court, do you?

The WITNESS. I think it would be worth trying. It would stand the test of common sense.

Commissioner LITTLER. That is, perhaps, a different thing.

The WITNESS. Yes, I think it is. My experience of courts proves that.

DEBT SHOULD BE PAID BEFORE DIVIDEND DECLARED.

Commissioner LITTLER. But now, passing that and taking these companies as they are, what would you recommend?

The WITNESS. In the first place, I would do nothing that would limit the development of these companies to their highest degree of efficiency. They ought certainly to be able to stand (and still perform their duties) the ordinary competition of private capital. I certainly would not allow these companies to pay any more dividends on stock that represented no money until they had paid this debt. At the time of the maturity of this debt, without changing the law in the meantime, I would simply ascertain what amount was due the Government from these companies, and I would, in addition to preventing them from paying dividends on stock that was not paid for, have them earn interest on every cent that ever went into these properties. Then I would extend that debt for a reasonable period at the lowest rate of interest at which the United States Government could borrow money; and that is even more than these roads have asked, I believe.

RESTRICTIONS AS TO NEW INDEBTEDNESS.

Commissioner LITTLER. State the percentage, if you have it in your mind.

The WITNESS. Not over 3 per cent., and I would make that possible on a condition that they should be given authority to extend their first mortgage, and I think their first mortgage could be extended under existing law at the rate of 3 per cent., because the first mortgage of the Union Pacific Railroad is, practically, a Government bond. I would throw restrictions around them in respect of creating new indebtedness, in respect of the maladministration of their property, not the proper administration of their property, and I would not allow them to renew, by a mortgage on this property, any debt that had heretofore been improperly created. Certainly, if they did, it must be something like a debenture obligation, coming after all of their indebtedness that was authorized to be created, and after this indebtedness to the Government. They have wasted this property, and if they had not wasted it they would not be in this condition.

SYSTEM OF PAYMENTS.—FIXED AMOUNT MIGHT BECOME ONEROUS.

Commissioner LITTLER. Would you pass from a system of payments based upon a percentage of net earnings to a system of payments of a fixed amount?

The WITNESS. No; because the payment of a fixed amount might become onerous.

Q. Suppose the companies should prefer the fixed amount from the Government point of view, what would be your judgment?

The WITNESS. If that was a reasonable amount and they showed a disposition to meet this payment in the spirit that I have suggested, I would do with them the same as I would do with anybody else who was trying to do the best he could.

Q. As a matter of fact, is it not true that the payment of a percentage on the net earnings necessarily leads to all sorts of collisions and irritating differences of opinion in ascertaining the net earnings?—A. No; I do not think so.

Q. Is it not the fact that there have been many such differences?—A. Yes.

Q. I do not say whose fault it is, but my question is: Does not that method of ascertaining the sum necessarily lead to irritation?—A. Not necessarily. I would allow these companies to spend all the money they want to spend on permanent improvements. The great object, I think, is not to get the money back. If it can come back in the spirit of that original legislation, let it come back. If it all goes, let it go. But in regard to a suggestion made by you just now as to the possibility of a settlement which would take these companies away from the Government, you can never do that. The trouble is, those companies do not recognize that there is any obligation outside of this technical moneyed obligation, and they try to make it appear that the Government is a sort of entity outside of the public. This road was built for the benefit of the public. It is not right that it should be allowed to go on and control entirely and arbitrarily the question of rates. That is a question that is involved likewise as to the future.

ALL RAILROADS SHOULD BE SUBJECT TO LEGISLATIVE CONTROL.

Q. Would you draw a distinction between the Pacific railroads and any other railroads in the United States; is it not your judgment that they should all be subject to reasonable legislative control?—A. Yes; and once having made a rate, growing out of competition, I would make that their maximum rate; for a rate agreed upon between two railroads must be satisfactory, no matter what the motive.

Q. You have specified an extension of the debt for a reasonable period, and that the rate of interest should not exceed 3 per cent.; that the company should be controlled against misuse of their funds and franchises, and that if they were satisfied with a fixed rate, and the rate was sufficient to meet the case, that there would be no objection to substituting a fixed rate instead of a percentage on the net earnings.—A. Not at all.

HOW TO INCREASE THE GOVERNMENT'S SECURITY.

Q. Now, have you any suggestions to make as to what can be done to increase the Government security, the claim being that the security is now limited to the subsidized portion of the road?—A. Yes; I have one suggestion. The chief thing to avoid is the dissipation of this property. For example, treating the consolidation of these companies as an accepted fact, there is an issue of bonds known as the Kansas Pacific consolidated bonds. They were issued for certain specific purposes, part of which have not been carried out, notwithstanding the bonds were out. But there was an obligation issued by the Kansas Pacific and, of course, assumed by the Union Pacific now, an obligation of this company to pay the principal and interest of those bonds. The lands of the Kansas Pacific were given as an additional collateral security. During a period when dividends have been paid on the Union Pacific the proceeds of sales of lands by that company have gone into the common fund. They have even used the proceeds of land sales to pay the interest on the Kansas Pacific consolidated bonds at a time when it was claimed that the Union Pacific was earning dividends on its stock, instead of using the proceeds of land sales in accordance with the conditions of that mortgage, and of every other reasonable mortgage, that the estate, if sold, should go to wipe out the debt instead of for the general uses of the company.

Q. In other words, that the Union Pacific Company should have paid the interest on the Kansas Pacific consolidated bonds out of its earnings before declaring its dividends, and was not entitled to be reimbursed for that by the proceeds of the lands?—A. I certainly think so.

Q. The question was what could be done to increase the security of the United States—by putting in stocks or bonds of collateral roads, or any other security?—A. I claim that they are all in, absolutely, under the Thurman act; I think it is section 20 of that act. You cannot get more out of this carcass than there is in it.

THE SUPREME COURT ON THE THURMAN ACT.

Q. The claim of the company is that Congress cannot increase the lien of the road so as to make it apply to things to which it did not apply when the act was passed. But without discussing the legal merits of that, can you suggest any method by which the security of the United States can be increased by the co-operation of the Union Pacific Company?—A. On that subject I could not suggest anything, because it simply makes the creature more powerful than the creator. The Supreme Court of the United States, in affirming the constitutionality of the Thurman act, stated as broadly as language can state that the power of Congress over this road was practically absolute, and they simply assumed that they were subject to a technicality, and, therefore, instead of amending that law so as to compel the companies to provide payment currently, they thought they could go to any extent in providing a sinking fund proper in the public treasury. So that Congress was amply authorized to do everything to prevent the dissipation of this property, because the stockholders had no rights until after the debts were paid.

Q. Please continue the development of your scheme of adjustment.—A. I have not any fixed scheme of adjustment.

METHOD OF COMPUTATION.

Q. Well, give us your views on the subject in regard to a method of ascertaining or fixing a method of ascertaining what fixed payments would be reasonable as between the United States Government and the companies. What methods of computation would you resort to in order to ascertain the present value of the debt?—A. I think if these companies can ever pay the debt they can do it in fifty years. I do not think it necessary to extend the debt indefinitely. I do not think it would be wise legislation in any way to talk about letting a debt run for one hundred or one hundred and fifty years that was made to run thirty years. If they can not pay it I would take it by installments, just as they could pay it, and let the question of the maturity of the debt remain indefinite. I believe in being easy on a debtor.

Q. Can you make no suggestions whatever by which the relations between the companies and the Government can be entirely separated and dissolved?—A. No, because I do not think it possible. This road must always remain the creature of the people.

PLAN OF SETTLEMENT.

Q. I am speaking of the financial relations. One method is clearly possible; that is, that the company should pay the full amount up to date to the Government; that would result in a dissolution of their financial relation, would it not?—A. That is one way. Let them pay off the first-mortgage debt in any way they please, so that the lien would be removed from being in advance of the Government; then let the Government take the balance of the earnings, so far as the stockholders are concerned, that have not paid anything into the Treasury; and I would even go so far—notwithstanding my criticism on the $10,000,000 of stock—I would go so far as to consider that $10,000,000 because it did actually go into the Treasury; therefore, the proportion that that $10,000,000, or any other sum that went into the Treasury, bears to the capital stock, I would make provision that that proportion of the dividend might be taken out of the net earnings. I would be very liberal in the matter of betterments and improvements, and whenever it should be shown to the President of the United States or some other authority that the company could better devote the money to betterments than to pay it into the Treasury of the United States, I would allow it to do so.

Q. But that would not lead to the divorce of the financial relations to which I have referred?—A. I do not see how that is possible unless they pay the debt, and then that will belong to the United States.

Q. But that would be the same as to all railroads; but if the officers should tender payment to the United States to-day, would you approve that?—A. Most undoubtedly.

TOO MUCH MONEY IN THE TREASURY ALREADY.

Q. There are complaints that there is already money enough in the Treasury. Would there not be serious objection to receiving $40,000,000 of the people's money if the Union Pacific people should undertake to gather it together and pay the debt?—A. I do not think there could be any objection. I can not conceive of any.

Q. Would that meet your view?—A. Yes.

FORECLOSURE ALL BOSH.

Q. Another method that would lead to a divorce in time, or, if it could be effected immediately, would be a foreclosure of the roads?—A. I have not taken any interest in that sort of thing; that is bosh.

Q. In other words, you oppose the idea of the United States taking possession of this property and undertaking to run it as a private enterprise?—A. No; I do not. But I would only do that in case of that being an absolute necessity, and I do not think it is necessary.

Q. When you speak of it as bosh you mean that they ought not to resort to such a method as that, and not as to their taking possession of the road?—A. That is it. I think the other roads would receive much more consideration and the country would absolutely be developed more rapidly if there was not a necessarily selfish interest. Of course that is involved in the maintenance of this property at present.

THE PUBLIC BENEFITED BY REDUCTION OF RATES.

Q. You have spoken of restricting them from paying dividends until the debt was paid. Do you mean to go the whole length until the debt was paid or only that you would put certain restrictions on the period when the dividend was to be paid?—A. If they get to a point where they could pay current interest on the subsidy bonds and a portion of the principal, that would cancel this debt within a reasonable period and the rates were not unusually high, I might pay them something for superintendence; but I think the public at large would be more truly benefited by the reduction of rates. No man that ever put a penny of money into these railroads should be ousted of that penny. On the contrary, he should have that, and reasonable interest, even cumulative interest, if he can show that there was any money put in there and not reimbursed.

Q. In regard to the management of the road itself, the security of the public, and the manner in which the rolling-stock is kept, is it, in your judgment, true that a corporation which for a long period of years pays no interest whatever to its stockholders, is as well managed as one that does pay a reasonable dividend?—A. As a general proposition it is not true, although sometimes the directors of a company can make more money in speculating on a non-dividend paying stock, and they get their profit in that way.

Q. But I am speaking of the ordinary management through the administrative officers who take charge of the road and keep regularity in its trains and insure safety to the public. Is not that secured better by railroads that pay reasonable dividends?—A. As railroads are managed to-day, certainly.

Q. Have you any other suggestions you can make to the Commission in regard to the subject of the relations between the Government and the company?—A. I think not.

DEBT OF SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How could you adjust a debt, as in the case of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad, where the road has a first mortgage of $16,000 a mile and it could be duplicated to-day at $11,000 a mile?

Commissioner LITTLER. And where it does not pay the interest on its first-mortgage bonds?

The WITNESS. Well, in that case they claim that that road is consolidated into the Northwest, or, practically, absorbed into the system, and for the very purpose of giving the Northwest an advantage that it could not possess otherwise than by building a road. The Northwest system is amply able to pay, and the Northwest can make the Sioux City road pay.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE CHICAGO AND NORTHWESTERN COMPANY.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. How is the Government to get its debt, under the circumstances, in its adjustment with the Sioux City road? By extension or how?—A. I think that is the severest case you can put. I think an equitable arrangement could be found, as between the Government and the Northwest Company. Of course you cannot get more than there is in it, but you are entitled to get all that there is, reasonably, in it. If the Sioux City and Pacific had remained independent to this hour, and could not pay a cent, nobody would say a word, except that the Government had lost its money.

Commissioner LITTLER. I was going to call your attention to the fact that the Northwestern management declined to make the Government any offer whatever, and is wholly indifferent to what legislation takes place. It also appears from the evidence already taken that the company has never paid a dollar of net earnings into the Treasury, and that it is not now, and has nor for years, been able to pay the interest on the first-mortgage bonds; and that there is a large accumulation of overdue coupons. That is the financial situation of the property, and we would be glad to have you suggest a remedy by which the Government could secure itself.

AN ILLUSTRATION.

The WITNESS. I do not think of any difference in regard to the Northwest Company that would make me hesitate to devise a scheme. But I will give you an illustration. The Central branch for years after its construction never earned the interest on its first-mortgage bonds It finally came into the possession of some new people and they extended it until, I think, it was possibly self-sustaining. Now, Mr. Gould acquired that property for reasons satisfactory to himself, when he was in practical control of the Union Pacific, and when he was in practical control of the Kansas Pacific. He gave a certain consideration for it. I think he gave equal to about $250 a share for some 8,000 shares of stock that they picked up from the widows and orphans. Whether the Union Pacific Company gave him cash, or bonds, or what not, they gave him a consideration which reimbursed him for that. Therefore he, having acquired it for a consideration satisfactory to himself—they having acquired it for a consideration satisfactory to themselves and on a basis which showed that it must be a highly profitable property, worth more even than the 10 per cent. stock of the United New Jersey Railroads, guaranteed by the Pennsylvania Company; now if that stock was worth $250 a share in 1879, for example, it implied a higher earning capacity. I do not think that the Union Pacific Company, or whoever is the owner now (it is hard to tell who is), should be permitted to plead a non-earning capacity after he bought it, for a purpose which showed that it was certainly earning a great deal to him. So that if the Sioux City was acquired by the Northwest for what they deemed a valuable consideration (as I suppose they wanted to get to Omaha) they can certainly make that earn very much more than its interest, and if they could not make it earn, fairly and honestly, more than the interest on the first-mortgage bonds I would not ask them to pay the Government debt—even the rich Northwest corporation.

EFFECT OF TAKING POSSESSION OF SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What would be the effect of the Government taking possession of the Sioux City and Pacific road and running it on operating expenses?—A. I think they would lose money, probably, unless they compelled the Northwest to do certain things which I think, of course, they could do.

Q. What would be the practical result?—A. Oh, I do not think the Government wants a hundred miles of railroad up in that country situated as that railroad is. That is a very different thing from the Government operating the Union Pacific or the Central Pacific.

Q. How would they compel the Northwestern to an adjustment by taking possession?—A. I think that when the Northwest acquired the Sioux City and Pacific they acquired it subject to all its obligations, and the Sioux City was incorporated into this general legislation of 1862 and 1864; which legislation was subject to alteration, amendment, and repeal. And I think Congress could legislate on the Sioux City and Pacific to affect the Northwest just as they legislated on the Central and the Union Pacific to affect them. A man does not get all the sauce when he takes a franchise. If he gets the benefit he must take the responsibilities, too.

CONGRESS COULD APPLY A REMEDY.

Q. Can you suggest any means by which this Commission can compel the Northwestern to assume any more responsibilities than it has in relation to that property?—A. Under the decision of the United States circuit court in California I do not think this Commission has much power to compel anything.

Q. Can you suggest any remedy that Congress could apply?—A. I think I could draw a bill.

Q. Keeping in mind the fact that the Northwestern Company is merely a stockholder in that property?—A. Yes; that is the "innocent holder" dodge.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the legal relation between the companies today. The proof is that the Northwestern owns and controls a majority, and, perhaps, all the stock of the Sioux City.

The WITNESS. If that is the legal relation I would endeavor to see what the equitable relation is, and see if we could not do something with that.

DIVIDENDS DECLARED WITHOUT AUTHORITY OF LAW.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Did I understand you, among the other violations of law enumerated by you, to say that the Union Pacific Company had declared dividends without authority of law?—A. Most certainly you understood me to that effect, because they could not declare dividends under any authority of law when the stock outstanding was issued without any authority.

Q. Do you assert that on any other basis except the illegality of the issue of stock—I mean, do you assert that they declared dividends in years when no dividend was earned?—A. I never said that.

Q. I know you did not; but I ask you whether that is your meaning. Have you any knowledge on the subject whether dividends were earned in all the years when they were declared?—A. I think they attempted to show that they earned a great deal more money than they paid out, because very much of the money paid on their branch lines came from earnings.

Q. Are you aware that it is the practice of most railroads, and I presume of the Union Pacific road, to count the accretions of former years in determining whether, in a given year, they can declare a dividend or not?—A. Yes.

A "SURPLUS" WIPED OUT.

Q. In your judgment is that a conservative policy?—A. That is simply a fraud; so patent a fraud that the Northwestern wiped out, the other day, $10,000,000 of what they called "surplus." The Union Pacific cannot wipe out a surplus that is represented by bonds and stocks.

Q. You cannot assert what the credit balance on the balance-sheet represents unless you take the property into which it has gone and ascertain its true and actual value?—A. Certainly. As a rule, surpluses grow up by failing to expend what should have been expended, charging to construction account what should have gone to operating expenses.

Q. Is it the practice of railroad companies to keep their construction account up to actual cost, without making the necessary allowance for deterioration and decrease of value from year to year?—A. Poor's Manual has too many pages to answer that. Some railroads have no construction account. John Edgar Thomson some years ago found it exceedingly dangerous to have a construction account open. The managers insisted on having items go to construction account instead of operating account, and he simply wiped it out. The Pacific railroads to-day, where they have a construction account, should not charge into that except in a specific and open manner what should go to construction.

Q. The conservative policy would be to charge everything that there can be any question about to operating expenses, and so reduce the temptation to declare dividends which have not been fairly earned?—A. I think so.

NO UNDUE RESTRICTIONS DESIRABLE, BUT CONDITIONS SHOULD BE IMPOSED.

Q. The Union Pacific people have stated to the Commission with great earnestness that they desire, in order to improve their position and increase their solvent power, to be awarded by Congress through legislation an absolute and unlimited power to build branch lines, and in such manner as the directors shall deem advisable. Is it your judgment that legislation on that character would be good policy, if the other terms of the adjustment in regard to extension and fixed payment are made so as to satisfy the United States claim in, say, fifty years?—A. I do not think, as I said before, that any undue restrictions should be laid on this company, but I think that when this company asks for any franchise whatever, in view of past experience, certain conditions that are reasonable should be placed on it and those conditions should be kept.

Q. I am asking you to specify in regard to this branch-line question, because the railroad companies attach a great deal of importance to it. Would your judgment lead you to approve a bill which should fix an annual payment, regulate the rate of interest, extend the debt for fifty years from date, and then permit the railroad company to make any extensions and build any branch lines which in the judgment of the directors should be approved?—A. Provided that no debt or stock of any kind should ever be issued on those roads unless it represented a hundred cents on a dollar, on a fair estimate, for construction, and that some reasonable restriction be placed upon them in respect of charges.

Q. What do you mean by "in respect of charges"?—A. In respect of rates.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Would not any extension plan be accompanied by years of litigation, charges, and counter-charges that have characterized these roads for the last twenty years?—A. Well, I suppose it would be possible to pass a bill, when the Government would cease complaining; but whether it would be possible to pass a bill that would stop the other fellows, I do not know.

ATTEMPTS TO RESTRAIN THE ROADS.

Q. Would not then an adjustment carrying out a divorcement of the Government from the company, even at a loss, be more beneficial to the Government, the country, and the roads?—A. I do not think that the road has ever been restrained. I think the road has done all that it would have done except, possibly, during the past year; and I guess they are glad now that they did not build any more than they did.

Q. Has not Congress attempted repeatedly by enactments to restrain the roads?—A. I only know of two attempts. One was the passage of the Thurman act, which certainly was liberal towards the companies, and the other was an act passed in June, 1874, to compel the Union Pacific to extend facilities to the Kansas Pacific, making a failure to do that a subject of fine and imprisonment. That never did the Kansas Pacific any good. Judge Dillon can tell you more about that than I can, as to why it failed.

Q. Practically, was there any result from such restraining legislation?—A. No result except to hasten the bankruptcy of the Kansas Pacific.

WHO HAS THE POWER?

Q. What assurances then would there be, judging by past history, of any utility in that sort of legislation?—A. I think that the Commissioner of Railroads (under the law creating the Auditor of Railroad Accounts, in addition to the other legislation), in connection with the Secretary of the Interior, has more power over these corporations, under existing law, than any Government officer that I know of has over anything under his charge, except it may be the Secretary of the Treasury over the key to the vaults.

I will give you an example. Mr. Armstrong was once Commissioner of Railroads. He was as nice an old gentleman as ever lived. When he was appointed he desired to magnify his office. They all do that. [Laughter.] He heard of me. He met me one night up at the Fifth Avenue Hotel and got talking about various things, about his office and what he hoped to do, and so on. I told him I thought he had a very responsible office and one that gave any man a great opportunity for political distinction in the proper sense—an advancement in public favor—by the proper exercise of the functions of his office. He said he would be very glad to have any suggestions, and that that was what he was going to do; that he was going to make these fellows "toe the mark," and so on. Subsequent to that time I had occasion to talk to him about a subject, not the Union Pacific, but the Texas Pacific. I wrote him a letter and he met me once after that in New York and referred to this letter, and he says, "Mr. Reiff, I have a letter in my office from you and I don't know exactly what to do with it." I asked, "Is it written in good English?" Yes, he thought it was. Then I said, "The letter asks you to do a certain thing." "Well," he says, "the trouble about this is that if any question properly comes before me that I have got to decide upon, I am going to decide upon that question without fear, favor, or hope of reward. I do not stand in fear of anybody." But, he says, "I do not want to go out looking for things." "Well," I said, "it is exactly to look for things that your particular office was created. When Senator Thurman and Senator Edmunds created your office that is exactly what it was done for."

Another instance is that the Attorney-General was at one time specially directed to file a bill, and never filed it.

I would simply have these gentlemen perform their duty, or I would put somebody in their places who would do it. All that is wanted is a fair man.

HAS RESTRAINING LEGISLATION FAILED?

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Then we come back to the original proposition, whether restraining legislation has failed or, if there is a deficiency in the law, whether the law has failed. What hope has the Government that the arrangement can be made any more satisfactory in the future?—A. Well, possibly, if you were President of these United States you would see whether the people appointed to office, whether Cabinet officers or not, would perform the duties assigned to them. If they did not you would try some one else. There is no use looking for new legislation on this matter until there is a deliberate and faithful attempt to enforce what you have. There is plenty of law in the books. The Secretary of the Interior has lots of power; so has the Commissioner of Railroads; so has the Attorney General; more than all, the President.

Q. What plan have you to suggest, that would be sufficient, with reference to the enforcement of the legislation to which you refer?—A. I am not administering the general affairs of the Government, but if I were an autocrat I should send for these gentlemen if they had failed to enforce the law. I would endeavor to ascertain their reasons therefor. If they could not give me any satisfactory reasons I would give them one more show, or displace them, or have them commit hari-kari under the Chinese plan. If they did not do it I would punish them as I punished other people for short comings.

PRESCRIBE A PENALTY.

You will notice that wherever there is a law in the statute book that is attempted to be enforced and the penalty is prescribed, they walk right up and settle. But the trouble is, legislation is made sometimes in a general sort of way, and there is put in the bill no penalty. For example, section 20 of the act of 1862 provides a certain character of accounts to be rendered. In other words, Congress said, at the end of all this legislation, "We want these accounts furnished every year. We want to know the particulars of your business; the bonds out, the stock out, etc. We want every piece of information that anybody would be entitled to under the circumstances." Congress further says that those reports shall be submitted under oath. But there is no penalty attached to that law; and yet, for years, reports were filed in Washington, first in the Treasury Department, and afterwards in the Interior Department, in which the railroad people stated that this stock, for example, was fully paid, and swore to it. There was no attempt made to investigate the matter. Now, possibly, if there had been a penalty attached to that they would not have stated what they did.

Q. By a penalty you mean imprisonment?—A. Yes; if that is necessary; though I do not like to put people behind the bars.

Q. In the enforcement of a law do you regard imprisonment as more important than forfeiture or fine?—A. Oh, forfeiture is a fraud. The Broadway Railroad has shown that.

CONCERNING THE DUTIES OF GOVERNMENT DIRECTOR.

Q. Of what importance has the office of Government railroad director been to the Government in the enforcement of existing law?—A. A great advantage, if the Commissioner would perform his duties.

Q. Have the duties of Government director been performed in the past in aiding the Government?—A. According to the views of the respective directors, I suppose so. They have all sworn that they perform their duties.

Q. Have you any suggestions to make with reference to the office of Government director or to the duties of that office?—A. I think the duties of a director of a corporation are a very serious matter. I think that a Government director ought to be absolutely disinterested. The object and aim of the law is to have him absolutely disinterested, so that he may have no personal interest whatever in the subject of investigation. If those directors administer the duties of their office in the true spirit of responsibility of a director, they would keep this concern from committing many errors.

$10 A DAY NOT FIRST CLASS COMPENSATION.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. But could it be brought about that they should perform these duties thoroughly under a system of appointment that pays them $10 a day when they attend, and which does not charge them with obtaining that vast mass of exceedingly intricate information that is necessary for the thorough performance of the duties assigned to them?—A. Ten dollars a day is not first-class compensation for men competent to perform the duties of Government director.

Q. But the chairman's idea is to inquire whether the office of Government director should be abolished, or whether it should require a man to perform that duty exclusively, or whether a better salary should be attached to the office, or what change you would suggest so as to make the office thoroughly effective?—A. Yes; I think they should have a salary that would enable them to afford to give their time, if a salary is necessary. Lots of people, probably, would take the office without salary. But what I mean is this: It is not necessary for a man to be a member of the majority and have a voice in the management. If there are thirteen members in a board, and if Mr. Gould is one, and he is interested enough to go to a meeting, I will bet on him every time. [Laughter.] He will do the voting. I mean, if a man is determined to benefit the Government, and he knows what he wants, he is a majority in himself.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. As the office is now constituted would not the Government be as well off without directors as with directors?—A. Yes; I think so.

Q. Have you any further suggestion?—A. No.

LEGAL STOCK OF UNION PACIFIC OUTSTANDING.

By Mr. JOHN F. DILLON:

Q. You are of opinion, as I understand, that there is no legal stock of the Union Pacific Company outstanding unless it may be the last $10,000,000 which was issued, the money for which went into the treasury of the company?—A. I think there is. The first $2,138,000 is, I think, legal; but I do not think there was more than about 10 per cent. paid in on it.

Q. Were you connected with the Kansas Pacific for a time?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever own stock in it?—A. I do not know that I ever owned stock in my own name. I had a little interest in it.

Q. Do you know how much money was ever paid on account of stock subscriptions to the Kansas Pacific?—A. In form, none. Oh, there was a nominal amount paid at the time of incorporation.

Q. In fact, any?—A. In fact, none, except by contract for work done; and, on the basis of the estimated cost of the Union Pacific, it was fully paid, I suppose.

Q. Have you ever owned any stock in the Union Pacific Company?—A. I never had any in my own name.

Q. Have you had any in fact?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you buy it?—A. I do not know. I bought it when I thought it was going up.

Q. You knew it was illegal?—A. That has nothing to do with the question.

Q. Have you bought any since 1880?—A. I do not know that I have.

Q. Directly or indirectly?—A. No; I do not think I have.

A SUFFERER FROM THE CONDUCT OF THE UNION PACIFIC.

Q. Have you any stock interest in the company now?—A. No.

Q. The Kansas Pacific?—A. No. The Kansas Pacific is wiped out, you say.

Q. You stated that you were a sufferer, as I understood you, by the consolidation?—A. No; I did not say so.

Q. What was your statement in regard to being a sufferer from the acts of stockholders?—A. I stated that I suffered from the conduct of the Union Pacific towards the Kansas Pacific in the matter of not granting them their rights under the law.

Q. In what respect—were you a stockholder?—A. I was a bondholder, and I had stock interests from time to time. When I was interested in the company my interests were the company's interests.

Q. You suffered in your capacity as a stockholder and a bondholder?—A. Yes.

Q. When you acquired this stock you knew everything you know now in regard to the consideration for which it was issued, did you not?—A. I did not know as much about the law of the creation of these companies then as I did subsequently.

MATTERS OF PUBLIC DISCUSSION AND NOTORIETY.

Q. As I understand your fundamental position, it is that, although the Union Pacific to-day has seven or eight thousand stockholders, none of whom, perhaps, or very few of whom were interested in the construction of the road, all of that stock (although purporting to be fully paid and although it may have been transferred a hundred times since its original issue) should be treated as null, except so far as it originally represented cash paid into the treasury. That is the basis, is it not, of the remedy that you suggest as to the manner in which that stock should be dealt with in any future legislation?—A. Well, I do not know that I would go to that bald extent. If there were any extenuating circumstances in the case of the present stockholders I might well be induced, if it lay with me, to draw distinctions. But where I found a stockholder or party interested in the securities of the Union Pacific Company, to-day, who was not innocent and profited by the things complained of, I certainly would treat him as not entitled to consideration and I would make him pay; and some people who may not be at present interested I would make pay. I would draw a broad distinction between an absolute innocent and one who was not innocent, but I do not suppose that that would compel me to go to the extent of saying that these holders of stocks and bonds who acquired them after 1875, or mainly after 1880, were entitled to give no consideration whatever to the source of their holdings. All these things have been matters of public discussion and notoriety from 1869 down. I suppose that there are very few innocent stockholders to-day, in the true sense, who acquired their stock prior to 1880; because the list of stockholders then, as shown by the consolidation, was very small in number, although respectable in amount, of holders.

Q. Going now into some specific matters: First, in relation to the branch roads. Have you ever taken any steps to prevent the construction or to question the policy of the company in building branch roads?—A. Not that I know of.

SUIT OF ARNOLD LEO AGAINST THE UNION PACIFIC.

Q. Do you know anything in regard to a suit having been brought in the Supreme Court of the United States by one Arnold Leo against the Union Pacific Company?—A. I recollect something of such a suit.

Q. Do you remember the year it was brought?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you advise the bringing of that suit?—A. No, sir.

Right here, gentlemen of the Commission, I desire to say that I am perfectly willing to be subjected to any reasonable cross-examination. I started out by saying that I was not here as a volunteer witness and that my relations to some people I might come in contact with here have not been agreeable. I do not think I ought to be subjected to a cross-examination that will lead to things not connected with this investigation. What Judge Dillion wants to show is that I am moved by a personal motive. If he asks me whether I am, I will answer that question. I do not know that Judge Dillion has any right here. I do not want to place myself in the position of declining to answer. I am not the criminal. I am not the defendant. I am not on trial. And I think I am entitled to some consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. We will give you every consideration, Mr. Reiff, but we know you can take care of yourself.

A SLIGHT DIFFERENCE OF OPINION.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLION. It is a very common subject of examination to ascertain the motive and animus of a witness.

The WITNESS. I do not think, in my answer to the Commission, that I have shown any animus.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I have never been concerned in any lawsuit or examination in which the Union Pacific Company was a party, here or in Washington, where I have not seen Mr. Reiff. He is an open foe.

The WITNESS. I do not think I have ever met you in court in this town, except as your friend.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. When I was trying the case of the Union Pacific Company against the Government, were you not in attendance at the Court of Claims day after day?

The WITNESS. One day I may have been there to hear your argument, as an intellectual treat. [Laughter.]

Commissioner ANDERSON. We will trust that Judge Dillon will not go into anything unnecessary.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The witness may decline to answer.

The WITNESS. That is what I want to avoid. I do not want to say that I decline to answer. I do not want to be placed in that position.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I want to show that this witness caused a suit to be instituted here questioning the policy of the Union Pacific Company in respect of the construction of branch lines and the legality of the collateral trust, and failed. I may not be able to show it.

The WITNESS. No; I do not think you will be able to show either of those things.

AS TO WOERISHOFFER & CO.

Q. Were you connected with Woerishoffer's firm in 1882?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what relation that firm had to the institution of the Leo suit?—A. I know of no relation that existed between them.

Q. Do you know when Mr. Leo bought his stock?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Leo in regard to that suit?—A. Generally, yes.

Q. Have you any knowledge that Woerishoffer & Co., the day before the institution of that suit, owned the 100 shares of stock on which it was brought?—A. No.

Q. You do not know whether it is so or not?—A. No.

Q. It was shown in that case that the suit was brought in December, 1882; and that Mr. Leo acquired the stock on which it was brought from Woerishoffer & Co. the day before its institution?—A. I do not know whether that was shown or not.

Q. You have no knowledge on that subject?—A. I have not.

Q. Do you know who Mr. Leo's counsel was in that suit?—A. John E. Burrill, I think.

WITNESS WAS A DIRECTOR IN THE RIO GRANDE COMPANY.

Q. Were you ever a director in the Rio Grande Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you a director at that time?—A. No.

Q. It was charged in the affidavits in that case, and not denied by Mr. Leo, that that suit was promoted by the Rio Grande Company and by the firm of Woerishoffer & Co. Have you any knowledge on those subjects?—A. No.

Q. You have stated that you were in Washington, I think, during the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses?—A. I do not think I so stated.

REGARDING THE THOMPSON BILL.

Q. Do you recollect the Thompson bill in Congress?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect the examination before various committees there concerning the proposal to tax the lands of the Union Pacific Company?—A. I recollect that there was such a bill.

Q. Concerning the proposed extension of the Thurman act over the Kansas Pacific and an increase of percentage which was required?—A. No; I never was present at any such hearing. I remember that there was such a bill under discussion in Congress.

Q. Were you not a witness before the committee?—A. I think not, sir.

Q. You have devoted a good deal of attention, in Washington and elsewhere, to the affairs of the Union Pacific Company?—A. Not much. It might have been different if I had.

WHY WITNESS HAS TAKEN SO MUCH INTEREST IN UNION PACIFIC AFFAIRS.

Q. Will you state to the Commission why, not being a stockholder or bondholder in the company, you have taken such a lively interest in its affairs, here and elsewhere?—A. I have stated to this Commission, explicity, how my objections first began, through what I considered the improper and unjust treatment of the Kansas Pacific on the part of the Union Pacific. Subsequent to that period I became involved in a controversy in which Mr. Gould wronged me; and subsequently he was aided in practically the same scheme of wrong doing toward me by the Western Union Telegraph Company. At one time, he being not only the largest holder of Union Pacific stock, but its practical controller, I naturally did not feel very friendly to any enterprise in which he was interested; and as the Western Union Telegraph Company had very deeply wronged me, I naturally did not feel very friendly toward it, especially as some of the old directors of the Union Pacific Company were parties to this wrong which Mr. Gould finally carried out, and are still directors in the Western Union, and profited by the wrong that the Western Union did me. That is my motive. It is an open motive. Everybody knows it. I have been charged with a great many things. For instance, I was charged (not by name, but then I do not have to be kicked more than a dozen times to know that I am meant), by Judge Dillon himself, before a committee of Congress as being a speculative charlatan that he had seen in the corridors of the Capitol. I know what my motives are, and I know what I have done.

A VERY STRANGE THING.

He referred just now to the Thompson bill. Is it not a very strange thing that immediately after Mr. Thompson left Congress, after having passed this bill through one House of Congress almost unanimously, we should find him in the employ of the Pacific Railroad Companies the next session, when he himself told me that he was defeated in his re-election by the action of these people? If they would look elsewhere than to me for the action of these people they would find motives, and motives that they would have to cover up. Is it not a very strange thing that nearly every man who has been against these people in Congress, if he has been an able foe, has, at one time or another, become their employé? Who signed the Credit Mobilier report in Congress? Who is their best friend in the United States Senate to-day? George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts. Who are their attorneys in Washington? Shellabarger & Wilson. They both signed that report in Congress.

MR. THOMPSON'S EMPLOYMENT.

Q. You have made the statement that Mr. Thompson was in the employment of the Pacific roads. Do you mean the Union Pacific?—A. Well, I did not specify the Union Pacific. I know he was there under the shadow of Mr. Sherrell, and Mr. Sherrell was representing the interests, in point of fact, of both companies, though I suppose the Central Pacific paid him. There is no use getting to technicalities. Judge Dillon knows that all I say is true. I may not be able to prove it to his satisfaction or to the satisfaction of this Commission technically, but he knows it is true.

Q. I ask you again whether you do not mean to imply that after Mr. Thompson's term expired he was in the employment of the Union Pacific Company?—A. I did not mean to say anything of that kind. I simply said he was there in the interest of the Pacific railroads. The interest was common in the Thompson bill. Both roads were in it. The Central Pacific Company was more opposed to the Thompson bill, because he laid a heavier load on that company, but in protecting their interests they were necessarily protecting the Union Pacific.

Q. Were you not in attendance during almost the whole session of Congress—the one of which Mr. Thompson was a member? I will identify the Congress in that way. That was the Forty-eighth Congress, I believe. Were you not there opposing any legislation in the interest of the Union Pacific and promoting all bills inimical to the Union Pacific? —A. No; I was not there many times that winter that I recollect. I have not been to Washington many times. In the session to which you refer I do not think I ever attended three meetings of any committee. I do not remember to have ever been in any railroad committee room in the House but twice during that session.

Q. Was not that your business in Washington?—A. No. I could not have done much to further the Thompson bill, because I do not think it was right. If you will ask me whether I was there looking after Mr. Gould and his telegraph legislation I will answer that, yes, sir. I will not shirk anything that I have done.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The witness has undertaken to give some legal opinion as to the nature of the collateral trust, but I do not care to examine him on that.

NEW YORK, Thursday, September 29, 1887.

THOMAS M. NORWOOD, being further examined, testified as follows:

AN EXPLANATION.

The WITNESS. To set myself right, I desire to say that in the New York World's issue of January 15, 1887, appears this statement as coming from myself:

Congressman T. M. Norwood, of Georgia, said this evening that the T. M. Norwood mentioned in the list of rejected accounts must be that of some other Norwood. He said he never had any connection, in any way, with the Central Pacific Railroad, and never received any fee from that company of any kind. He said that there are many Norwoods in the West, and that an examination will show that it must be some of the western Norwoods.

I want to explain, gentlemen, that from that statement somebody might infer that I was not the Norwood referred to here. It bears that construction, but it came about in this way. Mr. Durham, of the World, came to my room in Washington the evening before this issue of the World appeared and asked me if I ever had a claim against the Central Pacific Railroad Company. I told him no. That was the way he put the question, "Have you ever had a claim against the Central Pacific Company?" I said "No." "Well," he says, "there is an account here in the Treasury Department of a claim made by a gentleman of your name and your initials." I said I never had any claim against the Central Pacific Company nor any other of these roads, and if there be any claim there presented in that name it must be some other Norwood. That statement came from the fact that he put the question to me as to whether I ever had a claim or prosecuted a claim. He afterward told me that he called at the request of Mr. Crawford, the gentleman who wrote this article, I presume. But the next morning, when this article appeared, I then understood that he meant whether I had ever been paid any money by the Central Pacific Company. But I stated to him at the time that I never had any claim against the Central Pacific Company, and never received a dollar from them, just as I stated here to-day.

It is only to correct that apparent contradiction as to the position I occupied that I wanted to make this statement.

NEW YORK, Thursday, September 29, 1887.

Afternoon session.

I. E. GATES, being further examined, testified as follows:

By Mr. NORWOOD:

Question. You have seen this statement in the World about accounts in which my name appears as receiving a certain amount?—Answer. There was a paper here yesterday, I believe. I did not look it over then.

Q. Certain amounts are put down as paid to me in 1878 and 1879?—A. Yes; I saw one amount there.

MR. NORWOOD'S ACCOUNTS WITH SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY.

Q. You remember my agreement with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, do you not?—A. As I remember, your agreement was with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

Q. And that I rendered accounts to you in the office, and sometimes that you paid me?—A. Yes; I should think quite likely I might have paid you. Of course, transactions of that kind, eleven or twelve years ago, when we were paying hundreds of people, would not be fresh in my mind; but I remember making payments to Mr. Norwood.

Q. On account of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company?—A. I always understood them to be on account of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. NORWOOD. That is all.

HOW THE PAYMENTS WERE MADE.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How did you make the payments to Mr. Norwood?—A. Of course I cannot remember positively how they were made. Probably sometimes in currency, and probably sometimes in check to his order.

Q. Did you meet Mr. Norwood at the office of the Central Pacific Company?—A. Yes; I met him there.

Q. How often did you meet him there?—A. I could not tell.

THE AMOUNTS.

Q. I call your attention to the following payments detailed in the article referred to:

1878.
Nov. 2.	T. M. Norwood	$1,083.33
Nov. 27.	T. M. Norwood	500.00
1879.
Jan. 17.	T. M. Norwood	1,500.00
Feb. 16.	T. M. Norwood	500.00
Apr. 14.	T. M. Norwood	2,121.67
May. 10.	T. M. Norwood	500.00
Sept. 27.	T. M. Norwood	500.00

Do you recall any of the circumstances of the payment to Mr. T. M. Norwood, from time to time, of the several sums of money that I have read?—A. I do not recall any particular one. I have no doubt, however, that those payments were made.

PAID WITH CHECKS OR CASH?

Q. Was he paid by check or in cash?—A. That I cannot tell. As I said before, quite likely some of the payments may have been made by check and some may have been in cash. My impression is that the larger proportion of them were made by check.

Q. How were the checks drawn?—A. They might have been drawn with his name on the face of the check; that is, if the check had not been filled in with my name, or my name printed in the check, his name might have been on the face of the check, and it might have been then signed by Mr. Huntington; or the check might have been (as most of the checks were) signed by Mr. Huntington after my name was on the check, and then indorsed by me to Mr. Norwood's order.

Q. So that, according to your custom, if your name was printed in the body of the check, Mr. Norwood's name would not appear anywhere on the paper?—A. Yes; if he was paid directly by check his name would be on the back of the check.

Q. By indorsement?—A. Yes.

Q. In making payments on account of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Company, did you use different check books or the same check book?—A. The same check book.

DOES NOT RECALL THAT ANY OF THE PAYMENTS TO MR. NORWOOD WERE ON ACCOUNT OF CENTRAL PACIFIC.

Q. Do you recall whether any of the payments I have read to you were made on account of the Central Pacific?—A. No, sir; I do not recall that fact. My impression is, and my understanding was at the time, that he was employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and paid by that company.

Q. Did you make that charge, after payment, against the Southern Pacific account in the office?—A. That I cannot tell.

Q. Who kept the accounts of the Southern Pacific Railroad?—A. The clerk in the office who kept the cash account and who wrote out the monthly statements, reporting our transactions here to the San Francisco office.

MR. HUNTINGTON GAVE THE INSTRUCTIONS.

Q. Who would have given him the instructions as to how to charge the payments to Mr. Norwood?—A. That would naturally come from Mr. Huntington himself. Probably one general direction in the beginning of Mr. Norwood's employment would cover the whole for the subsequent period.

Q. As you recall the circumstances, the payments were on account of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company?—A. That is, as I recall it.

Q. So that if the charge was made, subsequently, to the Central Pacific Company, then it was made to the Southern Pacific Railroad, and from the Southern Pacific Railroad accounts charged to the Central Pacific?—A. That is my understanding; yes, sir.

Q. Had you any direction of the accounts?—A. Only in a general way, under Mr. Huntington's general direction.

Q. Were you at any time instructed by Mr. Huntington to charge expenses of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to the Central Pacific account?—A. Not to my recollection.

Q. Did you ever make any charge to the Central Pacific expenditures made on account of the Southern Pacific Railroad?—A. I do not know that I ever did.

Q. If you ever did, would you not have a knowledge of it?—A. Well, I should be likely to remember it, I think.

I. E. GATES.

NEW YORK, Thursday, September 29, 1887.

LUCIUS E. CHITTENDEN, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Question. What is your occupation?—Answer. I am a lawyer.

Q. Practicing in the city of New York?—A. Yes.

Q. Of how many years' standing?—A. About twenty years here.

CONNECTED WITH LITIGATION AGAINST CENTRAL PACIFIC.

Q. Are you the gentleman that was referred to in the examination of Governor Stanford in regard to suits which have been instituted against the Central Pacific Company?—A. I judge from a portion of his testimony which I read that I am.

Q. You have been interested in litigation of that character, have you?—A. I have.

Q. Will you please state to this Commission what the suit was in which you represented some of the parties?—A. It was an action in favor of a number of minority shareholders of the California Pacific Railroad Company, brought against the Central Pacific Railroad Company, Mr. Stanford, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Crocker, and the representatives of Mr. Hopkins, to compel an accounting between the parties, to procure a transfer of the title to 76,000 shares of stock to the corporation, to set aside the lease to the Central Pacific Company, and for other subordinate purposes.

BASIS FOR LITIGATION.

Q. Can you state a little more in detail what circumstances connected with the issue of the bonds and stock of the California Pacific, or with the construction of the road, furnished the basis for this litigation?—A. I think, if the Commission will permit me to give a short history of the suit, I can make that plainer than in any other way.

Commissioner ANDERSON. You may proceed.

The WITNESS. In the spring of 1880 I was applied to by certain of these shareholders, who had just ascertained the fact that a modification had been made in the terms of that lease by which the California Pacific Railroad Company, for $50,000 a year, released its right and three-fourths of the net earnings, by way of rent, in excess of $550,000. They wished to know whether that modification could not be set aside. They brought me some documents and facts about it. They represented, I think, about five thousand shares of stock. While the matter was under examination they told me that Mr. Cohen was in the city, who knew all about it, and they wished to bring me in connection with him in regard to the matter, and also with a Mr. Latham, who had been formerly largely interested in the corporation. I had several interviews with Mr. Cohen, the result of which was that he made an arrangement with these gentlemen to commence and prosecute this action, he being a stockholder himself in the corporation, and representing that he was personally familiar with all the facts. I was unwilling to advise as to a suit unless I knew what the facts were. I went to California in their service, and attempted to get access to the books of the company.

WILLING TO ADVISE THAT A SUIT BE BROUGHT.

Q. Of the Central Pacific Company?—A. Of the California Pacific Company. They were in the possession of Mr. Crocker. That access was refused; but the facts that I learned there, and which were indicated to me by Mr. Cohen, induced me to believe that a suit could be maintained and should be brought. I was then willing to advise that it be brought, and an arrangement was made by which Mr. Cohen was to take charge of the suit in California and prosecute it to effect, and my office was to do what was necessary here. I may say here that Mr. Cohen at that time stated to our clients that he had charge of another suit in favor of San Joaquin County, involving similar questions and principles, and that he could prosecute one as well as the other; that the San Joaquin suit would ripen first, and it would not be necessary, probably, to try more than one of them, and that both suits should take the same course and share the same fate; one should not be settled, particularly, without the other. Now, I will state the facts upon which the suit was brought, and then state what became of it. I then procured the documents, which showed that at a certain period in July, 1871, Mr. Huntington, for himself and his then associates, Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Stanford (Mr. Crocker was out at that time), were to purchase of Mr. Latham and others something over 76,000 shares of stock of this company, and to pay for that stock by the issue of $1,000,000 in mortgage bonds of the California Pacific corporation, which bonds were to be guaranteed by the Central Pacific Company. It also appeared that just at the time the change of possession was to take place the then directors of the California Pacific Company, of whom Mr. Latham was one, and Mr. J. P. Jackson was president, made a compact with Messrs. Huntington, Hopkins, and Stanford, by which they agreed, within a period of eighteen months or two years, to put an additional track on the California Pacific road between Davisville and Sacramento, a distance of about 12 miles.

CALIFORNIA PACIFIC PASSES INTO HANDS OF CENTRAL PACIFIC COMPANY.

Q. Who was to put on the additional track?—A. Messrs. Hopkins, Stanford, and Huntington, for which work they were to receive these bonds. Immediately thereafter the California Pacific property and corporation passed into the hands, substantially, of the Central Pacific Company, and its officers were appointed over it. They took possession and have operated the road ever since. Nothing was done about this contract until November previous to the 1st of January, when it was to have been performed.

Q. November of what year?—A. 1872. It was to be performed by the 1st of January, 1873. During the previous winter there had been a freshet, which had carried off a portion of this road and interrupted its traffic. On the 9th of November, 1872 (as the papers showed), Messrs. Huntington, Hopkins, and Stanford assigned to the Contract and Finance Company their contract to double track this road, and the Contract and Finance Company then made a contract with the California Pacific directors, who were at that time persons in the employ of the Central Pacific Company, to repair this road between Davisville and Sacramento, and also between Davisville and Knight's Landing, and stating that those repairs were to be substituted for the performance of a former contract to double-track the road, no sums being mentioned,

SALE OF THE "DONOHOE" ROAD AND A FLEET OF STEAMERS.

Between that time and the 1st of January they did make those repairs—as the records state, at all events. I may say here that a temporary track had been laid down in the September previous—September, 1872—and the running of the road commenced. There was put on to the records of the company a certificate that the Contract and Finance Company had made these repairs, and that therefore they were discharged from this contract. It was also developed by documentary evidence that Messrs. Huntington, Hopkins, and Stanford sold what was known as the Donahoe road—the San Francisco and North Pacific road—which at that time was owned by the Central Pacific Company. They claimed to have extended that road somewhat. By the papers, the California Pacific appeared to have sold it to the Contract and Finance Company for $750,000, and at about the same time Mr. Huntington and his associates sold it to Mr. Peter Donahoe for $1,050,000. They had also sold a large fleet of steamers that then belonged to the California Pacific—some forty or fifty, if I remember rightly, comprising a large part of the steamers then running upon the inland waters. Those were sold by the California Pacific to the Central Pacific, and have since been used for or disposed of by them. It appeared, further, that after they began to build the Northern Railroad and got it running from a point just above the bay crossing (I have forgotten the name of the place) that road was completed by the California Pacific Railroad Company under some arrangement or contract with, I think, the Western Development Company; that then the Northern Railroad, from its junction with the California Pacific to a place called Williams, was leased (by the Northern Railroad Company or the Pacific Improvement Company) to the California Pacific Company, by a verbal lease, which ran for a considerable time, and that, finally, when the Northern Railroad was completed so as to make the connection perfect between Sacramento and Oakland by using a portion of the California Pacific Railroad, then this lease was made to the Central Pacific Company.

TERMS OF LEASE OF PORTION OF CALIFORNIA PACIFIC.

Q. The lease of the California Pacific?—A. What remained of the California Pacific. The lease was for $550,000 a year, and three-fourths of the net earnings in excess of that sum; and, perhaps, some other things were to be paid first. That lease appeared, on the face of the document, to be dated the 10th of July, 1876. It turned out, however, not to have been authorized or executed until the month of May, 1877. They operated under that lease until December, 1879, when a modification of it was made by which the California Pacific, in consideration of $50,000 a year, gave up all claim under that provision of the lease. It exclaimed—and I thought the evidence pretty satisfactorily established it—that that lease was fraudulent, that the original purchase of the stock was fraudulent, and that if anybody owned that stock it belonged to the California Pacific Railroad Company, whose bonds bought it and paid for it.

Q. Please explain a little more in detail how you make out that the bonds of the California Pacific bought the stock.—A. Simply by the terms of the contract. By the contract Messrs. Stanford, Huntington, and Hopkins agreed to purchase these shares and pay for them by the delivery of 1,600 bonds of the California Pacific Railroad Company to be issued and secured by mortgage upon its property; and the contract also provided that these bonds were to be guaranteed by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, a fact to which I shall come to presently.

OWNERSHIP OF BONDS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I do not quite get the facts in regard to the ownership of these bonds. You say there were $1,600,000 of bonds, that they were to be issued on the contract for double-tracking; that that contract for double-tracking was assigned to the Contract and Finance Company, and that that company subsequently, by agreement with the parties, substituted a contract to do some repairs instead of double-tracking, and that the repairs at the end of 1872 were done. But you have not stated to us whether the bonds of the California Pacific Company were issued and delivered to the Contract and Finance Company in payment of those repairs.

The WITNESS. The bonds were issued on the 1st of September, 1871, and delivered to the parties who sold the stock, as it turned out afterwards, all of the 1,600 bonds, as the contract required. Then, more than a year afterward, to wit, in November, 1872, this substituted contract was made, by which the Contract and Finance Company agreed to make these repairs in payment for those bonds which had already been delivered. The claim was (I shall come to that in a moment) that these repairs were not more in value than $50,000 or $60,000 at the outside, and, consequently, that because of the inconsiderable consideration that was paid, the whole transaction could not be upheld in equity.

I can furnish you with a copy of the complaint and answer in the case. Have I made that plain?

SALE OF 76,000 SHARES OF CALIFORNIA PACIFIC STOCK.

Q. I do not yet get, exactly, how the 76,000 shares of stock found their way into the hands of those who exchanged or sold them for those bonds. Was it stock of the California Pacific?—A. Certainly. The California Pacific stock was sold by its owners, to the amount of 76,000 shares, directly to Messrs. Stanford, Huntington, and Hopkins, and assigned to them on the books of the company.

THE CONSIDERATION.

Q. What was the consideration that appears to have been paid for that transfer of stock?—A. One million six hundred thousand dollars, in the bonds of the California Pacific Company indorsed by the Central Pacific Company.

Q. And your proposition is that they had not made title to those bonds by any payment or consideration to the California Pacific, in any way, at that time?—A. They had not, except by this agreement to double-track the road eighteen months afterward. There was no pretense of any consideration paid but that contract.

Q. And the only consideration ever received by the California Pacific for those bonds was the value of the repairs done, whatever that value might be?—A. Yes.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I think I understand you now.

THE SUIT COMMENCED.

The WITNESS. Upon my return I advised the bringing of the suit, and the arrangement was made to have it commenced and for Mr. Cohen to prosecute it. It was commenced and was prosecuted by him with great ability through the preliminary stages, until the matter was finally argued and submitted on demurrer, which raised a very important question of the statute of limitations—whether it applied to and cut off the alleged frauds under the statute of California, which required the action to be brought within three years after the parties injured acquired knowledge of the facts. After that had been submitted I received a letter from Mr. Cohen (I have letters that I can produce, though I have not them with me), in which he desired to have some person appointed to act as attorney in the case, and saying that he would continue to act as counsel.

Mr. COHEN. Will you produce these letters?

The WITNESS. Yes, if you desire them.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We will call for them if you desire them.

Mr. COHEN. Yes, I want them.

Mr. ANDERSON. Then the Commission desires Mr. Chittenden to produce Mr. Cohen's letters.

MR. COHEN WITHDRAWS FROM SUIT—MR. PRINGLE RETAINED.

The WITNESS. Shortly afterward I received a letter in which Mr. Cohen said he wished to withdraw from the suit altogether, and gave some reasons for it, and thereupon one of the parties immediately went to San Francisco and retained Mr. Edward J. Pringle.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Please give the name of the party who went to San Francisco.

The WITNESS. That party was Mr. Fosdick. He went to San Francisco, Cal., retained Mr. E. J. Pringle, and procured Mr. Cohen's consent to his substitution, and that resulted in a new arrangement. Since that time the suit has been prosecuted by Mr. E. J. Pringle, of California, and myself. Mr. Cohen has had nothing to do with it. I mention this because I think that Mr. Cohen ought not to have stated here (as he apparently did on your record) that he commenced the action as the "agent of Mr. Chittenden." I think that erroneous. I do not think he would say so now, or should say so now. I do not at all shrink from the responsibility of that action; but he should not have said what your record shows that he said.

Mr. COHEN. I admit fully that I was just as much responsible as anybody else for bringing that suit. But it was the fact, as I understand it, that I had not the control of the suit, but was simply your agent, to take instructions from you; but I accept all responsibility of the bringing of the suit.

The WITNESS. It is true that I had not the authority to settle the suit.

Mr. COHEN. Whatever there is, good or bad, about the bringing of that suit, I am responsible for it quite as much as you are, probably.

ISSUE OF THE SUIT.

Q. What was the issue of that suit?—A. The demurrers were overruled, and there was, in 1885, a trial of the suit which occupied something over four months. A very dilligent effort was made on our part to show something about the cost of those repairs and to extract it from some one of the parties connected with the Central Pacific Railroad. Mr. Huntington referred to the books and vouchers of the Contract and Finance Company. They were inaccessible, and we were unable to show anything about the actual cost of those repairs except that they were done between the 15th of November and the 1st of January, the time being rather short. The case was submitted to the judge.

The facts that I have stated in regard to the sale of the San Francisco and North Pacific road, and of the steamers, and of the lease, and of the modification, were all proved, and a very large mass of evidence was put in. It appeared, however, from the records of the company, that in August, 1872, Messrs. Huntington, Stanford, and Hopkins retired from the board of directors, and persons in their employment or in that of the Central Pacific Railroad Company were elected in their places, Messrs. Stanford and Hopkins being appointed at the same time general agents of the California Pacific Railroad Company and authorized to exercise all its corporate powers.

BONDS HAVE NO SUBSTANTIAL VALUE.

Another fact was developed upon the trial. It was claimed by the defendants that these 1,600 bonds had no substantial value; that the road was so loaded down with debts and mortgages that they would not have sold for any price, therefore they had no purchasing power in the acquisition of those shares of stock, and that their whole purchasing power and value was given to them by the guaranty of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The fact, however, was developed on the trial, and then came to the knowledge of the stockholders for the first time, that the entire consideration claimed to have been paid to the Central Pacific Railroad Company for the guaranty was paid by the California Pacific in a contract by which the California Pacific Railroad Company undertook to haul the Central Pacific Passenger cars over its road for $5,000 a month, and to maintain the fare between San Francisco and Sacramento for a period of four years at $4. We finally compelled the production of that contract, which, on its face, expressed that it was made in consideration of this endorsement.

PRESENT STATE OF SUIT.

The present state of the suit is this: The court ultimately held that these parties, Messrs. Stanford, Huntington, and Crocker, having retired from the board ceased to be trustees; that the cause of action was severable; that the parties whom they substituted for themselves did not continue the trust; that therefore everything that took place before 1873 (which covered the largely material parts of our case) was barred by the statute of limitations, and that, standing by themselves alone, and without consideration of the other parts of the case which were barred by the statute, we had not produced sufficient proof to show fraud in fact in the execution of that lease and its modification.

THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Q. The distinction you make in regard to the period at which these gentlemen ceased to be trustees is applied by you, as I understand it, to the distinction between the statute of limitations as applied against a trust, and the statute of limitations as applied in reference to a cause of action which does not rest on trust duties.—A. Yes. The California statute of limitations is identical with our own. I believe it is historically taken from ours. The fact was developed upon the trial, for the first time, that the consideration for the guarantee of the Central Pacific Company was paid, not by Messrs. Stanford, Huntington, and Hopkins, but by the California Pacific Company; and the terms and conditions of that contract were discovered actually for the first time upon the trial of the action. In the argument, we undertook to maintain that that was a material fact constituting the fraud, and that as the proof at the time it came to the knowledge of the parties was conclusive, we had answered the statute of limitations. We were not fortunate enough, however, to attract the attention of the court on that point, and it is not mentioned in the opinion. I believe that is a statement of the history of that suit.

Q. Your bill was dismissed by the court.—A. Yes.

AN APPEAL TAKEN.

Q. Has an appeal been taken?—A. Certainly.

Q. Is that appeal now pending?—A. Yes.

A CALL FOR COPY OF RECORD.

Q. Can you furnish us with a copy of the record, or the pleadings at any rate?—A. The record in that case has not yet been printed and I cannot furnish a complete copy of it except by having a copy made. It is very lengthy. I think that, aside from the pleadings, there are something like 3,500 type-writer pages.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I referred more particularly to the complaint.

The WITNESS. I can furnish a copy of the complaint and the answer, and I will do so.

Q. How long have you known Mr. Huntington?—A. I used to know him when I was in the Treasury Department, from 1862 to 1865, and have known him ever since.

THE WILSON COMMITTEE.

Q. Do you remember the occasion of the examination by the Wilson committee at Washington in reference to Credit Mobilier matters?—A. I do.

Q. Were you present at Washington during that winter?—A. Part of it.

Q. Do you remember whether Mr. Huntington was there during the same winter?—A. I do.

Mr. COHEN. What winter was that?

Commissioner ANDERSON. The winter of 1873.

Q. Was Mr. Huntington examined as a witness before the committee?—A. He was.

Q. Was Mr. Franchot also?—A. He was.

A BILL RELATING TO CENTRAL PACIFIC.

Q. Do you remember whether there was any separate subject of legislation proposed by that committee, differing from the bill which affected the interests of the Union Pacific Company, and addressed to the interests of the Central Pacific?—A. There was such a bill reported by the committee.

Q. Will you please state what the general features of that bill were?—A. Perhaps a little preliminary word is necessary on that point. The investigation of the Central Pacific Company and the Contract and Finance Company was not taken up by the Wilson committee until a pretty late period in the session. It was the third session of the Forty-third Congress, and it was, as I remember, about the middle of February before they completed their branch of the investigation in reference to the Union Pacific and the Credit Mobilier. They then examined General Franchot and Mr. Huntington, and I think I may say it appeared from their testimony that the necessary investigation of the Contract and Finance Company's affairs could only be procured in California. The session closed on the 4th of March. Of course there was no time for such an investigation. It resulted in a partial report being made by the Wilson committee, with a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, I think, to appoint a commission to continue the investigation and report at the next session of Congress.

Q. Have you a copy of that bill?—A. I have one which I could furnish to the Commission. I think I have copies of pretty much all those proceedings.

Q. As to the evidence of General Franchot and Mr. Huntington, which we find in the Wilson report, is that the evidence to which you refer as having been taken at the close of February?—A. I presume so, though I have not looked at it for a long time. I should recognize it very readily. [After looking at the printed report of testimony taken by the Wilson committee, being report No. 78, House of Representatives, forty-second Congress, third session.] The book which you have shown me appears to be the testimony as taken before that committee, and it appears that Mr. Franchot was examined on the 13th of February and Mr. Huntington on the 14th of February, 1873; the first on page 687 and the last on page 696.

Q. I understand you to say that you were present during these examinations?—A. I was.

AS TO EXAMINATION OF MR. HUNTINGTON BEFORE WILSON COMMITTEE.

Q. Do you recall the fact that Mr. Huntington was examined at some length as to the actual cost of construction of the Central Pacific road and the nature of its relations with the Contract and Finance Company?—A. I remember that he was examined on those subjects by different members of the committee.

Q. And that, in answer to general questions as to what those books would show, and who was acquainted with the actual cost of construction, his statement was that the information was in California, and that the books and offices were there?—A. That is the general fact.

Q. Do you remember what attitude Mr. Huntington was taking then in regard to the passage of this bill?

Mr. COHEN (addressing the witness). Were you counsel for Mr. Huntington at that time?

The WITNESS. I was counsel for the railroad company.

Mr. COHEN. Which railroad company do you mean?

The WITNESS. The Central Pacific Railroad Company, as I understood it. I would rather state just what my relation to the matter was, as a point is made of it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. You may state it.

THE "EDMUNDS AMENDMENT."

The WITNESS. The first Credit Mobilier committee (the "Poland" committee) was appointed very soon after that session of Congress convened. It became public that Senator Edmunds was preparing legislation, in some form, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold from the subsidized Pacific railroads payments to an amount equal to the accumulated interest on the subsidy bonds plus the 5 per cent. net earnings after completion. Mr. Huntington desired me to see whether I could not convince Mr. Edmunds that that would be very rash legislation and very unjust to the corporations. I had expressed long before, as Mr. Huntington knew, that this interest was not payable by the companies until the maturity of the bonds. At his request and his employment I went to Washington and had an interview with Senator Edmunds in which I protested as energetically as I knew how against the Government taking the law into its own hands in this case, and, as I thought, deciding the law improperly. Whether it made any impression I do not undertake to say, but when Mr. Edmunds's ideas came to be formulated, as they were, in an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill of that session, they did authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold these payments, but they authorized the companies to bring an action in the Court of Claims to recover the amount, which would raise the question of the legal right of the Government to withhold it, and the question whether this interest was due; also, that an appeal might be taken from the decree of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that both courts should give to such suits preference over all other business.

MR. HUNTINGTON FAVORED THE AMENDMENT.

The effect of that was that while it withheld the payments for the time being, it enabled the corporations to have the question settled, as was then proposed at the next ensuing term of the supreme court.

Mr Huntington was strongly in favor of that amendment, on the ground that it would take the place of other adverse legislation at the session. At his request I prepared a letter which he signed, and I delivered to Senator Edmunds, and which will be found in the records, in which he expressed the satisfaction of the Central Pacific Railroad Company with that legislation, and their purpose, in good faith, to conform to it.

At Mr. Huntington's request I remained in Washington to do what I could to forward the passage of that legislation. It went through the Senate without difficulty, and came to be known as the "Edmunds Amendment."

That was the subject-matter of my employment.

OPPOSITION IN THE HOUSE.

When the matter got over to the House, however, something—the developments of either the Credit Mobilier committees or of the press—had occasioned a great deal of hostile feeling, and there was very severe criticism against the Central Pacific road and its managers, as well as the Union Pacific. To that, however, I did not pay much attention.

It became known that Mr. Holman, in the House, was going to lead in an attempt to strike out the provision of the Edmunds amendment which authorized the commencement of those suits and gave them preference in the courts, which would have destroyed the value of the bill to the company.

At Mr. Huntington's very earnest request, I remained in Washington, doing what I could in a proper professional way, to defeat this amendment of Mr. Holman, which we knew was to be made. The defeat of the Holman amendment, the passage of the Edmunds amendment, and the defeat of the Wilson bill, were the objects sought to be accomplished during the remainder of the session, by the Central Pacific Railroad and by Mr. Huntington.

Q. The Wilson bill you refer to is the bill directing an investigation and the appointment of commissioners?—A. Yes.

Q. Was Mr. Huntington continuously there, or there a good deal during that session of Congress?—A. He was.

Q. Were your interviews with him frequent?—A. They were.

CONFERENCES WITH MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Q. Do you know (from meeting them or in any other way) that Mr. Huntington had frequent conferences with members of Congress in regard to those bills?—A. Certainly he did, and so did I. That was a very common matter.

Q. Where was it Mr. Huntington's practice to have these interviews with members of Congress?—A. Mr. Huntington and General Franchot had quarters that year, I think, at Willard's Hotel. They had rooms there during the excitement that were frequently visited by members of Congress and others. It was a very frequent occurrence to have interviews with members of the House of Representatives (after the legislation got into that House) at the Capitol, and wherever they could be found without intrusion.

Q. Were there other gentlemen besides yourself and General Franchot who were engaged in the discharge of these duties in behalf of the company?—A. There were. I wish, however, to say that my own efforts were exclusively confined to getting through the Edmunds amendment and the defeat of the Holman amendment. The other matter I had nothing professionally, or otherwise, to do with.

OTHER PERSONS EMPLOYED.

Q. Can you state to the Commission the names of other gentlemen who were employed at the same time in this and similar work?—A. I remember General Franchot, of course. I remember a gentleman by the name, I think, of Boyd, who had formerly held some office in the House of Representatives, and I think there was a Mr. Sherrill. It is a little difficult for me to separate this time from one or two other occasions when I have been in Washington. It seems to me there was a Mr. Carr who was quite efficient, who was a west-coast man; and there were others. It is a long while ago, and I cannot recollect them all now.

Q. Do you remember the name of Henry Beard?—A. I do not recognize that.

THE BUSINESS PROSECUTED WITH DILIGENCE.

Q. How active, generally, was that business of prosecuting those interviews and urging generally the opposition of the Central Pacific Company to those measures?—A. I can answer, for myself, that it was just as active as it was possible for me to make it without intrusion upon members of Congress in what I regarded as an improper way. I lost no opportunity, and, so far as my observation goes, I should think every one else that was at work in the same interest worked with equal diligence.

AN INVESTIGATION NOT DESIRED.

Q. Was Mr. Huntington exceedingly desirous to defeat the Wilson bill appointing the committee of investigation?—A. I cannot answer as to that, except that he said it must be defeated—that he did not desire to have an investigation at that time.

Q. Have you a copy of that bill in your copy of the Wilson committee's report?—A. I have, I think. It ought to be there. [After looking at the book.] This says "copy of the bill." It is House bill No. 4060, Forty-second Congress, third session. It was reported on the 1st of March, 1873.

THE FATE OF THE WILSON BILL.

Q. What was the fate of that bill?—A. I really do not remember, except that I know that it did not pass. Taxing my recollection, I should say that at that stage in the session it could not pass without a suspension of the rules, and that the vote upon the Holman amendment showed very clearly that there was not strength enough in favor of the bill to pass it. The controversy, as I now think, was substantially determined by the fate of the Holman amendment.

Q. That is, of the amendment striking out the right to bring suits in the Court of Claims?—A. Yes. I remember distinctly that the defeat of the Holman amendment was regarded as a measure of the forces of the different parties; so that after that there was not much apprehension about the passage of the Wilson bill.

THE VOTE ON THE HOLMAN AMENDMENT.

Q. Do you recall the occasion of the vote on the Holman amendment?—A. I cannot state the vote, but it must be shown in that book. [After looking through the volume.] I think that the Holman amendment, which was to strike out that provision, was defeated in committee of the whole by a vote of 52 ayes to 95 noes.

Q. On what day was that vote taken—does your record show?—A. I do not think it does. This is cut from a copy of the Congressional Globe, and the dates are not reliable; but it appears to have been upon or after Saturday, March 1, 1873.

A LIST OT MEMBERS.

Q. Did you, yourself, during the week preceding that vote, prepare any list of members of Congress with reference to satisfying yourself as to the status of those gentlemen for or against that amendment?—A. I think I ought to say in regard to that, with all respect to the Commission, that I ought not to be asked to disclose anything that I did as counsel.

Commissioner ANDERSON. As soon as we reach any question which in your judgment crosses the line of proper inquiry you may, of course, take the objection, and the Commission will dispose of it.

The WITNESS. I should like to hear the question read.

The secretary read the question.

The WITNESS. We had those lists constantly. I do not know that I could say that they were prepared particularly the week before the adjournment.

Q. But those names were before you and you examined them with reference to forming a judgment as to how those gentlemen stood on the question?—A. Certainly.

WITNESS' EFFORTS LIMITED TO ARGUMENT.

Q. In regard to such members as you concluded were doubtful, to what character of argument or inducement did you resort in order to secure their votes?—A. So far as I was myself concerned I not only had no doubt, but I impressed my views as strongly as I could upon everybody connected with the legislation, that any attempt which could be attacked even by the press (which was watching very closely at that time) as irregular or in the slightest degree improper, to pass the Edmunds amendment, would recoil upon us and would inevitably defeat us. When, therefore, I had argued the question (for I maintain that the argument was on the side of the railroad) and had failed, I considered the parties that would not listen to that as entirely beyond reach. That limited my efforts.

Q. You then discharged them as "incurable"?—A. Well, as unconvertible, at all events.

DECLINES TO ANSWER.

Q. Now, in regard to any members of Congress whose votes it was attemped or desired to secure, do you know of any instance in which any money or thing of value was used for the purpose of influencing their votes?—A. In regard to that whole subject I had no knowledge whatever that did not come to me while I was acting as counsel; and whether it strictly falls within the professional rule or not (and I certainly hope that the gentlemen of the Commission will not suppose that I intend any disrespect to them) I will not answer any questions on that subject unless I am required to do so by an authority that I am bound to obey. There are other reasons why I do not answer that question. While I did not act for the Central Pacific Railroad Company, I did act for certain gentleman whose relations to the railroad company and to Mr. Huntington were made the subject of inquiry; and, for that reason also, I must decline to go into any examination or discussion on that subject.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Do you put your reasons for declining on the ground that you received your information as counsel for the company or for Mr. Huntington?—A. I put it upon the ground that I received it while I was counsel. I do not know that I can go any further than that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It is sufficient to raise the question that you decline to answer the question that has been put to you; we understand you to decline?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I do.

OTHER PENDING LEGISLATION.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Have you been present at other sessions of Congress when the Central Pacific Railroad Company has been interested in pending legislation?—A. I have.

Q. On what occasions?—A. My acting for the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or for Mr. Huntington, commenced as early as the appointment of what was known as the "Committee of Eminent Citizens." I cannot fix the date of that, but it was about the time that it was claimed that the railroads were completed and that an act was passed providing for the appointment of a committee of gentlemen who, in the bill, were, I think, called "eminent citizens," who were to examine the road and determine how much money it would cost to complete it within the meaning of the railroad acts, and then recommend some way in which the money could be deposited and the balance of the bonds issued.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That was in 1869?

The WITNESS. In 1869. From that time there were two or three occasions when I was there at Mr. Huntington's request. I made the final arrangement with Secretary Boutwell for the issue of the last bonds that were issued to the Central Pacific Railway Company. That was at the end of a good deal of legislation that took place that winter about it. Then I was there at another time when the question first came up whether the companies were bound to pay the interest on the subsidy bonds before their maturity. I cannot at this time—there is nothing that enables me to fix the date of it.

Q. Is there any other session of Congress which you recall at which you were present for a period of time and represented the companies in reference to the legislation actually pending at Washington?—A. There was a time subsequent to the appointment of the Commission that I have spoken of, when I was there for a considerable time and prepared an argument, which was printed, and which would recall what the subject was. It was to defeat some legislation looking to compelling the companies to pay this interest, but I cannot recall the session nor precisely the terms of the act.

Q. Were you present at Washington during the dates that preceded the passage of the Thurman bill in 1877-'78?—A. I was there, but I do not think I had any connection with that matter.

Q. On the other occasions when you have been in Washington to which you have alluded, was Mr. Huntington also present and engaged in the same business?—A. Mr. Huntington has been in Washington pretty nearly all the time that I have been there on any of these occasions in regard to these matters. I would occasionally leave Washington and come over to New York for a short time and return, but I gave pretty close attention to his matters.

Q. Did he have, on the other occasions, the same gentlemen to assist him in his Washington labors, whose names you have already given?—A. He had Mr. Franchot from 1866 until he died. I do not remember that this man that they called Carr was there more than once. It seems to me that he was called "Bill Carr." Mr. Boyd has been, I understood, in Mr. Huntington's employ a good while, and Mr. Sherrill took General Franchot's place after his death. I do not know whether he was employed previously, but he was very much interested in legislation.

USE OF MONEY IN INFLUENCING LEGISLATION.

Q. I will ask you the same question in regard to those other occasions. You may dispose of it as you think proper. Do you know, as to any of those other occasions to which you have alluded when you were in Washington, whether Mr. Huntington or any of his agents used any money or anything of value for the purpose of influencing the vote of a member of Congress?—A. I do not.

Q. You have no knowledge at all bearing on the other occasions?—A. I have not.

Q. Was the subject of the actual cost of construction of the California Pacific one of the subjects of investigation in your suit?—A. Yes; it was.

Q. Do I understand you to say that you were unable to ascertain the cost of construction of that road?—A. No, sir; we were unable to ascertain the cost of the repairs upon the road.

COST OF CONSTRUCTION OF CALIFORNIA PACIFIC.

Q. Did you ascertain the cost of construction of the California Pacific Railroad itself?—A. Not with any definiteness.

Q. In the course of your examination of the books of the California Pacific, did you ascertain the cost to that company of the steamers which were subsequently sold to the Central Pacific?—A. Yes. The sale to the Central Pacific was, nominally, for the cost price of the steamers.

Q. Why do you say "nominally?"—A. The record showed that those steamers were sold by the California Pacific Railroad Company to Milton S. Latham, to be paid for in accounts that he had against the corporation, or accounts of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and they were credited in the books of the Central Pacific Company to the California Pacific at their cost price. I claim that the sale was nominal because I claim that a large part of the account of the Central Pacific Company against the California Pacific Company, which these steamers paid, was exaggerated or unfounded.

Q. In other words, that the Central Pacific Company did not really owe the amount to Mr. Latham and the amount to the California Pacific which was set off against the price of the steamers?—A. Yes.

Q. According to your statement, then, the Central Pacific Company bought this property by paying for it less than its actual value?—A. That was our claim.

Q. That was the claim of the California Pacific?—A. Yes. For instance, this will illustrate what I mean. On all advances made by the Central Pacific Company on account of the California Pacific, and upon all monthly balances of their account, 1 per cent. a month interest was charged, which was compounded monthly throughout the entire transaction; and the growth of interest in that way is very rapid.

Commissioner ANDERSON. In connection with this testimony I offer this copy of the bill:

[H. R. 4060. Report No. 86. Forty-second Congress, third session.]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MARCH 1, 1873.—Read twice, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. J. M. WILSON, from the Select Committee on Credit Mobilier No. 2, reported the following bill:

A BILL to provide for securing the interests of the United States and the public in the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint three discreet and disinterested persons, whose authority shall extend until the fifteenth day of December, eighteen hundred and seventy-three, as commissioners, at least one of whom shall be learned in the law, whose duty it shall be to examine into the financial condition of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, whether funded or otherwise; the amount of capital stock issued by said company; the cost of the construction of the road of said company, and the cost thereof to the contractor or contractors who constructed the same; and to further inquire whether any of the persons connected with any contract or contracts for construction, directly or indirectly, were in any way interested in the said railroad company, and, if so, whether as stockholders, directors, or officers thereof; and if any contract was made with any corporation for the construction of said road, or any portion thereof, the character of such corporation, under what authority the same was organized, the amount of its capital stock, its directors, officers, and stockholders; whether any of said directors, officers, and stockholders were, at the time of making or during the performance of any contract, officers, directors, or stockholders of the said Central Pacific Railroad Company; what amount in money, stock, or bonds was received by such corporation from said railroad company; what, if any, dividends were made by such corporation out of any assets derived from such contract, and the manner in which the same were made; and to make such other and further inquiries as may be necessary to a full understanding as to the financial condition of said railroad company and to the disposition of the corporate moneys, bonds, stocks, and other property thereof, so that it may be ascertained whether the lands or bonds received by said railroad company from the United States have been unlawfully disposed of or applied to purposes other than those for which received, and whether the security of the United States for its claims against said company has been impaired.

SEC. 2. That it shall further be the duty of said commissioners to inquire whether or not in the measurement of the line of said Central Pacific Railroad Company, and of the line of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, with reference to the issue of the bonds of the United States to said railroad companies, the same was properly made.

SEC. 3. That it shall further be the duty of said commissioners to inquire whether or not the Union Pacific Railroad and branches are and have been operated in accordance with the provisions of section fifteen of the act approved July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,'" approved July first, eighteen hundred and sixty two, which section is in the words following: 'That the several companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads are hereby required to operate and use said roads and telegraph for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, as far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, and in such operation and use to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others;' and also to inquire whether or not there are any contracts in existence made by said Union Pacific Railroad Company with any corporation, person, or persons, whereby unjust or improper discriminations are made in relation to the transportation of coal or other commodities over said road, or any portion thereof.

SEC. 4. That said commissioners shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars each. They may employ a stenographer and a clerk, whose compensation shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and in addition to the salaries and compensation hereinbefore specified there shall be allowed to the commissioners, clerk, and stenographer their actual traveling expenses.

SEC. 5. That said commissioners shall have power to send for persons and papers, to swear or affirm witnesses, and examine them under oath or affirmation, and, for the purpose of enforcing the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, may make a requisition upon the marshal of the district where they may be, and it shall be the duty of such marshal, in person or by deputy, to serve such subpœnas as may be directed to him by said commissioners, for which services such marshal shall receive such compensation as is allowed to him for service of like process by law.

SEC. 6. That said commissioners shall report to the next Congress, at the beginning of the first session thereof, the testimony taken, with a detailed report in relation to the matters hereinbefore specified.

SEC. 7. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the sum of twenty thousand dollars is hereby appropriated out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated.

PRODUCTION OF PAPERS.

The WITNESS. The letter to which I referred, which I prepared for Mr. Huntington, dated January 27, 1873, in regard to the Edmunds amendment is here; also the Edmunds amendment, and also the Holman amendment.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I ask you to produce the bill of complaint in the Fosdick suit and the letters which Mr. Cohen has requested you to produce.

Q. Is there any other matter of interest to this Commission that you wish to speak of?

COMPENSATION FOR HIS SERVICES.

The WITNESS. There is another matter of slight interest to me which I wish to mention.

According to your report, Senator Stanford has imputed to me, in connection with the prosecution of that suit, that, for some reason, I was trying to get even with the Central Pacific Company, and that the subject I was trying to get even upon was some alleged difference between Mr. Huntington and myself as to the value of my services.

Now, I think Mr. Stanford must be misinformed on that subject. If he is not, perhaps I have got some interest in it. He says that, claiming a much larger sum, I was paid $10,000. If the Central Pacific Company's books show any such thing, they are erroneous. Mr. Huntington was very profuse in his views of the value of my services, and how he was going to compensate me, but when I got through he said the company was very poor, that they could not afford to do what was right; and I told him he need not trouble himself about argument, that he could pay me whatever he thought fit, for I did not care to discuss the value of such services; and he paid me either $3,000 or $3,500. So that if I appear to be charged with $10,000, somebody has got $6,000 of my money, and I should like to have it. In regard to that having any relation to this suit, the subject has not entered my mind from that day to this.

A DIFFERENCE OF OPINION.

By Mr. COHEN:

Q. Did you not present a claim to Mr. Huntington for $25,000 for your services in Washington?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. Did you not tell him that you owed Fiske & Hatch the sum of $25,000, and that he could close up his indebtedness to you by settling that account with Fiske & Hatch?—A. Never; and never was such a thing the fact.

Q. Did he not tell you that the company could not pay, but that he would give you half the road in compensation for your services?

The WITNESS. You ought to know better than to put that question.

Mr. COHEN. I put it under instructions. I am told that those are the facts.

The WITNESS. Then your instructions are utterly unfounded.

Mr. COHEN. You deny that? There was a difference of opinion between you and Mr. Huntington as to your compensation.

The WITNESS. No, sir; I can not say even that there was a difference of opinion. I told him that I thought I ought to have $10,000, and I have told what he said in reply.

Mr. COHEN. I do not propose to go into the case of Main against the railroad company in California now; it has been tried in California. I will put this record in evidence [producing papers].

Q. In the services you rendered to Mr. Huntington, or to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, in Washington, did you have any associate counsel?—A. I think not. I do not remember any. I did not regard myself as employed in the matters before the Wilson committee. I think that Mr. Evarts attended one session before the committee with me.

Q. Did Mr. Evarts assist you in the conduct of the case before that committee?—A. There was nothing to be "conducted." There was no action taken by anybody but the committee or the witnesses.

Q. Have you not taken a good deal of interest in the proceedings of this Commission?—A. I have not.

INTERVIEWS WITH THE COMMISSIONERS.

Q. Have you had interviews with members of the Commission before this time?—A. One—yes, two.

Q. Will you name the gentlemen with whom you had interviews?—A. Mr. Anderson.

Q. And the other?—A. I think they were both with Mr. Anderson.

Q. You have put the record which you obtained as the counsel of the Central Pacific Company at the disposal of this Commission, have you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. The book that you have been examined upon is your property, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. It has been in the possession of the Commission before to-day, has it not, or did you bring it to-day?—A. I sent it to Mr. Anderson at his request, within a day or two.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It is a copy of the Wilson report.

Q. You have given such information to Mr. Anderson as you could, so as to enable him to conduct your examination to-day, have you not?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have not given him any information?—A. I will tell you just what I have given to Mr. Anderson. He came to me at a certain time, when he said he was going to California, and wanted to know if I could put him in the way of getting the printed record in the Colton case, and at his request I sent a telegram to California. That was the whole of the first interview. The second——

Commissioner ANDERSON (interposing). Before you pass to the second let me remind you that subsequently I sent you word that I had obtained what I wanted.

The WITNESS. Certainly.

Commissioner ANDERSON. So that I never received that copy of the Colton record from you.

The WITNESS. No; and, in the second interview, Mr. Anderson asked me if I knew what was going on as to which the railroad was interested at this session, and, as I remember, whether I had a copy of the Wilson report. I do not think he said anything about the Wilson bill. I told him that I thought I had the whole thing. I generally kept those things. That night I sent it to him.

ARGUMENT FOR USE BEFORE CONGRESS.

Q. Did you not make an argument before one of the committees of Congress, and print it? I believe you have stated that already.—A. No.

Q. You did not?—A. I wrote an argument for use in one of the proceedings of Congress, which was printed and distributed. It was not delivered before any committee.

Q. Have you a copy of that argument?—A. I presume I have. I usually keep all those things.

OPINION EXPRESSED REGARDING CLIENTS.

Q. You expressed yourself, I believe, as to the efforts of your clients, Governor Stanford, Mr. Huntington and Mr. Crocker, in the building of the Central Pacific Railroad, very favorably, did you not?—A. I presume so.

Q. You pronounced a eulogy upon them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you not speak of the Government of the United States, in its treatment of them, as acting a counterpart of the contract between Shylock and Antonio?—A. No, sir.

Mr. COHEN. I thought you did. I read that within the last twenty-four hours.

The WITNESS. I never wrote such stuff as that, if you did read it within twenty-four hours.

Mr. COHEN. I thought it was worth copying, it was so well put.

The WITNESS. I do not deal in that sort of stuff.

Q. At the same time that you produce those letters to-morrow will you produce a copy of the argument?—A. I will if I find it; but if you have it so easily at hand you had better produce it.

Mr. COHEN. Well, it is one that does not belong to me. I borrowed it.

The WITNESS. It would require much investigation for me to find it.

Mr. COHEN. You were a Treasury official during the building of this road. You had means of knowing what these men did, and your testimony in their behalf would go a long way, I think, if we could get it on the record. At that time you were giving your views as a public officer.

The WITNESS. You are entirely mistaken, sir, in both your premises. While I was in the Treasury Department I did not know anything whatever about the Central Pacific Railroad, and had nothing to do with it.

Mr. COHEN. If you cannot find a copy of it I think I can find a copy to support what I have stated as to what you said of those gentlemen.

THE COMPLAINT IN THE MAIN CASE.

Q. Who drew the complaint in the Main case, which you have been talking of?—A. I drew it, principally.

Q. Did you send it out to California?—A. Yes.

Q. At the time the contract was made that that suit was brought to annul, do you remember what was the debt of the California Pacific?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you remember the length of the road that was built from Vallejo northward to Sacramento, and just above there?—A. The road to Sacramento, I think, is 60 miles.

Q. The entire length of the road was about 80 miles, was it not?—A. No; now, as I remember, the road is about 134 miles.

Q. I am speaking of the road existing in 1871, at the time this contract was made that you testified about, when the promoters of the Central Pacific acquired a majority of the stock.—A. I think it was about 140 miles, if I remember rightly; the record will show.

Q. What was the bonded debt on that road?—A. I do not remember what it was.

CALIFORNIA PACIFIC EXTENSION BONDS.

Q. Do you remember the bonds being issued by that company, which were called the California Pacific extension bonds, to the extent of $3,500,000, and that those bonds had been issued and sold, and that not a yard of road had been built on which those bonds were supposed to have been a lien?—A. I do not understand that; I never understood that.

Q. Do you not remember that at the time this stock was acquired by Mr. Stanford, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Crocker, and Mr. Hopkins, or whoever did acquire it, that the debt on the California Pacific Railroad over and above any security existing, would impose a lien or debt of $45 a share upon each share of the stock of that company?—A. I do not.

CAPITAL STOCK OF COMPANY.

Q. What was the capital stock of the company at that time?—A. I think it was $12,000,000.

Q. Was not the debt of that company, over and above any securities that existed at that time, nearly $5,000,000?—A. No; I do not understand that it had any debt for which there was no security existing. I believe it had some floating debt—had notes given for the Donohoe road and for the steamers that were outstanding, but I never heard of any other debt. My impression is that the figures show that the cost of that road, as it was made up, was not any larger, if it was as large, as the cost, mile for mile, of the Central Pacific road.

Q. But the Central Pacific road was built through a different country, was it not?—A. A large part of it was built through a much cheaper country.

Q. There were no snow sheds or mountainous pieces of road on the California Pacific, were there?—A. I believe not.

DEBT OF CALIFORNIA PACIFIC.

Q. Do you remember the figures of the debt of that road, and what was secured and what was not?—A. What was not secured? I do not know what you are talking about. There was no such thing. There was, first, a mortgage $2,250,000.

Q. Was that a first mortgage?—A. There was then a mortgage of $3,500,000. There was then the mortgage for $1,600,000 that these people, Mr. Huntington and the others, put on. There was an income bond mortgage, a bond secured upon the income of the company, which at that time was $1,000,000, possibly $1,500,000. I am not aware of any other debt that there was against the company, except the notes in part that had been given for the San Francisco and Northern Pacific road and steamers.

Q. Was not the company overdrawn in a banking house of San Francisco to a large amount, and had its notes not been given to secure that amount?—A. No.

Q. You say that it was not so?—A. The testimony showed that there was an overdraft of something like $40,000 or $50,000, but there were no notes given to secure it. The testimony also shows that the overdrafts by the California Pacific Railroad Company were quite a matter of course.

AMOUNT OF PROPERTY.

Q. According to your statement there was a mortgage of $2,250,000; another of $3,500,000, which would amount to $5,750,000; and a mortgage for $1,000,000, which would make $6,750,000; and the entire property of the company was about 140 miles of road, as you recollect it, was it not?—A. Oh, no. At that time the company had these steamers, for which they paid $800,000; and they were supposed to be worth it. They had the San Francisco and North Pacific road, which extended from—I cannot give the names of the places; but it had that additional property at that time. Besides, it had the road from Vallejo to Marysville, and the branch that ran up the Napa Valley.

Q. How do you make 140 miles of road of that system?—A. I tell you that such was my impression. The road from Vallejo to San Francisco is, if I remember rightly——

Mr. COHEN (interposing). There was no road from Vallejo to San Francisco, was there?

The WITNESS. From Vallejo to Sacramento. That was, if I remember rightly, 60 miles; the road from Davisville to Marysville was, if I remember rightly, about 45 miles; and the road from Napa Junction to the end of that Napa Valley road was about 40 miles more. I am calling upon my memory for all this, but I think that was about the fact.

Q. What do you make the length of the North Pacific road?—A. I think it is about 30 miles.

Commissioner ANDERSON. As it stood then, you mean?

Mr. COHEN. Yes; as it stood then.

Q. Do you not know that the North Pacific road was covered by a certain indebtedness, and that the notes of the California Pacific road were out for the purchase of that North Pacific road; that there was a separate debt in addition to the bonded debt at that time?—A. There was not any bonded debt on that road. There was not any separate debt on that road. There was a note for $500,000 which these parties claim to have paid.

Q. Which parties?—A. Mr. Huntington and others. They claim to have turned that note over to the Contract and Finance Company. It was outstanding at the time its stock was purchased.

Q. Then that $500,000, according to your statement now, is in addition to the bonded debt of $6,750,000?—A. That $500,000 relates to the Donohoe road alone. It does not touch the California Pacific, of which I have been speaking, and is a separate thing altogether.

LIABILITIES OF STOCKHOLDERS IN CALIFORNIA.

Q. Do you understand that there is a law in California that makes the stockholders of the company liable for its debt?—A. It is not different from the law here, as I understand it.

Mr. COHEN. I think it is somewhat different; at least we so understand it.

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF CALIFORNIA PACIFIC.

Q. At the time that Mr. Huntington and Mr. Stanford bought out this stock of the California Pacific was not the financial condition of the California Pacific such that if it had been sold under either of its mortgages there would have been a deficiency after all of its property would have been parted with, and would there not have been imposed the liability of $45 a share on each share of stock?—A. I do not believe any such thing or anything approaching to it. I believe if the road had been decently taken care of it was worth every dollar of the money that was properly placed against it, and would have paid the interest from that day to this. I do not think anybody can examine the evidence and have any doubt on that subject.

Mr. COHEN. I will ask you to produce those letters of which you have spoken, and I may ask you a few more questions on that subject.

The WITNESS. I will produce them.

The Commission then adjourned to Friday, September 30, at 10 a. m.

The Commission met pursuant to adjournment, all the Commissioners being present.

JOHN H. WALSH, being further examined, testified as follows:

AS TO JOHN I. BLAIR.

Q. Where?—A. At his residence, Blairstown, N. J.

Q. When?—A. On Friday morning, September 2.

Q. What answer did he make?—A. He said he did not know whether he would come here or not; that he was going West, and might not get back by the time for which he was subpœnaed. He would see.

Q. What date was fixed in the subpœna for his attendance here?—A. September 20, 1887.

Q. At what place was he subpœnaed to attend?—A. He was subpœnaed to attend at No. 10 Wall street, in the city of New York.

Q. Has Mr. Blair been here to your knowledge?—A. I have not seen him here.

OLIVER W. MINK, being further examined, testified as follows:

The WITNESS. In compliance with calls already made by the Commission, I present the following papers:

WESTERN UNION CONTRACT.

Copy of a contract between the Union Pacific Railway Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company, dated July 1, 1881.

(This contract is the same as the one appearing in print in the Warner report, being Report No. 3501, House of Representatives, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, relating to land-grant telegraph lines.)

PACIFIC EXPRESS COMPANY CONTRACT.

Copy of a contract between the Union Pacific Railway Company and the Pacific Express Company, dated January 19, 1886.

The contract is as follows:

Agreement.—The Union Pacific Railway Company and the Pacific Express Company, January 19, 1886.

This agreement, made and entered into this 19th day of January, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-six, between the Union Pacific Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the United States, for themselves and for all lines owned, operated, or controlled by them, party of the first part, and the Pacific Express Com-party, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Nebraska, party of the second part,

Witnesseth, that whereas the party of the first part now owns and is engaged in operating lines of railroad extending from the Missouri River at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Kansas City, Mo., to Ogden, Utah, and Huntington, Oregon, and diverging lines;

And whereas the party of the second part is an express company, having a large and established business between the principal commercial cities of the East and various places upon the lines of said railroad, and points beyond such lines of railroad;

And whereas the party of the second part is desirous of securing, for the benefit of itself and the persons employing it, permanent and reliable facilities for the transportation of its express matter, and the party of the first part is desirous of securing the business and patronage of the party of the second part,

It is agreed as follows:

First. The party of the first part agrees to provide on each of its daily passenger trains sufficient facilities of the kind customarily furnished to express companies by railroad companies for the transportation of all freight and express matter which may be tendered them by the party of the second part for transportation upon any of their daily passenger trains, at any station which such trains may stop, and to receive and transport such freight and express matter upon the said passenger trains leaving such station next after said tender, and carry and deliver the same without delay. But the carriage of more than one car-load of express matter by any one passenger train, shall, for convenience, be at the option of the party of the first part.

Second. The party of the second part shall be entitled to send free, both ways, all its messenger's safes and empty packing trunks, and shall also have the privilege to send free of charge one person with each car, as messenger, to take charge of its property and the property confided to it for carriage, and, when necessary, an additional messenger, armed as a guard for protection against highway robbers. Such messengers shall ride in the car provided by the party of the first part for the carriage of their goods in their charge. The agents of the party of the second part shall be carried free of charge in the passenger trains of the party of the first part, whenever such agents are traveling on the business of the party of the second part.

In case the cars for the transportation of express matter are furnished by the party of the second part, the said second party shall be entitled to receive from the party of the first part such compensation for said cars as is the customary mileage paid by said first party to connecting railways for similar cars.

Third. The party of the first part agrees to employ the party of the second part exclusively to receive, take charge of, and deliver all money, remittances, packages, and parcels which they may be required to have sent or delivered on the line of its railway, by express, such service to be compensated for as hereinafter provided.

Fourth. Settlements shall be made monthly, and the party of the first part shall be entitled to receive fifty (50) per cent. of the total gross earnings of the party of the second part on the lines of the said first party's railroad.

Fifth. The party of the second part shall at all times be entitled to have its necessary equipment material transported free on freight trains, as compensation for receiving, caring for, and delivering the money, remittances, packages, and parcels of the party of the first part, and shall not make any other charge for such service.

Sixth. The party of the second part shall have the right to employ the agents and servants of the party of the first part as its own agents, when such employment will, in the opinion of the parties of the first part, not be to the interruption of or detriment of their business. It is understood that in the case of such employment the party is the exclusive employé of the party of the first part, as to any shipment to be made on account of said first party, until it is delivered to an exclusive employé of the party of the second part.

Seventh. This contract is to supersede and cancel and is a settlement in full for all existing contracts between the parties hereto, and shall be binding for ten (10) years from the first day of May, 1886, and shall apply to all lines of railroad now owned, operated, or controlled by the party of the first part, and also to such as may be owned, operated, or controlled by them during the period of this contract.

The said second party, in consideration of this contract and the rights and privileges accorded by it, agrees to give to the said party of the first part two million four hundred thousand dollars ($2,400,000) of its capital stock, and it is agreed that the capital stock of the second party shall not be increased above $6,000,000 without the consent of the first party.

Eighth. The party of the first also agrees not to engage during the last-named period in the express business, nor to employ any other express company or individual in the carriage of its money, remittances, packages, parcels, or goods by express, and that they will not permit any of their employés to carry or deliver express matter except as hereinbefore provided.

They also agree that they will not during such period give to any other person, firm, company, or corporation any better or more advantageous terms, rates, or facilities than they give to the party of the second part, and they will so far as they lawfully may, during all such period, protect and forward the interests and business of the party of the second part.

Ninth. The party of the first part, in consideration of the payments received and hereafter to be received and the benefits to be derived from this agreement, hereby appoints and constitutes the said party of the second part its sole agent to manage and carry on the express business of its lines of railway, and should any portion of said railway be occupied by any other express company or firm, then such payments as may be received from such other express company or firm shall be considered gross earnings of said party of the second part and treated as such.

The total freight earnings of the system for the year ending February 28, 1887, were $18,844,557.46, of which there was earned in—

July, 1886	$1,705,560.29
August, 1886	1,730,009.15
January, 1887	1,202,229.74
February, 1887	1,199,619.57
Making a total in the four months of	5,897,418.75

The freight earnings of these four months were 31.2905 per cent. of the total freight earnings for the year.

If the constructive mileage and other allowances for these four months sustain the same relation to the allowances for the year that the freight earnings for the four months in question sustain to the total freight earnings for the year, the total allowances for the year would amount to $453,047.79.

On the other hand, the Union Pacific received from its connections at Omaha, Kansas City, Ogden, and Huntington, on constructive mileage and other bases, as opposed to a straight mileage basis, the following sums:

July, 1886	$127,599.30
August, 1886	101,350.03
January, 1887	49,536.12
February, 1887	96,858.04
Making a total of	375,333.49

Assuming that this is equal to 31.2905 per cent. of the total, the gross amount for the year would be $1,199,512.59.

Balance, representing the profit under the constructive mileage rule in favor of the Union Pacific system, $746,464.80.

B.

The Union Pacific system.—Memorandum in relation to constructive mileage allowances, based on the returns of July and August, 1886, and January and February, 1887.

On the business interchanged by the Union Pacific with its auxiliary lines on constructive mileage and other bases as opposed to a straight mileage basis, the parent company contributed during the months in question the following sums:

July, 1886	$43,215.39
August, 1886	42,196.00
January, 1887	29,591.13
February, 1887	26,758.40
	141,760.92

Of the allowances thus made in favor of the branch lines of the Union Pacific there were contributed by the lines east of the Missouri River and west of Ogden and Huntington the following sums:

July, 1886	$49,138.71
August, 1886	36,722.00
January, 1887	18,445.51
February, 1887	34,360.00
	138,666.72
Balance contributed by the Union Pacific	3,064.10

Amounts contributed to the Union Pacific by the lines east of the Missouri River and west of Ogden and Huntington in addition to the amounts contributed by those lines to the branch lines of the Union Pacific:

July, 1886	$78,460.29
August, 1886	64,697.00
January, 1887	31,080.61
February, 1887	62,403.55
	236,636.75
Balance in favor of the Union Pacific	233,572.57

If $233,572.57 equals 31.2905 per cent., the total for the year would amount to $746,464.80.

AS TO KANSAS PACIFIC REBATES, &C.

I am advised by our auditor, Mr. Erastus Young, that it will be impossible to furnish a statement of the amounts paid on account of rebates, overcharges, pools, &c., by the Kansas Pacific Railway Company prior to the consolidation, for the reason that he has been unable to find the records of that company containing such information.

REMARKS OF MR. JOHN F. DILLON.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I wish to say something with reference to the suit of Arnold Leo against the Union Pacific Railroad Company, which has been already several times referred to.

That suit was brought by Leo as a stockholder to have it adjudged that the Union Pacific Company had no legal power to invest in the securities of branch lines or to make the collateral trust. In that case the questions involved were investigated and argued.

AS TO BRANCH LINES.

Among other evidence produced by the company in the case was a letter from Mr. T. F. Oakes, who was at that time vice-president of the Northern Pacific Company—a rival company to the Union Pacific—but who was for many years officially connected with the Kansas Pacific in various capacities, as superintendent and receiver. The letter is in regard to the policy of constructing branch lines. Mr. Oakes is in the city, and if the Commission prefer to have him here we will produce him, so that he may affirm on oath his judgment given in that letter.

Commissioner LITTLER. Is that letter on the subject of branch lines?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Yes.

Commissioner LITTLER. It contains his opinion on that subject.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Yes, and presents the subject in a strong light.

Commissioner LITTLER. Do you present the testimony of this man as an expert?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Not only as an expert, but as a man familiar with the Kansas Pacific road and the country tributary to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you present the testimony in connection with the question of the wisdom of constructing branch lines or as to the methods of their construction?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. As to these particular branch lines I ask to be permitted to read the letter, and the Commission can give such weight to it as it sees fit.

The letter is as follows:

[Northern Pacific Railroad Company, Vice-President's Office. T. F. Oakes, Vice-President.]

NEW YORK, February 7, 1883.

SIDNEY DILLON, Esq., President of the Union Pacific Railway Company:

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 5th instant, asking for my opinion as to the policy of your company investing in branch lines, is received, and you make this request on the ground of my former connection with the Kansas Pacific Railway (which was for a period of about sixteen years) and my familiarity with your entire system of roads.

I am entirely free to give my opinion, which is very decided on the subject named, and my views are based on an experience of about twenty years in the West and Northwest.

If the Kansas Pacific Railway Company had adopted and pursued the policy of building and extending branches of its main line into territory geographically tributary to it, I have no doubt it would have avoided the disasters which befell it. But it left its trunk line without feeders to support it and the result was inevitable. It died from sheer inanition, and its failure was from the want of a system of branches judiciously constructed to bring to it the nourishment necessary for its support.

In striking contrast with this is the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company. The road of that company is constructed through a country in no respect superior in the elements which furnish railway traffic to that traversed by the Kansas Pacific, but that company adopted the policy of providing feeders for the main line, by the construction of branches, and the result is the achievement of great success. Had that company pursued a different policy the expense of maintaining and operating its line would have so exhausted its resources that it would long ago have resulted in disaster to all concerned.

Were I writing this to any one not connected with the Union Pacific Railway, I would point to your company, and its policy in building branch lines from eligible points and on judiciously selected lines, as another illustration of the wisdom and beneficial effects of that system.

The Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company has adopted the same policy, and with a result not only gratifying and remunerative to its stockholders, but of inestimable benefit to the country thus brought into railway connection with the East and South; and so of the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul, and the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Companies. But it is needless to multiply instances. These facts are apparent and speak louder than words.

From another view of the subject I come to the same conclusion, namely: a land-grant road, as yours is, and so far distant from the seaboard, must furnish facilities to the settlers on the lands for getting their products to market. These products will not bear ordinary wagon transportation over more than a few miles without consuming every cent of profit. How are the purchasers of, and settlers on, your lands to be sustained unless you give them the means of access to market? And the same is true of settlers on the Government lands. But as to the former, it has always seemed to me that such railroad companies are under the highest moral obligation to do everything within their power necessary to give the means, at least, of subsistence; and this, under our present conditions of life, cannot be done if they are left shut out from access to the rest of the world.

Public policy also requires this course to be efficiently and thoroughly carried out whenever the ends will seem to justify the means, and the interest of the stockholders is plainly in the same direction.

In conclusion, I say that my unqualified opinion is that a railroad company whose trunk line traverses a region suitable for the homes of industrious, educated, and law-abiding citizens, or that can be made accessible to natural sources of wealth, should adopt and carry out the policy of constructing branch roads so as to afford the required facilities, and at the same time thus promote the interests of its own stockholders.

Very truly yours,

T. F. OAKES.

REFERENCES TO BRANCH LINES IN REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT DIRECTORS.

I now wish to call the attention of the Commission briefly to the references in the reports of the Government directors from year to year on the subject of branch lines, showing that every year what has been done has been reported to Congress. It is a very important element in this case, as Judge Wheeler held when he decided the Leo case. I have not the reports of 1872 or 1873, but in one of the reports before me there is an extract from and a reference to the reports of those years, which will be sufficient for the present purpose, I think. I should like to have these on the record.

In the report of the Government directors for the year 1876 the several interests of the Union Pacific Company in Colorado and Utah railroads more or less directly connected with its main line are given as follows:

Particulars of the company's interests in the Colorado Central Railroad Company, June 30, 1876.

Amount charged for materials, cash, freights, &c		$1,316,401.21
Credits:
110,000 first-mortgage bonds, at $85	$93,500.00
396,000 first-mortgage bonds, at $80	316,800.00
2,100 shares stock, at $25	52,500.00
84,000 Gilpin County bonds, at $80	67,200.00	530,000.00
Balance unprovided for, without interest		786,401.21

Overdue coupons, not included in above, $334,440, gold.

The company has sold 50 of the Colorado Central Railroad Company first-mortgage bonds, received as above, leaving 456 still on hand; in addition to which they

...000, received through the Colorado Improvement Company, making 1,056 bonds in all owned by the company.

Of the stock, the company still owns the 2,100 shares received as above, and also ... shares received through the Colorado Improvement Company, making 9,300 shares in all owned by the company.

Particulars of the company's interest in the Utah Central Railroad Company, June 30, 1876.

... shares stock, at $50	$250,000.00
... shares stock, at $90	27,000.00
Total, 5,300 shares, costing	277,000.00

This stock is in the hands of the company.

Particulars of the company's interest in the Utah Southern Railroad Company, June 30, 1876.

Amount charged for materials, cash, freight, &c	$813,353.51
Credit: 1,016 first-mortgage bonds, at $80	812,800.00
Balance unprovided for	553.51

In addition to the 1,016 bonds received as above, the company received 121 bonds as a consideration for its interest in the Utah Southern Railroad Company, making in all 1,137 bonds, of which 716 have been disposed of, leaving 421 bonds still on hand.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company has 2,850 shares of Utah Southern Railroad Company stock upon which 70 per cent. has been paid, and which has cost the company $169,849.32, in addition to which it has 5,000 shares of full paid stock, which it received as a consideration for its interest in that company.

Particulars of the company's interest in the Utah Northern Railroad Company, June 30, 1876.

Amount charged for freight, materials, interest, &c	$148,100
Credit: By cash and coupons	73,700
		$74,400
By 93 bonds, at 80 per cent		74,400
Overdue coupons		16,625

The 93 bonds received as above are in the hands of the company.

The company owns 378 shares of the Utah Northern Railroad Company stock, received as a consideration for its interest in that company.

In the report of the Government directors for the year ending June 30, 1877, the directors say:

Upon the subject of the aid extended by the Union Pacific Company to other companies, the Government directors in their report for 1873 remarked:

"With regard to the advances which the Union Pacific Company has made in aid of the roads mentioned, we can but repeat what we said in our report of 1872: 'We do not question the wisdom of a policy which tends to secure to the trunk line the business which the said several roads may command. It could not well afford to have said business diverted from it. The policy, however, should be so ordered as not to interfere with whatever present or future claim the Government may have for reimbursements.' The ability of the company to make the advances referred to shows that it could have returned more to the Government than it has, and raises the question of the power of the company to divert its means into channels not authorized by the law."

The total advances made, and the companies added, appear in the following table and these in last year's report:

Investment in Summit County Railroad Company, $134,500 bonds, 1,622 shares full-paid stock, 2,759 shares assessable stock, and valuable coal lands. Estimated value and cost, $60,000.

Colorado Central Railroad has been aided to the extent of	$1,610,497.86
Credits secured by Union Pacific Railroad Company	767,156.20
Balance, without interest	843,341.66

The investments in the Utah Central, Utah Southern, and Utah Northern Companies have not been increased during the past year, and remain as stated in the report of the Government directors for the year ending June 30, 1876.

The statement of investments in the Republican Valley Railroad has not yet been received, and will not be in time to be embraced in this report. The Union Pacific Company's investment in this road is regarded as a safe and remunerative one, as very considerable aid has been secured from the counties into which it has been constructed, and the country will supply it with a large local business.

The Utah Central, Utah Southern, and the Colorado Central are the most important of the roads aided. These, and the Utah Northern, are reported quite fully in the reports of the Government directors for the years 1872, 1873, and 1876. The Republican Valley road, in Nebraska, and the Summit County road, in Utah, involve investments of more recent date.

Aid to other roads is in contemplation by the company—one to the Blak Hills region and one to secure the business of Montana. The Government directors believe that this policy of the company should be at all times held subordinate to its obligations to the United States. When this is assured, the policy may result in public, as well as corporate, good. It would seem to be definitely settled that national aid in the construction of railroads by grants of public lands, or otherwise, is at an end. Still, there are important regions of our country to be developed by the construction of railroads. If this can be done by corporations whose interests it is to secure the business of those regions, without endangering repayment to the Government in such cases as that of the Union Pacific Company, an important public interest would be subserved. Wherever railroads go, the Indian question is practically settled. From the vast domain covered by the Union Pacific road, its connecting lines, and the settlements included by them, Indian troubles have disappeared, and the cost of the Indian service generally has been greatly reduced. The roads above mentioned, as held in contemplation by the Union Pacific Company, would, if constructed, tend strongly to further simplify said service and reduce its cost. If the policy can be carried out without hazard to the claim of the Government, it involves possibilities of great moment to the country at large, and of almost incalculable advantage to the sections of our Western Territories most directly interested. (See letter of General Crook at conclusion of this report.)

General Crook was at that time in charge of the military department of the Platte.

GENERAL CROOK'S LETTER ON THE UNION PACIFIC BRANCHES.

The letter of General Crook, to which reference is made, is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE PLATTE,
COMMANDING GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Omaha, Nebr., October 9, 1877.

SIR: Referring to your communication of the 8th instant, stating that the managers of the Union Pacific Railroad propose building two branches from the main line, the initial of one east of Sherman, Wyo., with its objective point at or near North Bozeman, Mont., the other to start at or near Rawlings, Wyo., and join eastern branch at its terminus in Montana—the eastern branch passing through the Black Hills and the western through the Wind River country—you request my opinion on the points explained in the following answers:

They will have a most salutary and positive effect in settling our Indian troubles, thereby saving large expenditures of public funds. They will invite to and open up for settlement most valuable farming and grazing lands, aid in the discovery of new mining sections, and promote the development of valuable mineral resources already discovered. They will save the public Treasury vast amounts in economy in transportation of military supplies, troops, and mails. From my personal knowledge of the country through which the proposed lines will pass, I regard the project as eminently practicable, and more easily accomplished than many of the works of similar character now in successful operation in the country west of the Mississippi.

I have confined my reply to the questions embraced in your letter, but under the head of gain, &c., I would say, generally, that I know of no proposed enterprise more important to the vast country they will open up, nor any that will be of more positive and enduring good to the whole country. They will, when completed, be of national importance and benefit.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE CROOK,
Brigadier-General, U. S. Army.

Hon. J. H. MILLARD,
Government Director Union Pacific Railroad, Omaha, Nebr.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Those particular branches were not constructed?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. We have one looking toward the Black Hills, and we have reached Montana through the Utah and Northern, which was then not extended to that point.

GOVERNMENT DIRECTORS FAVOR BUILDING BRANCH ROADS.

In the Government directors' report for the year ending June 30, 1878, is the following:

During the last few years, however, and under the management of those who now control it, the policy of the Union Pacific has been to protect itself from competition in another way. It has sought to occupy the territory adjacent to its line in advance, through the construction of a system of branch roads or feeders. This seems in every respect a wise policy, and one which it is for the interest of the Government to encourage. Through it not only are much needed railroad facilities furnished, but the net earnings of the company being thus applied, the permanent value of the property as a security for the advances made to the corporation by the Government is largely enhanced. There are now five of these branch lines in which the Union Pacific is interested, either directly or indirectly, to the extent of entire possession or in part. These are the Omaha and Republican Valley, the Colorado Central, the Utah Central, the Utah Southern, and the Utah Northern. It is not deemed necessary to encumber this report with any details concerning these branch lines, either as touching their length or their business and financial relations with the Union Pacific. If desired by the Department, these can most readily be obtained through the office of the Government auditors. Meanwhile, it, of course, need not be said that these branch lines, or the securities which represent them, in so far as they are the property of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, are not covered by the Government mortgages, and contribute to the security of those mortgages only in so far as these branches are valuable feeders of the main line, and as such practically inseparable from it.

POLICY OF COMPANY TO FOSTER ITS BRANCHES.

In the Government directors' report for the year ending June 30, 1879, occurs the following:

The policy of the company has been to foster its branches until they become self-sustaining. This is good policy, since, for example, on through traffic with points on the Utah and Northern, it gives the Union Pacific a haul over the entire line. Large shipments that formerly went via the Missouri River to Fort Benton and were distributed by wagon transportation from that point are now distributed from the terminal station of the Utah and Northern.

The company leased in March last the Colorado Central Railroad for a term of fifty years, and guaranteed that 35 per cent. of the gross earnings should be applied upon the securities of the road. This leaves 65 per cent. to equip, maintain, and operate the road.

In order to give a concise view of the feeding lines directly connected with the Union Pacific Railroad, or in which it is interested, or whose building is contemplated, a brief description of them furnished to the directors by Mr. S. H. H. Clark, the general manager, is placed in the appendix.

It has been suggested that in view of the contingency of the branch or feeding lines becoming connected with other main lines of railway, and thus diverting their own business from the Union Pacific, it may be good policy for the Government to invest the sinking fund in first-mortgage bonds of these branch lines, bearing 7 per cent. interest, if satisfactorily guaranteed by the Union Pacific, and thus secure to the latter the business of said lines until the debt of the Government is paid.

In the appendix to report of the Government directors for 1879 is "a statement of feeding lines of railroad built or projected and connecting with the Union Pacific Railroad, furnished by Mr. S. H. H. Clark, general manager of the Union Pacific Railroad." In that statement the following-named lines are mentioned: The Omaha and Republican Valley Railroad; the Omaha, Niobrara and Black Hills Railroad; the Hastings and Grand Island Railroad; the Utah Central and Utah Southern railroads; the Utah and Northern Railway (narrow gauge).

CONGRESS PRACTICALLY RATIFIED THIS POLICY.

I may observe that Congress has practically ratified this policy, at least in regard to the Utah and Northern and the Oregon Short Line, in this way: It chartered the Utah and Northern originally, and after the Union Pacific acquired an interest in it, it rechartered it, knowing the relation of the Union Pacific and the Utah and Northern. In 1882 Congress granted directly a charter to the Oregon Short Line Railway Company with a full knowledge of the relation that actually existed between the Oregon Short Line and the Union Pacific.

In the report of the Government directors of the Union Pacific road for 1880 (page 10 of the Government pamphlet) this statement occurs:

The policy of building and aiding to build branch lines of railroad by this company, that has been pursued in past years and is still being continued, was wise, both in its conception and in its execution, as the trunk line of railway has branch and feeding lines of railway to support it, independent of its through business, which now amounts to but a small proportion of its traffic, viz: 28 per cent.

CONGRESS INFORMED THAT UNION PACIFIC COMPANY CREATED A COLLATERAL TRUST BOND.

In the same report for 1880, on page 12, is a full statement that the Union Pacific Company created a collateral trust bond dated July 1, 1879, to run twenty-nine years, drawing 6 per cent. interest, secured by the first-mortgage bonds of the Colorado Central road, the Omaha and Republican Valley road, and the Utah and Northern road, all of which draw 6 per cent. interest. That report for 1880 further says:

Five million dollars of collateral trust bonds have been delivered to the railroad company in conformity with the terms of the trust, nearly all of which have been sold—last sales made at $1.05—and their proceeds have been substantially used to aid in the construction of branch roads, thus enabling the railroad company to retain the securities of its branch roads, and by their deposit, in this or similar trusts, multiply the construction of branch roads as the mining interests or further settlement of the country may require. A copy of this trust indenture the Government directors attach to this report.

They then set out in full a copy of the indenture, with a form of bond and full particulars.

CONGRESS INFORMED OF THE CONSOLIDATION.

In the same report the Government directors, under date of December 16, 1880, report as follows:

The Union Pacific Railroad Company entered into articles of union and consolidation of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, and the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company, January 24, 1880.

They then give the particulars of the transaction and annex to their report a copy of the articles of union and consolidation, which was transmitted to Congress.

FEEDERS OF UNION PACIFIC.

In the Government directors' report for 1881 the following statement in regard to the branches is made:

From information furnished from the Union Pacific Railroad officers, these are the roads that extend from the main line and operate as feeders to it. It will be seen that these branches are already much longer than the main line, and that they extend over a vast range of country that is either wholly new territory or else occupied by mmon with competing lines of other roads. The following are the lines above referred to:

	Miles.
Omaha and Republican Valley Railroad	132
Niobrara and Black Hills	82
Saint Joseph and Western	252
Colorado Central road	184
Denver and Pacific Railway	106
Echo and Park City Railroad	31
Utah and Northern Railway	421
Oregon Short Line (completed)	50
Idaleburg Extension	151
Total	1,409

AUDITOR OF RAILWAYS APPROVES BRANCH LINES.

I have not before me the report of the auditor of railways; but Auditor French, in 1880, at page 25 of his report, refers to the branch lines with approval, and Commissioner Armstrong likewise refers to them with approval, stating the particulars in his report for 1882, at page 33.

GENERAL POLICY OF BRANCHES NOT SO MUCH AT ISSUE AS MANNER OF EXECUTING POLICY.

Commissioner ANDERSON. What I understand the chairman to have meant in his remarks on this subject heretofore—and it seems to me to have great force—is that the general subject is not so much at issue as the particular manner in which the policy was carried out, both as to judgment in selecting the particular branches and (as in former years at any rate) as to the honesty of the manner in which the thing was carried out. To use an illustration: I suppose everybody would concede that the aqueduct now being constructed to increase the water power of the city of New York is a proper and judicious use of money, but if an aqueduct were to be built through an arid desert, and it should turn out that the city officials were interested in the construction (I do not mean to say that these are facts at all, but I mention them to illustrate the point)—if that were proven, and if the fact still were that the increase of water supply was of importance to the city of New York, it would hardly be relevant to use that fact in a discussion of the method of particular construction.

As to the methods pursued in the case of the Union Pacific Railroad, we have had a great deal of evidence, and I do not know whether you want to give us any more. There have been questions raised as to the Leadville line, as to the acquisition of interest in the Saint Jo and Western, and as to some others that are not perhaps so much in point. On the other side there has been given evidence to show, as to some of these branches, that they were constructed in the most economical method possible, and have been of great advantage. It is to that point that I wish to call your attention; so that in case you desire to give any further evidence on this subject, it should be addressed rather to the methods of construction than to the general question of the wisdom of the policy.

TWO BRANCHES OF THE SUBJECT.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I am very glad you have made this suggestion, because it enables me to say pertinently that this subject of branches has evidently two branches to it; one is the legal power to do this, and the other is a question of policy as to building any particular branch.

The Commission will have noticed throughout the entire history of this matter that the legal power of the Union Pacific to invest its surplus earnings (much more the power of the Union Pacific to pledge its credit) for the purpose of building branch lines has been denied from the beginning to this day.

CHARACTERIZATION OF MR. REIFF'S REMARKS.

In his testimony given yesterday Mr. Reiff mentioned it. The substance of his diatribe was: "There is no legal power in the Union Pacific Company to have ever done more than one thing, namely, to build a main line from Omaha to Ogden; everything else that it has done has been illegal." The parties he acted with—Woerishoffer and those people—as late as 1882, brought in the courts of New York, or caused to be brought, a suit to have it judicially determined that the Union Pacific had no such legal power. He was here yesterday, and others have been before in the Departments, and in Congress, no later than last year, in what is known as the Henley resolution (copy of which I believe is in your record somewhere), charging that all these investments were illegal, and that the Union Pacific had no authority to issue the collateral trust bonds; that all the guarantees which it has made on the Oregon Short Line, and on the Saint Jo and Western, and in fact everything that it has at any time done in the way of aiding branch lines, is illegal. I beg the Commission not to forget that.

If it is illegal, then we want this Commission to report (and the justice of this was so obvious that Mr. Reiff conceded that it should be reported one way or the other) that in every State and Territory through which our road runs we should have the same power, and no more, that railroads have which are created by those several States and Territories, in respect to building branch lines, so that whenever they may do, and under whatever conditions they may do it, we may do it. Otherwise we are at a disadvantage.

THE UNION PACIFIC AT A DISADVANTAGE IN BUILDING BRANCHES.

The honorable chairman has said that it is not now a question of legality. But it is a question of legality. He says we have always done it. True, we have; but we have done it by indirection. We have done it under a great disadvantage. The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Company can build and promote branch lines, and during the last year has been able to get money at 4 per cent., because that company has the plain charter right to do it, and the use of their credit in reference to the matter is under no cloud or question. But when we undertake to do it, Mr. Reiff and everybody else who is our enemy rushes into the public prints or rushes down to the Department of the Interior. Those people have flooded the offices of the Commissioner of Railroads with protests against these collateral trust bonds and with protests against these guarantees. They stimulate people to distrust our securities. Our enemies do this; I do not particularize anybody. The records of Congress show that at almost every session somebody gets up and moves an inquiry into the management of the Union Pacific Company.

FAILURE OF ACT TO GIVE POWER TO BUILD BRANCHES.

Mr. COHEN. Where do you find any doubt as to the power of the company to build a branch road?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. They say it is based on the law.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It is based on the act of 1873 mostly.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Not alone on that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. On the failure to give power.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. On the failure to give power. The act says that the Union Pacific may extend its line to meet the Central Pacific, and says nothing about branches. In 1862, when this road was chartered, the country looked to nothing but a main line, and did not have its attention directed to branches.

Mr. COHEN. Has it not all the power necessary to make its main line productive?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Well, I have very grave doubts about that, Mr. Cohen. At all events, the power ought to be plainly expressed, so as to prevent doubts and controversy about it.

IS THE GOVERNMENT LIEN LIMITED TO PORTION OF ROAD SUBSIDIZED?

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that you deny absolutely any claim of the Government to a lien on any property acquired beyond the subsidized part of the road. Now, if on the subsidized part of the road there is realized a surplus by which, or through which, improvements made on the property become part of the property, you say that is an advantage to the property, but you deny that the Government has any interest in that acquired property so far as security is concerned.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. That suggests a matter of great importance for you to consider in your report. There is nothing plainer on earth than that the lien of the Government for these subsidy bonds is limited to the road in respect of which the bonds were issued. So thoroughly is that the case that the Supreme Court of the United States decided that as the subsidy bonds on the Kansas Pacific were issued only to the extent of 394 miles, that extent of line was the extent of the Government lien—that it is simply a mortgagee of the subsidized part of railroad and nothing else.

Commissioner LITTLER. And that its lien is only co-extensive with the line which its money assisted to construct.

LIEN INCLUDES EQUIPMENT, BUT NOT GRANTED LAND.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. That is adjudicated, and does not admit of debate. It includes the equipment of the road but, of course, does not include the land. It is limited by its terms. As long therefore as the Government is paid its interest as a creditor, or whatever is due to it, it has nothing further to ask. The surplus earnings of the road, after paying the interest, belong to the stockholders. And instead of criticising the Union Pacific and its stockholders, who might lawfully have distributed this whole surplus in the way of dividends, without violating any moral obligation, the stockholders should be lauded for having said, "We will put the surplus earning into branch lines." Will you tell me what equity the Government has to that, under the contract?

TO DESIST FROM APPROPRIATING ALL EARNINGS WOULD BE FOUNDATION OF GOVERNMENT'S LIEN ON BRANCHES.

In suggesting an alteration of the status, you may say that if the Government, under the Thurman act, or under the power which is reserved, should desist from a claim of appropriating all of these earnings to the payment of its debt, and allow the company to appropriate part of the money which, by the exercise of its great power, the Government might take to itself, that should be the foundation of a lien on the branches thus built. That has got to be done, not by virtue of any existing statute, but by virtue of a new relation to be entered into between the Government and the company. And, speaking for myself here, on the spur of the moment, I should say that under proper limitations, that would be right; that this property ought to be legally bound together, and that your first duty is to take such steps as to require or authorize an arrangement whereby all the property shall be kept together, and not to allow it to become dismembered, as it might be under existing circumstances.

POSITION OF STOCKHOLDERS IF COMPANY FAILS TO PAY ITS DEBT.

Suppose we did not pay, and a great many are of the opinion that the true solution of this matter is that we are just like anybody else, and if we cannot pay at the day, and in full, the Government should foreclose its lien and make the stockholders come in and protect themselves, letting the property be put up to the highest bidder. That would have the effect of putting the Government where it would get the benefit of its lien for what it is worth; it would sell out the railroad, and the stockholders would lose everything unless they bid the road in, and if they did they would be just where they are now through their existing corporate organization.

I know the disadvantages which the present status entails. We are at a disadvantage in dealing with our property, in holding our territory, and competing with our rivals by reason of these doubts as to our power to do anything legally.

CLAIM OF THE COMPANY AGAINST THE UNITED STATES FOR DELAWARE AND POTTAWATOMIE LANDS.

There is one other matter that I have been requested to call your attention to, so that if you think proper, and if it is within the scope of your powers, you may make a suggestion in regard to it. I refer to the testimony of Judge Usher before this Commission in regard to the claim of the company against the United States, in favor of the Kansas Pacific Company, for selling lands in the Delaware and Pottawatomie Reservation, as to which lands the United States covenanted as follows, in the second section of the act of 1862:

> The United States shall extinguish as rapidly as may be the Indian titles to all lands falling under the operation of this act and required by the said right of way and the grants hereinafter made.

The grants referred to are the grants of land.

According to Judge Usher's testimony the Government, instead of keeping this contract with us, and extinguishing this Indian title and fulfilling the grants made to the company, has sold these lands to others, and keeps the consideration or benefit. We ask you to make a report that in any adjustment this claim should be adjusted on fair and equitable principles. It is a very considerable claim.

Commissioner LITTLER. Have you a list of the lands misappropriated, as you claim.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Judge Usher states the amount approximately. Of course you cannot deal with the question judicially, but you can deal with the principle involved, if you see fit.

AS TO THE DUTY OF THE COMMISSION REGARDING THE CONSOLIDATION.

I have only one other thing to say. I would like to look for a moment at the act under which you are operating, in regard to your duties as to the consolidation.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The act requires us "to investigate and report all the facts relating to the alleged consolidation of the Union Pacific Railway Company, the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company, and the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company into an alleged corporation known as the Union Pacific Railway Company."

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Do you understand that a direction to report as to the facts requires from you any expression of opinion as to the legal power to do what was done?

Commissioner ANDERSON. We cannot answer that question now.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Then I would like to say a word or two on that subject, if you have any doubt about it. I do not ask you to express any opinion. The only point is whether I shall occupy five minutes of your time.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Had you better not leave that for us to ask for if we desire it?

Commissioner LITTLER. Mr. Dillon's suggestion is that he be allowed to argue the legal question of the alleged consolidation of the Kansas Pacific and the Union Pacific.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The legal power.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes, the legality. I have just read the language of the act, and I have stated that I do not think we could answer as to whether or not the act requires us to pass on the question of legality; but it seems to me that a question of that magnitude could certainly not be treated satisfactorily in five minutes by any counsel, not even by Judge Dillon.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I could not go into it at all, but I should like to speak for five minutes on it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I have no objection to your occupying five minutes, but it seems to me that a subject of that scope, no matter how you treat it, could hardly be inclosed within the limit of five minutes.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I occupied four hours before the Supreme Court of the United States on that subject, and I think that court practically passed upon it.

Commissioner LITTLER. If we desire to hear argument at all I think it would be more satisfactory to hear you at length and at our convenience.

ALL THE STOCK EXCHANGED.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. That would be very much more satisfactory to me. I believe it is in evidence before you that all the stock has been exchanged pursuant to the consolidation years ago.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes, we have all that. We have the exchange completed except to the extent of four or five hundred shares.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I think that now practically all the stock has been exchanged, so that it has ceased to be a question so far as the stockholders are concerned, or so far as State of Kansas is concerned, and so far as the United States is concerned. I do not think anything is easier to demonstrate than that the companies were not only authorized but encouraged to build as a unit, and it would have been a great deal better for everybody if the subsidized roads had all been built under one system.

A CALL ON MR. COHEN AS TO STUBS OF CHECK-BOOKS.

Commissioner ANDERSON (addressing Mr. Cohen). Do you offer, Mr. Cohen, to produce the check-books, or the stubs of check-books, containing the entries relating to checks drawn by Mr. Huntington and charged by him to the Central Pacific Railroad Company between 1871 and 1878?

Mr. COHEN. I have not made any offer on the subject.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I repeat my question; I did not state that you had made an offer to produce them. Yesterday I called for those stubs, and now I ask you to make reply to that call, stating either that you will produce them, or that you decline to produce them, or making such offer as you think proper.

Mr. COHEN. There is nothing like being exact; it was the day before yesterday that you called for them.

Commissioner ANDERSON. No matter as to the date; the call was made, and I have now asked you the question that you have heard.

Mr. COHEN. I have paid no attention to the call.

The CHAIRMAN. I would suggest that the question be put to Mr. Cohen direct, now, and have it on the record, as to whether he will produce the stub-books or check-books of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I will put the question again in that form. Will you produce the stub check-books above referred to by me before this Commission?

Mr. COHEN. I have not any such books in my possession, and I do not feel called upon to hunt for them.

Commissioner ANDERSON. When you say "I," are you answering for yourself or for the Central Pacific Railroad Company?

Mr. COHEN. I answer for myself.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Are you the counsel of the Central Pacific Railway Company, and do you appear before us as the representative of that company?

Mr. COHEN. I do.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Then I ask you, as such representative, will you produce before this Commission the stub check-books above referred to?

Mr. COHEN. I will, whenever I am instructed by my clients so to do.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Have you reported to the officers in this city, of the Central Pacific Railway Company, the call made on you by this Commission to produce those stub check-books?

Mr. COHEN. I have not.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Will you so report to them?

DOES NOT FEEL LIKE PRODUCING CHECK-BOOKS UNLESS HIS CLIENTS ARE TO BE REIMBURSED.

Mr. COHEN. I do not know that I am called upon to do so. I presented to the Commission here a claim for a vast amount of money which we have expended in its service, and until I can see some disposition on the part of the Commission to recognize, or even to examine into, the merits of that claim, I do not feel like subjecting my client to any further expenditure, even for the increased service which I would render. I have in my pocket a letter from the secretary of the Central Pacific Company, addressed to Mr. Huntington, vice-president, in which the secretary said that the Company has expended, in the service of this Commission, and in matters pertaining to the preparation of evidence put before it, and in the employment of counsel, at least $100,000. Some of that was expended for transportation which the Commissioners ordered, including the provisioning of the cars with food and wines and things of that kind. I do not feel like subjecting my clients to any further expenditure in connection with this examination unless they are to be reimbursed for it.

PROPER BILLS WILL RECEIVE ATTENTION OF COMMISSION.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That reference seems to me totally uncalled for. As soon as a bill of particulars of the transportation account shall have been received it will be attended to. Any other bills that are proper, and accompanied by proper vouchers in support of them—which does not always appear to be the case in matters connected with the Central Pacific—will receive our attention.

Mr. COHEN. That is your view.

Commissioner ANDERSON. And when received they shall be disposed of according to what we believe to be the justice of the case. But the whole of this discussion is an evasion of the question that I put to you, Mr. Cohen.

OBJECTS TO THE TERM "EVASION."

Mr. COHEN. I object to that term.

Mr. ANDERSON. You may object.

Mr. COHEN. It is not an evasion. I will not permit you, sir, to address me in that way.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I repeat that you may object to it.

Mr. COHEN. I do object to it, and I shall insist that in your capacity as Commissioner you shall use proper and respectful language.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That is a description of the language I have used.

Mr COHEN. It is not, and I will not permit you to speak to me in that way. A commission from the President of the United States does not authorize you to conduct your proceedings in any other than a gentlemanly manner.

Commissioner ANDERSON. If you are through with this discussion we will resume business. I now repeat: As representative of the Central Pacific Railway Company, will you produce before this Commission the stub check-books already referred to?

WILL PRODUCE CHECK-BOOKS WHEN AUTHORIZED BY CLIENT.

Mr. COHEN. I have answered you to the extent of my ability in that matter. When I am authorized by my client to do anything for you I will do it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Will you explain to this Commission how you are to be authorized or not authorized unless you take the trouble to report the matter to your superior officers?

Mr. COHEN. I think you are entirely right in that. I have not reported to them for the simple reason that I have told you that I did not feel like subjecting them to any further expense in connection with this inquiry.

CALL FOR THE LETTER-PRESS BOOKS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I now repeat my question as to the letter-press books with regard to which the demand was that you should inform this Commission where they were, and the statement made that a member of the Commission would limit the call to such letters or books as covered or related to the subject of inquiry. Are you now prepared to answer whether the Central Pacific Railway Company has now in its possession letter-press copies of the letters written by Mr. Huntington between 1872 and 1880?

Mr. COHEN. I have no recollection on the subject one way or the other.

THE COMMISSION PROPOSED TO PAY ITS WAY.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish to state here with reference to the bill for transportation that the Commission made a contract with the Union Pacific Railway Company, and also with Mr. Potter, vice-president of the Central Pacific Company, for all the transportation of the Commission. We desired an itemized bill of expenses rendered, and stated that the Commission desired to pay all charges for such transportation that in the judgment of the Commission would meet the approval of the Government, and only such ordinary transportation and meals as were given by the company to travelers in the ordinary trains. When a detailed bill is rendered to the Commission, with items, the Commission will be prepared to pass upon it. These remarks apply to the Union Pacific Company and the Sioux City and Pacific Company, as well as to the Central Pacific Company and any other roads that the Commission has passed over under that arrangement with reference to transportation. The Commission declined all offers or propositions of railroad companies to transport us free of charge, and desired to occupy toward the several corporations the same relations as strangers would occupy, paying for all services rendered. That was the proposition of the Commission to the companies.

AS TO THE OFFER TO SELL THE COLTON LETTERS TO MR. HUNTINGTON.

Commissioner ANDERSON. There was one answer made by Mr. Huntington, or one statement made by him, to which I wish to call attention. He stated when before the Commission that an agent of the Colton estate had offered these Colton letters to him for sale. The Commission desire to be informed of the name of the agent referred to by Mr. Huntington, and desire him to appear again before the Commission, unless he sees fit to send us the name through the counsel of the company.

Mr. COHEN. I intended to have mentioned that to Mr. Huntington, but have had no opportunity since adjournment last night to do so. I will do it at recess.

HAS THE UNION PACIFIC CLOSED ITS TESTIMONY?

Commissioner LITTLER. I should like to inquire of Judge Dillon whether the Union Pacific Company has closed its testimony and made all the suggestions it desires to make, unless the Commission should call for something further.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I stated in my letter the other day, that you had had access to our books and paper, ex parte, with liberty to make extracts; that we did not know what you had done, and that unless you called our attention to some charges we had nothing further to present. I ought to add, perhaps, that we have been at some little disadvantage in this matter, by reason of the fact that no one person connected with our company has been present at all the hearings at which testimony has been taken. I was present in New York and Boston during the taking of testimony in those places. I was not present during the taking of the testimony at Omaha, Denver, or other places; hence when we come to look over the printed testimony if we discover anything that is serious that needs to be supplied we would like to reserve the right, subject to the judgment of the Commission, to supply it. We are not aware of anything of that kind now.

CENTRAL PACIFIC BILL FOR TRANSPORTATION OF COMMISSION.

Mr. COHEN. I have the details now of the transportation furnished to this Commission, if you care to take them down.

Commissioner ANDERSON. You may hand the bill to us, and we will examine it.

Mr. COHEN. I have not got it in a separate bill. It is mixed up with other matters. I will give you the items, if you care to have your reporter take them down.

Commissioner ANDERSON. No; we want them before us, so that we may pass upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. There are a number of items in the bill pertaining to individual members of the Commission, in their individual capacity, and which they assumed. We desire to have those items separated from that portion of the bill properly chargeable to the Government.

Commissioner LITTLER. I made the request of the company that as to any individual expenses incurred for me, outside of the Commission—as my wife and child were with me—I did not desire the Government to pay any portion of such expenses. I do not wish the Government to pay any increased expense by reason of their being with me.

Mr. COHEN. I can only give you the information furnished to me.

Commissioner LITTLER. We desire you to present to us the naked bill of the company against the Government for the transportation of the Commission proper, with its staff of officials and employés.

The CHAIRMAN (addressing Mr. Cohen). Will you submit the bill, if you have it, to the Commission?

Mr. COHEN. I have not got the bill for transportation in formal shape. It is mixed up with other items. You want the transportation separate from the other items?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. COHEN. This paper that I have includes something more.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Submit anything you desire, and we will give it attention.

Mr. COHEN. Will you let me call the items over to your stenographer?

Commissioner ANDERSON. We object to that, if it is a "mixed-up" bill. As soon as you present a bill for transportation, we will consider it.

Mr. COHEN. I will try to get it out in a formal manner and give it to you this afternoon.

A STATEMENT WANTED OF THE CONDITION OF THE CENTRAL PACIFIC SINKING FUNDS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. There is one matter that we have called for several times. I do not know whether the answer has been furnished from San Francisco or not, but we will place it once more on the record. We want a statement of the exact condition of the respective sinking funds which have been accumulated by the Central Pacific Company showing the precise amount applicable to each separate mortgage, and enumerating the securities which represent the fund and stating where they are, and in what custody.

Mr. COHEN. Is not that in the statement furnished to you by Mr. E. H. Miller, jr.?

Commissioner ANDERSON. It had not been furnished when we left San Francisco, but it may have been furnished since to our accountant, Mr. Stevens. The call was made on Mr. Crocker. There is a statement in each of the reports of the company, but there are changes in the sinking fund and in the particular bonds that were held from time to time. We want an exact statement of its condition as it is to-day. Mr. Colburn can undoubtedly get that up.

Mr. COLBURN. It was stated in the testimony of Mr. E. H. Miller, jr., the secretary of the company, that such a statement would be furnished.

COUNSEL FOR UNION PACIFIC REQUESTS PERMISSION TO PUT IN FURTHER TESTIMONY IF NECESSARY.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I would like to reserve the right to supply anything that has escaped attention, if it be material or serious. Immaterial matters I do not care about.

Commissioner LITTLER. You understand that you take your chance of getting it printed.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I understand. I do not know that we want to put in anything more. I have already said that in my own judgment one of the most important inquiries is the relation of the main line and the branches. Connected with that is the question of the allowances to branch lines, in which the Government is no more interested than that, if the mileage allowances were unduly large, they have to that extent reduced the percentage that the Government would get under the acts of 1862 and 1864 and the Thurman act. As we understand it, we have adduced very abundant testimony that the percentages allowed to the branch lines by our company are not very large, but only reasonable. Mr. Adams informs me that he is able to produce a large amount of expert testimony on that subject if it is really desired, but the Commission announced early last week, I think, that it intended to close on Friday, and it did not seem to me that it was necessary, from my knowledge of what had been put in on that subject, to supplement it by any further testimony. I would like to have the reservation made to produce anything further to include that, if it be deemed by us or by the Commission to be really necessary.

Commissioner LITTLER. We will consider the request.

LIMITATIONS AS TO RIGHT TO BUILD BRANCHES.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I should like to make a suggestion at this point that has doubtless occurred to the Commission.

It is a constantly recurring problem with every railway management as to whether they shall build branches. An unlimited power to do that may lead to building branches unadvisedly or unwisely and without due consideration. The question is, what limitations can be put upon that right? It seems to me that legislation should be gone into as to adopting these branches, or the profitable ones among them, into the Union Pacific family.

As to building branches in the future, it may be that the Government has such a large interest in this property that it should be in some way consulted as to the expediency of building or acquiring or extending any given branch. Ordinarily, of course, that is determined by the directors or the stockholders—often determined, perhaps, in a way injuriously affecting the investment, by superinducing the bankruptcy of the company to the injury of a mortgage creditor.

In many railway mortgages, as the Commission know, there are provisions that branches shall not be built without some consent on the part of a mortgage creditor. That seems to be foreshadowed in the very act that appoints you. The people of this country would never have rested under the idea that the Union Pacific or this system of roads should not supply the country to which they were tributary when that country should come to be settled—when the needs of the country should come to demand of them, as Mr. Oakes very strongly puts it, that they should supply railway facilities.

Take an illustration. It ran to within 106 miles of Denver. Denver came, in the course of time, to be a great and important point. The people of this country would never be satisfied to have passengers for Denver going by stage along those 106 miles. They would want to have the Union Pacific road run up there and give the people railway facilities.

The suggestion is that you will not cut off the power to supply railway facilities to the great territory reached by these roads, but if unlimited power is liable to endanger the Government's security the real question to submit is, what limitation should be put upon that power?

REQUEST FOR BILLS AGAINST INDIVIDUAL MEMBERS OF COMMISSION.

Commissioner ANDERSON (addressing Mr. Cohen). We assume that you understand that this Commission asks you to furnish immediately any bills that your company may have against the members of the Commission as individuals, their bills as individuals having no connection with the bills against the Commission, as you well know, the gentlemen connected with the Commission being entirely prepared to liquidate their individual indebtedness.

Mr. COHEN. I do not understand that the company has any bills against any members of this Commission.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We desired to receive them. It was so explained at the time.

Commissioner LITTLER. I made a special request of your company so far as I was concerned. Let that be done.

Commissioner ANDERSON. If, because we took our wives and children with us, we are to receive the discourtesy of having bills for their transportation rendered against the Government—bills which the Commission will not recognize as proper bills—we want to know it as soon as possible.

Mr. COHEN. I do not know anything about the circumstances. All I know is, that the secretary has sent the bill for the transportation.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We will give the bill attention as soon as it is presented.

Mr. COHEN. I will send it to you this afternoon.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Friday, September 30, 1887.

LUCIUS E. CHITTENDEN, being further examined, testified as follows:

The WITNESS. I have here the bill of complaint in the Main case against the Central Pacific Railroad Company and others, which has been referred to [producing it].

LETTERS FROM MR. COHEN.

I made reference in my testimony to some letters of Mr. Cohen, which he asked me to produce. In reply to that, I now produce the entire correspondence of Mr. Cohen—all his letters on that subject to me. I think the letters to which I referred particularly are dated January 12 and April 27, 1882.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you want the letters to go on this record?

Mr. COHEN. This witness has referred to them as being of importance. You might put in the two that he has identified.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We do not want any of them.

Mr. COHEN. The two he has referred to I think should go in. One of them is dated January 12, 1882. That I wrote myself. The second one is dated April 27, 1882, and appears to have been written by a clerk in my office.

The first letter is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, January 12, 1882.

Main and others against C. P. R. R. et al.

DEAR SIR: My engagements are such as to compel me to be frequently absent from here, and in the above cause I should be glad to have some one substituted in my place as attorney of record. I am willing to remain as counsel, but I desire to be relieved of the attorney's work. I am pushing the case as fast as possible, but I find the judges grant the other side more time than I am willing to consent to.

Truly, yours,

ALFRED A. COHEN.

L. E. CHITTENDEN, Esq.,
11 Pine Street, New York.

The second letter is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, April 27, 1882.

L. E. CHITTENDEN, Esq.,
New York:

DEAR SIR: In coversation had to-day with Mr. Charles Main regarding the case of Charles Main against the Central Pacific Railroad Company and others, he expressed himself as much averse to the continuance of the suit—said he had verified the complaint because there was no one else here to do so, and now, finding himself antagonistic to Stanford and Crocker, whom he is daily meeting in society, he objects to the further use of his name as plaintiff, and desires to withdraw.

In consequence of this conversation, and to carry out the views expressed in my letter to you of January 12, I have given Mr. Main formal notice that I desire to withdraw as attorney for the plaintiff, and desire him to appoint some one in my stead on or before the 10th of July next, and will, by this mail, send like notice to the other plaintiffs. I have not Mr. Fosdick's address, and send the notice for him to your care. Will you kindly present it to him, and unite with the parties in interest in such action as may be necessary?

The argument on the demurrer is set for to-morrow, and I hope it will be reached. In the case of San Joaquin county against the Central Pacific Railroad Company and others, the defendant's demurrer to the complaint has been sustained on the ground that the plaintiff is not a stockholder in the Central Pacific, and, if it is, the cause of action is barred.

Truly, yours,

ALFRED A. COHEN,
Per W.

Mr. COHEN (addressing the witness). Do you want to put in the rest of these?

The WITNESS. I have no choice about it. It was the letter of April 27, 1882, to which I referred when I said that upon receipt of that letter Mr. Fosdick immediately went to San Francisco and employed other counsel.

Q. Is it your intention to express to the Commission the view that your case was not properly attended to while it was in my charge?—A. I have no views to express to the Commission at all. You stated on the record that you commenced this action as my agent. It is in reply to that that I have made these statements. I do not care about it one way or the other, except to have the truth appear.

Q. Did the interests of your case or of your clients suffer while they were in my charge as attorney?—A. I do not know that I have ever considered that question.

Q. I believe you said something on the subject yesterday, did you not?—A. I said I thought you argued the demurrer after the receipt of this letter with ability. I made that statement from your brief.

Mr. COHEN. I thought from the tenor of your remarks to the Commission that your idea was that your interests had suffered by the correspondence that I had sent to you.

The WITNESS. I can not help what you think about it. I have made the statement just as the facts are, and I do not draw any inference one way or the other.

MR. COHEN DENIES A STATEMENT OF WITNESS.

Mr. COHEN. I want to say to you while you are on the stand that while I do not agree to the statements you have made to the Commission concerning my retainer in the case; still, it is a matter of no importance, except as to one thing that you said I had stated to you, and which I shall deny. That is, that I would postpone the rights of the county of San Joaquin to the rights of your client—in other words, that a settlement should not be made with the county of San Joaquin until a settlement was made with your clients.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The statement was that no one case should be settled without the other, as I understood.

The WITNESS. That was true, and that was the principal consideration on which the case was put into Mr. Cohen's hands.

Mr. COHEN. I propose to take the stand myself to deny that.

The CHAIRMAN. You have been sworn once and your denial is on the record.

Mr. COHEN. Very well. Then I will say that it is not true. At the time when I took charge of this case I had all the business I could very well attend to. I was not bidding for any business, and above all I would not have been guilty of the gross impropriety of bartering off the rights of one client to obtain employment from another. That is all I have to say about that.

SHYLOCK AND ANTONIO.

The WITNESS. If that is all on that point, I wish to say that Mr. Cohen interrogated me yesterday about an argument that I had made, in which he asked me if I had not written some eulogy on the managers of the Central Pacific and compared their treatment by the Government with the treatment of Shylock and Antonio. Upon my denial, he said he had read it within twenty-four hours. I have not seen that argument since it was printed that I remember of. I have it, and shall hand it to the Commission, and hope it may be returned to me. The argument was an answer to an opinion expressed by the Attorney-General that the effect of the original Central Pacific act of 1862 was to make a donation of the subsidy bonds to the railroad company. It was in reply to that argument that I said whatever I did say on that subject. I prefer to be judged by what I said rather than by anything else.

Mr. COHEN. The language that I believe you used at page 45 of your argument is this——

Commissioner ANDERSON (interposing). Is it material to encumber our record with this?

Mr. COHEN. I do not care about it, except that Mr. Chittenden has mentioned it.

MR. CHITTENDEN'S QUOTATION.

The WITNESS. What I stated was accurate, and what he stated was not accurate. Here is what I stated:

> If the range of legal history furnishes another instance of such a "gift," "donation," or act of bounty, it has escaped our notice. The commercial transaction supposed to have taken place on the Rialto, between the Grecian merchant and the Jew, has been sometimes assailed for its inequity and want of adequate consideration. But it was a donation upon better terms than that conferred by "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862.

That is in reply to the Attorney-General's argument that that first act independent of the second, amounted to a gift of these bonds to the company. If that is comparing the action of the Government in its treatment of this people with the case with which my friend is more familiar than I am, I do not understand the force of language.

Mr. COHEN. The brief I read from is headed "Will Congress preserve the national faith in its dealings with the Pacific railroad companies?" It is dated July 17, 1871. That is the brief to which you referred, is it not?

The WITNESS. The title to this argument headed with the inquiry to which Mr. Cohen refers is "Extracts from the debates in Congress on the passage of the acts to secure the construction of a railroad to the Pacific, with some suggestions upon the question whether the United States issued their bonds to the Pacific railway companies to promote and protect the national interests, and upon an adequate consideration; or as an act of bounty. Prepared by L. E. Chittenden, in behalf of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, and presented to the honorable the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of the United States." That is the document.

Mr. COHEN. The brief goes in, as I understand it, so that we may refer to it in argument; or shall I call the attention of the witness to it?

Commissioner LITTLER. Do you propose to argue this matter before this Commission?

Mr. COHEN. One of the counsel of the company will file a written argument, I understand.

Commissioner LITTLER. You can leave your brief with us.

MR. COHEN'S QUOTATIONS.

Mr. COHEN. I only wanted to call attention to the language, to know whether it is the language of the witness. That is all. The parts I want to refer to are very short. On page 35 of your brief appears the following:

The construction of the main line of the Pacific Railroad commenced in 1863. At the time the act of 1864 was passed, about 80 miles of the western or California portion was in running order, and an equal or greater portion of the eastern end had also been built. The issue of bonds had already commenced. As early as January 1, 1864, a payment of interest had been made by the Government. The work progressed with a degree of energy never before displayed in the construction of any public work in the world; but it could not keep pace with the impatience of the people. To meet the public demand for its completion, no cost was spared. The frosts and snows of winter were not permitted to delay it, and the result was that the last rail was laid almost seven years before the time limited by the statute.

That is your language, is it not?

The WITNESS. That is the language of this argument. It is true, unless the statements made by these Central Pacific people on many occasions are untrue.

Mr. COHEN. At page 38 of your brief this occurs:

The act was passed in 1862. At almost every session since it has been in some form before Congress. It has been debated more than any other single subject of legislation. It has been added to, extended, and improved. It has been translated into foreign languages, published and circulated at home and abroad. On the faith of its provisions and the official construction given to them, capitalists——

The WITNESS (interposing). May it please the Commission, I desire to say that I wrote every word of that document.

Mr. COHEN. Will you let me read it?

The WITNESS. I do not wish to be kept here while you read it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Let it be marked.

Mr. COHEN. There are but a few lines more which I will read:

On the faith of its provisions and the official construction given to them, capitalists have been invited and urged to come forward and aid the United States in their greatest national work to supply their greatest national necessity. The invitation has been accepted and more than $100,000,000 contributed to the enterprise. The work has been done. In a national point of view it has met every reasonable expectation. Indian and Mormon wars are no longer probable, scarcely possible. The line of forts across the unsettled territory is abandoned; the standing army is no longer required; the Atlantic and Pacific coasts are united; their inhabitants are no longer strangers, but a homogeneous people, having common interests; the commerce of Asia and the Indies is brought to our markets. All the saving which the most ardent friends of the enterprise ever promised has commenced, and is insured for all the future. The bones of emigrants no longer whiten the plains and point the traveler to the westward trail while they apprise him of its dangers. Detachments of soldiers no longer guard our mails, or are needed to protect the westward flow of the wave of population. The wife and children of the settler are safe from the rifle and the scalping-knife. Men and women, adults and infants, reach our new Territories in safety and comfort. We feast upon the fruits of California. Her mountains divide the attention of the traveler for pleasure with those of New Hampshire and Virginia. These things, which ten years ago were wild fancies, have become substantial realities. All these has the Pacific Railroad accomplished, and is accomplishing, for the nation.

I think that is all I shall read from that.

COMPENSATION RECEIVED FROM CENTRAL PACIFIC BY MR. CHITTENDEN.

Q. You said yesterday that you received from the Central Pacific Railroad Company only about $3,000 or $3,500. Can you say when that was paid to you?—A. I can not.

Q. Have you any recollection of receiving the payment from the Central Pacific Railroad Company on the 19th of April, 1873?—A. I have no distinct recollection of it.

Q. Did you receive it?—A. I received a payment about that time for those services.

Q. Did you receive a payment on the 30th day of July of the same year of $2,237.59?—A. I could not tell whether I did or not from recollection. If I did, it had no connection with these services.

PURPOSE FOR WHICH PAYMENTS WERE MADE.

Q. For what purpose were those payments made to you in 1873?—A. One of them was made in payment for services of which I spoke yesterday, and I can not remember for what any other was made. I was performing services for Mr. Huntington about that time. Some adequate and proper compensation was all the money that was ever paid to me.

Q. Your brief is dated January 17, 1871. How long after its date was it filed by you?

The WITNESS. What brief?

Mr. COHEN. The brief you have just produced here.

The WITNESS. This brief, or argument, or whatever you call it, was prepared for use at the session during the winter of 1871, when an attempt was made (the details of which I can not recall) to pass some act retaining the moneys payable to the Pacific Railroad companies in consequence of the accrued and paid interest on Government bonds. That is a transaction entirely independent of the one referred to yesterday, which occurred in 1873.

A COPY OF BRIEF SENT TO EACH MEMBER OF SENATE AND HOUSE.

Q. When did you use that brief or argument? How long after its date?—A. It was prepared in the city of Washington, and printed and circulated. A copy of it was sent to each member of the House and Senate immediately after its preparation. That part of it I had nothing to do with; but I prepared it in Washington about that time.

Q. When were you paid for your services in making that argument?—A. I can not tell you now. That is seventeen or eighteen years ago. But about that time.

Q. You say the payments made to you in 1873 were not for services connected with that argument?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. What were the services you had rendered for which you received the payment of 1873?—A. I described them here yesterday.

Q. I asked you as to the payment of $2,237.59. Now I ask whether you did not receive a subsequent payment of $6,000?—A. Not to my recollection. I have no recollection of any services for which I received any such payment. If any such money came into my hands it was for some proper purpose.

Q. Did you not receive from the Central Pacific Railroad Company for your services, in various payments, the sum of $10,000, with the addition of some expenses that you had incurred?—A. I am unable to state the aggregate which I have received for all services rendered to the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Whether or not that aggregate amounts to $10,000 from 1869 to 1874, I do not know. The amount I received for the services referred to by Mr. Stanford, and spoken of here yesterday, was not $10,000, but, according to my best recollection, $3,000, possibly $3,500.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Friday, September 30, 1887.

HENRY DAY, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Question. You are an attorney at law and reside in New York?—Answer. Yes.

CONNECTION WITH ATCHISON AND PIKE'S PEAK ROAD; NOW CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC.

Q. Have you had any special connection at any time with a railroad formerly known as the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company, and now known as the Central Branch Union Pacific?—A. I have had connections with them both, as being personally interested in the stock and bonds, and I was also for some years counsel for the company.

Q. During what years were you familiar with the inception and development of that enterprise?—A. I was not connected with it at its inception. I was brought into it by the then counsel, Mr. Effingham H. Nichols, who was for many years the counsel, and probably the first counsel, of the enterprise. He remained so, I should think, up to, perhaps, 1871 or 1872. For four or five years I was also counsel, and perhaps associate counsel with him.

Q. For four or five years preceding 1871?—A. No; succeeding that time.

THE RIGHT GIVEN TO THE HANNIBAL AND SAINT JOSEPH RAILROAD COMPANY.

Q. Have you any knowledge connected with the early history of the road prior to 1871?—A. I only know the manner in which the road was built, and I have some general recollection of the affairs of the company. In the act of 1862 the right to build 100 miles of road west of the Missouri River was given to the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad Company, that company to receive lands and bonds at the same rate that the other Pacific railroads did.

Q. Is the point on the Missouri River defined in the act?—A. No; it is not. The language is as follows:

SECTION 13. The Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad Company of Missouri may extend its roads from Saint Joseph via Atchison, to connect and unite with the roads through Kansas, upon filing its assent to the provisions of this act, upon the same terms and conditions, in all respects, for 100 miles in length next to the Missouri River, as are provided in this act for the construction of the railroad and telegraph line first mentioned, and may for this purpose use any railroad charter which has been or may be granted by the legislature of Kansas: Provided, That if actual surveys shall render it desirable, the said company may construct their road, with the consent of the Kansas legislature, on the most direct and practicable route west from Saint Joseph, Missouri, so as to connect and unite with the road leading from the western boundary of Iowa at any point east of the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, or with the main trunk road at said point, but in no event shall lands or bonds be given to said company, as herein directed, to aid in the construction of their said road for a greater distance than 100 miles. And the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company of Kansas may construct their road from Leavenworth to unite with the road through Kansas.

ASSIGNED TO THE ATCHISON AND PIKE'S PEAK RAILROAD COMPANY.

Q. How did that right pass to the Atchison and Pike's Peak road?—A. They took an assignment of this road under the statute, the Atchison and Pike's Peak road being the road that is organized under the laws of Kansas. There is a road spoken of in the act, and that is the one.

Q. When did construction commence on that road?—A. I am not able to say. I did not go into it until the construction had been commenced some time. When that was I do not know.

Q. Are you able to state how far westward of Atchison the construction had progressed at the time you came in?—A. I am not able to state that. I know the period of time when I came in. There are persons who could state that.

Q. Who could give us the information prior to your acquaintance with it?—A. Mr. Effingham H. Nichols knows all about it.

WITNESS' INTEREST IN LATTER ROAD.

Q. From the time you came into the road in 1871 are you familiar with its construction and business generally?—A. I had nothing to do with the construction, except that I was a member of or had an interest in the construction company that built the road. I bought out a certain interest. I believe it was divided into shares. There was something like thirty-two shares, and this construction company took the lands and took all the property of the railroad for building it.

Q. What was the title of the company?—A. It was organized as the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company, and issued its bonds and stock in that name.

BUILT BY A CONSTRUCTION COMPANY.

Q. Was there any distinction between the title of the construction company and the title of the railroad?—A. Yes. I do not remember what the title of the construction company was.

Q. Who was the president of the construction company?—A. I do not know that. I never paid any attention to this construction company. That is to say, we scarcely ever had any meetings, and simply took reports of the builder employed by the company. A man by the name of Osborne had the contract to build that road, and all I know is that he made reports from time to time as to how much of the road was built and its condition.

MR. OSBORNE THE CONTRACTOR.

Q. Was Mr. Osborne's contract made with you and the other gentlemen forming the construction company, or was it made with the railroad company?—A. It must have been with the railroad company. I do not see how there could be any construction company making a contract except with the railroad company; but I was not a party to these early transactions, so that I cannot state that from personal knowledge.

Q. That which you acquired was an interest in the profits to be made out of the Osborne contract?—A. I bought a thirty-second share of that contract. Mr. Nichols had a contract with Mr. Osborne for building this road, and it was divided up into shares. The parties were obliged to advance money as it was needed for building the road, and what they got was the bonds and stock.

Q. Then Mr. Osborne could only have been the representative of the real interests—the thirty-seconds—so that the profits derived from the Osborne contract really belonged to the holders of those shares?—A. He sold them out. Whether or not he made any profit on the thing I cannot say.

Q. How many of those thirty-seconds did you have?—A. One.

OTHER PARTIES INTERESTED.

Q. Can you give us the names of any others?—A. There were Mr. A. S. Barnes, the publisher here; Mr. R. M. Pomeroy, of Boston, now deceased; Mr. Effingham H. Nichols, of New York, was another; and there were some Boston gentlemen. Subsequently Mr. Oliver Ames came in, though I doubt whether he was in this original syndicate.

Q. The present governor of Massachusetts?—A. Yes. He came in when we had to extend this road. We had to build extensions to it afterwards.

Q. Who managed the affairs of these shareholders in the Osborne contract?—A. Mr. Nichols had almost the entire control. He probably negotiated them all, in connection with me, and, I presume, he knows more about them than any other man.

Q. Have you a copy of the contract?—A. No; I never had it.

Q. Do you know how many miles of construction it covered?—A. Just one hundred.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Was this a narrow-gauge road?—A. No, sir; it was a standard gauge; it was built according to the act.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Was the whole of that 100 miles constructed under that contract?—A. Yes; and then they extended it another 100 miles.

THE FIRST HUNDRED MILES COMPLETED WITHIN THE LIMITATION.

Q. We will come to that extension later on. When was the first 100 miles completed?—A. It was completed within the time required by the act. I am not certain just when that was. It was completed a year before the limitation expired.

Q. The time referred to in what act?—A. The act of 1862.

Q. What other acts of Congress have been passed in relation to the Central Branch?—A. The act of 1864 affected it—affected all the branches, but no act has been passed relating to the Central Branch especially, although there should have been one. There has been a very great wrong done to the Central Branch, if I may digress slightly. The Central Branch was to join in with the road running from Kansas City; it was to go northwest, and to strike into the Union Pacific about the 100th meridian. When they built their road and came down the Smoky Hill road to Denver, that left us entirely in the woods. We were just left in the mud, with a million or two of dollars expended and the road was not worth 10 cents on the dollar. Then, in order to make the road worth anything, we went to work and extended it.

AMOUNT MR. OSBORNE WAS TO RECEIVE.

Q. We will come to that presently. I want first to get at what was in these 100 miles. Under this contract, what was Mr. Osborne to receive?—A. I am giving my recollection, which, I presume, is correct. He was to receive a certain amount of stock—the stock and the bonds of the road—$16,000 a mile of first-mortgage bonds, and I think the lands from the Government as well as the stock of the company. That is my recollection; but the contract is to be had, I presume.

Q. Can you refer us to the contract? Who would have it?—A. I do not know of anybody but Mr. Nichols who would have it. I rather think that he wrote it.

Q. Was not Mr. Osborne also to receive the Government bonds?—A. I suppose; but it is 21 years ago, and I am a little uncertain.

Q. Is it not your recollection that the contract was what was described to us, in reference to some other contracts, as an exhaustive contract?—A. I suppose so. That is what I have said. I suppose that he received everything that the road could receive from the Government, and its first-mortgage bonds and stock. That is my belief.

OWNERS OF OSBORNE CONTRACT SHARES ALSO CENTRAL BRANCH DIRECTORS.

Q. Were any of the owners of shares in the Osborne contract also directors of the Central Branch road itself?—A. I am not so certain about that, but it is my recollection that they were. I am not very sure about it.

Q. Do you know anything about the subscription to the stock itself?—A. I do not; that was before my time.

Q. But the stock was issued, as I understand you, directly from the company to Osborne under the Osborne contract?—A. I suppose so; but I do not like to speak with certainty about a paper that I have not seen for twenty years.

HISTORY OF THE ROAD.

Q. Please give us what information you can as to the operation of the road and the financial results of its operation after the completion of the 100 miles?—A. The road was bankrupt for a great many years. We could not pay any interest on our bonds. We could not earn enough to pay anything on the bonds; and, more than that, I believe it did not pay operating expenses. We spent a great many years in Washington endeavoring to get what we considered our right under the law—the right to extend our road to a connection with the Union Pacific under a provision that, if any of the branch lines which other roads were to undertake should fail to be built by that road within the time specified in the act, then the road that has built its branch may continue it to a junction with the trunk line, and should receive the same amount of bonds and lands. We simply asked Congress to allow a map to be filed by us continuing that route, and we were years and years trying to get that map filed so that we might continue our route. It was once filed, but it was taken off the files by General Grant, and we have never been able to get any connection with the Union Pacific, and never have received any bounty from Congress. Then we had to continue it as an independent road.

WHEN APPLICATIONS TO CONGRESS WERE PRESSED.

Q. During what years were those applications to Congress pressed in Washington?—A. All the time after the Kansas Pacific changed its route. I think they changed its route in 1871.

Q. You can locate it by the time when the Kansas Pacific followed the Smoky Hill route, can you not?—A. As far as I know, we had nothing to do with Congress until that route was changed, and then we were obliged to endeavor to get a bill passed authorizing us to continue or to have our map filed. I was in Washington two or three winters endeavoring to get some bill passed to relieve us, or to refer it to the courts. As the United States cannot be sued we desired to have this question of our rights under the act referred to the courts. We could not even get that. We could not get anything.

WHEN ATTEMPTS TO GET LEGISLATION CEASED.

Q. When did you desist from your attempts to get legislation to assist the road?—A. I should think it was somewhere about 1875 or 1876. I am not able to give the time within a year or two.

Q. When did your interest in the road terminate?—A. I was obliged to sell out my interest to help extend the road. It would take a great deal of money to extend this road so as to make it pay, and I was obliged to sell my interest.

Q. In what year did you cease to have any interest?—A. Oh, I have some interest now. I have some of the bonds.

Q. What did you receive by this thirty-second interest in the contract?—A. That I am not able to say. I had not been over the accounts to see. I ought to have been entitled, according to my computation, to one thirty-second of 1,600 bonds. That would be 50 bonds, I think. Then I ought to be entitled to a certain amount of stock. How much I do not remember.

Q. Your recollection is that you were entitled to one thirty-second part of all the bonds and stock of the company?—A. That is my recollection; yes.

NO INTERVENING PEOPLE.

Q. Were there no deductions by reason of the other parties that were interested—the intermediate parties—in the construction of the road? Were intervening profits made by contractors between yourself and the railroad company?—A. I do not believe that there were any intervening people.

Q. So that your recollection is that each one of the holders of the thirty-second shares was to receive one thirty-second of all the bonds and stock?—A. That is my recollection.

Q. From whom did you obtain your thirty-second?—A. I think I got it from Mr. Osborne direct.

Q. Was it a purchase, or did you receive it by reason of your interest in the company?—A. I paid down $20,000, the first thing.

Q. Bought it from Mr. Osborne for that much money?—A. Yes; that was the inception of it, and then they had to build the road. At the time I bought I gave $20,000 to him for this one thirty-second.

Q. That was to be applied by him to the construction of the road, I presume?—A. No; I think it was to go into his pocket; but I know he was to build the road and furnish all the money.

NATURE OF MR. OSBORNE'S CONTRACT.

Q. But the holders of the shares were to reimburse him, I presume?—A. No. I take the contract to be like this: "I will build this road, iron it, and put on the rolling-stock, and you shall pay me so many bonds and stocks and whatever you receive from the Government."

Q. That was his contract with the railroad company?—A. Yes; that is what I mean.

Q. But after he had sold out to the gentlemen who took the thirty-seconds (and I understood you to say you bought a thirty-second interest in this contract for $20,000) did you not also assume a thirty-second part of the liabilities, if he was, under that contract, to advance the money and build the road?—A. Well, I presume that was so, although I do not remember distinctly the term of the contract.

Q. Have you any papers that would show what amount the purchasers of these interests agreed to pay to Mr. Osborne or what share of the liabilities they agreed to assume for the purpose of constructing this 100 miles of road?—A. I have not any of those papers. I trusted these gentlemen. Mr. Nichols is a friend of mine, and whatever he told me about it I believed.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It is clear that you could not be the owners of the bonds and stocks unless you agreed to do what they were to be issued against.

The WITNESS. We must, of course, have had a responsibility of one thirty-second of the contract to finish it—to furnish the money. We had to pay out money to build the road and we got our pay in this material that I speak of.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF THE COST OF CONSTRUCTION.

Q. The object is to ascertain the cost of construction of that 100 miles of road to Mr. Osborne or his associates—to the real parties in interest; but you have no knowledge of what that cost of construction was.—A. Not the slightest.

Q. Were you familiar with the road itself; did you go over it frequently?—A. I never went over it until four or five years after it was finished; we then went over it to look at some extensions that we had to make.

Q. Have you no idea of the total amount of your contribution to this construction?—A. No; I know I paid the $20,000 down, but as to what I have paid since I have no idea.

Q. At the rate of $20,000 for 32 shares it would be $640,000. Now, is it within your recollection that you have ever paid anything else of moment except that $20,000?—A. I do not remember that I have; but it is a long time ago, and I have had a great many railroad schemes on my hands since that time.

MR. OSBORNE BUILT THE ROAD, THE SHAREHOLDERS SHARING THE LIABILITY.

Q. Is it not your understanding, on reflection, that Mr. Osborne agreed with the purchasers of those interests that he would build the road for $640,000, and to reimburse them that they should have the bonds and stocks?—A. No; I do not think there was any such arrangement as that. The best I can tell you is what I said before, that he was to build the road, furnish a certain amount of rolling-stock, and we shared that liability, as I understand it; we had to furnish the money as it was required.

Q. But you can recall no other expenditure by yourself except the payment of this $20,000?—A. Well, I think I was paying along during all the time, but I cannot say now. I had no book-keeper and it was early in my professional career, and I let the thing slide; I had not anything to show.

Q. If I understand you correctly, this occurred in 1871?—A. No; I was more of an attorney in 1871; but I paid my money from 1866 on to 1871.

Q. You paid your money in 1866 and afterward?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was all paid, I assume, before the road was entirely completed?—A. Yes; I believe so.

OPERATION OF ROAD AFTER COMPLETION.

Q. Please describe a little more fully the operation of this road after completion. You say it did not pay. Describe what its financial history was, as far as you know.—A. It remained eight or ten years without paying anything on stock or bonds. We began to make extensions of it at the rate of 10, 15, or 20 miles at a time, up to some large town, and then we would make another extension up to another town; and each time we made a syndicate to build that extension. When we had extended it to the Republican River the business then began to be better, and every extension we made improved it, and the country began to build up, so that at last we got the road where it began to pay expenses. We had never paid any interest on the bonds, I think, until it was sold out to the Kansas Pacific. That is my recollection.

SALE TO KANSAS PACIFIC.

Q. To what transaction do you refer as being a sale to the Kansas Pacific?—A. This road continued in that infirm condition—not being able to pay anything upon its stock or bonds—for some ten or twelve years, when there was a negotiation between the Kansas Pacific and the Central Branch for selling the stock or the interest and putting the control of this road under the Kansas Pacific, so that the two should be run in connection, one with the other.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge of that negotiation?—A. No.

Q. You only describe it to us as you have heard it described?—A. Yes. I never came in contact with the gentlemen who made the negotiations.

Q. In what year do you locate that transaction?—A. I should have to guess a little widely. It is easy, however, to ascertain it.

TIME OF TRANSACTION.

Q. Is it not a transaction that occurred in 1869, about the same period as the consolidation of the Union Pacific with the Kansas Pacific?—A. I think it was before the consolidation of the Union Pacific with the Kansas Pacific.

Commissioner LITTLER. Mr. Anderson asked you if it was not about that time.

The WITNESS. I should judge it was; but that is a matter that other gentlemen can state exactly. If you examine Governor Ames, who had a good deal to do with it, he can tell you.

Q. Then it was the Ames negotiation to which you referred?—A. That is it.

Q. Then it was part of the consolidation of the Union Pacific with the Kansas Pacific—or took place at the same period?—A. No; I think not.

Q. Mr. Ames has given us the dates.—A. I think one preceded the other by a considerable time.

Q. That is what you refer to by the term "sale" to the Kansas Pacific?—A. Yes; that is what I refer to.

Q. Before the representatives of the Kansas Pacific, or before Mr. Gould acquired any interest in this road, did any gentlemen whom you know gather together most of the interests represented by stock in that company?—A. I think so. I have been so informed—that many of the interests—much of the stock—was bought up.

AFRAID MR. GOULD MIGHT RUIN THE STOCK.

Q. By whom was the stock bought up?—A. I have to speak a little from hearsay. I had no part in it myself. I had sold my stock. I let mine go at a cheap figure, because I was afraid Mr. Gould might run all of it.

Q. I am seeking to identify the thing merely. Who do you understand to be the purchaser who gathered in all this stock?

The WITNESS. Am I to understand that it is proper for me to state what I have merely heard?

Commissioner ANDERSON. For the purpose of identifying the transaction, I think so.

The WITNESS. I have no objection to state, as I believe there is no obligation to the contrary. Mr. Pomeroy, who is now deceased, bought a large interest, I think, and I think Mr. Oliver Ames bought a large interest. Those are the only two gentlemen that I know of who did buy large interests.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That connects directly with what we have from Mr. Ames.

CONDITION OF ROAD.

Q. Just anterior to the purchase of stock by Mr. Ames and Mr. Pomeroy, please describe the condition of this road, including the four or five branches that had been constructed for the purpose of developing its business; and describe also its financial condition, as you understood it, at that time—in 1878 and 1879.—A. This is what I understood from the officers, although I was not an officer or treasurer, and did not run the road: That the extension of this road had benefited it, and that the expectation was that within a year or two it would be able to pay the interest on its bonds, and the officers also stated that they expected to be able to pay some dividend on their stock; that it had made a very great difference in the road—the making of these extensions. That was the common statement, and we were glad to buy bonds on that understanding. I bought quite a number of bonds, thinking that they would improve.

Q. At what figure, about, were the bonds selling about that time?—A. I think about 75, 80, or 90. They kept going up until they got up to par.

ARREARS OF INTEREST FUNDED.

Q. What had become of the arrears of interest on those bonds at that time?—A. Those arrears of interest were funded and a new mortgage given to cover them; so that there is what is called a funded coupon bond with some ten years' interest, and that is outstanding.

Q. Do you know the amount of that bond?—A. Yes; I drew it, I think. It was for $1,800,000, or something like that.

Q. So that the mortgages that existed on that road, at the time of the Pomeroy and Ames transaction, on the first 100 miles, were a first mortgage of the company for $1,600,000, the Government bonds for $1,600,000, and this funded mortgage, representing the arrears of interest, about $1,500,000 or $1,800,000?—A. I think that is the amount of that mortgage. I may have got it a little high.

Q. How much was the capital stock of the company?—A. I really do not know.

Mr. MINK. It was $1,000,000.

The WITNESS. I think that is so.

Q. How long before Messrs. Ames and Pomeroy bought this stock was it that you parted with yours?—A. Just about a year, I should think.

Q. Did you also sell your bonds, or did you retain them?—A. I retained most of my bonds. I have sold some of them.

THE ROAD WAS EARNING NOTHING.

Q. What was this circumstance to which you allude, that induced you to believe that your stock had but little value?—A. Well, there was no circumstance except the fact that the road did not earn anything. The next fact was that the Kansas Pacific (Mr. Gould managed it then) was building a road from Manhattanville, on the Kansas Pacific, up to Clay Center, or some such place, which was the extension of our line; so that our business coming through Kansas along the Republican branch was diverted to the Kansas Pacific, and, as they had a through route to the East, it almost destroyed our business, we having no through route from Atchison, and the road being really valueless. That is to say, if we had not dealt fair with him, or he had not dealt fairly, as I think he did, with us.

Q. The position at the time you sold your stock was, that by reason of the construction of the competing road which you have described, your road had but very little value, as you judged?—A. I was afraid. It had value, but not what it might have.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am speaking of value as tested by its actual earnings at the time.

The WITNESS. Its actual earnings did not pay any interest on its bonds. That is the best I can say.

CONTINUING THE FUNDING PROCESS.

Q. Do you remember what the last year of the funded coupons was?—A. I do not.

Q. Did not this funding process continue up to about the time you sold your stock?—A. Somewhere near that.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the affairs of this company later than the time when you sold your stock?—A. No.

Q. Could you not fix that period a little more definitely, whether it was 1878 or 1879?—A. I could not even fix it then without looking at my books. I should have to go back over the records for years.

Q. Was that stock sold to Mr. Pomeroy or to Mr. Ames?—A. No.

Q. It was sold in the general market?—A. I sold it to a broker in Wall street.

Q. Have you examined the earnings of this company (you being interested as a bondholder) in any way during the years following 1879?—A. I have received reports, as I have asked about it from time to time. I think I have examined the reports.

Q. And have you examined the terms of the lease of the road to the Missouri Pacific by the Union Pacific?—A. I did at the time, I think, but I do not remember the terms now.

ABILITY OF THE COMPANY TO MEET ITS LIABILITIES.

Q. Have you made any examination whatever of the affairs of the company with reference to its ability to meet the accruing interest of the United States bonds, and ultimately to meet its indebtedness?—A. I know that it has been doing very much better during the last few years, and has more than paid the interest on its bonds. That is what I gather from the reports.

Q. When you say the interest on its bonds, you do not include any interest whatever for the United States?—A. No.

Q. To what bonds do you refer?—A. The interest bonds and the funded coupon bonds.

Q. Your recollection is that the financial operation of the company has resulted in something beyond interest on these bonds?—A. I feel very sure of that.

Q. Is Mr. Osborne living?—A. I do not think he is.

Q. Where did he reside?—A. In Kansas: he went from the western part of New York out there, I think, to take his contract; but I believe he came back and died.

Q. Did you ever see his books, showing the cost of construction of this road?—A. No.

Q. Did any committee on behalf of the shareholders examine his books?—A. I think the treasurer looked after that. Mr. Nichols was the treasurer, I think, of the construction company; he certainly was of the road.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Where is Mr. Nichols now?—A. At 20 Nassau street, I think.

THE CENTRAL BRANCH'S LAND GRANT.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Have you any knowledge of the land grant made to this company?—A. I know there was one for 100 miles only.

Q. Do you know what method the railroad company pursued in disposing of the lands?—A. I know it sold the lands as it got opportunity, from time to time, to settlers, but I do not know of any other method of its selling the lands.

Q. Do you know whether these lands, or any large portion of them, were transferred in trust to Mr. Pomeroy and others, on a trust to reimburse holders of certificates of indebtedness?

The WITNESS. What certificates of indebtedness?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Were you not at one time a holder of a certificate of indebtedness from this company to you—a certificate for about $15,000?—A. I do not remember anything about certificates. I know that at one time some lands were conveyed to Mr. Pomeroy, and I think to myself, and I think it likely to Mr. Nichols, for some purpose, I do not now recall what.

MINUTE BOOKS OF THE COMPANY.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We have a condensed copy taken by one of our employés from the minute books of the company, and it may refresh your recollection, the transaction appearing to have occurred in 1874, there being a number of certificates of indebtedness recognized by the company to be due to different parties. I will ask you to cast your eye over the names and see whether they refresh your recollection as to the manner in which the company secured the payment of those amounts.

The WITNESS. Are these the minutes of the Central Branch?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

The WITNESS (after looking over the page). I think there was some such paper as that.

CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.

Q. Does that refresh your memory as to the certificates of indebtedness?—A. It refreshes my recollection that we borrowed money quite largely and the company had nothing to give but some certificates; that they owed this money and they secured it, as I recollect, by the lands given in trust (I think I was one of the trustees) to be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payments of these certificates.

Q. You say you borrowed money. You mean you loaned it to the company?—A. Yes.

Q. Who are the parties to whom these certificates were made?—A. The names are here. This refreshes my memory. I should not have remembered anything about it if you had not shown me this. I think in one or two instances lands were put in my name and the names of one or two others as trustees for some such purpose. This is one of the instances.

Q. Please name some of the parties who were interested in that trust of lands, according to your recollection after examining the paper.—A. I see that I was interested in it.

Q. Your interest appears to have arisen out of your professional relation to the company, as I understand?—A. No; there are $5,000 put down here that I had advanced. They never paid me anything until they sold out to the Union Pacific Company, when my bills were paid. That was the first time I got anything. Then I got $8,000 for my services for about six years. That is all I ever received from the company.

Q. What does this certificate purport to represent, so far as you are concerned?—A. $15,800. It says: "Henry Day, for balance of money due him, $5,000." That was money lent. "For professional services rendered, $8,000." That was for services rendered up to that time. The balance was for professional services to be rendered. I was to take charge then of all the professional business of the company from that time onward, and they made a provision for that.

Mr. COHEN. You spoke of the sinking fund of the Central Pacific Company. I find that the information asked for is appended to the testimony of Mr. E. H. Miller, jr., on the 16th of August. It was a paper that we handed in to you.

DISPOSITION OF LANDS.

Q. Have you any books, papers, or accounts, showing what disposition was made of those lands?—A. I have not any papers, but I have some recollection.

Q. Do you remember how many acres there were?—A. No; I do not. Whatever were left of them were returned—released to the Central Branch Union Pacific after it was transferred.

Q. Do you remember what the terms of your trust were; was it not to reimburse these certificates to which you have referred?—A. Yes; I believe those were all put in. Still those papers are all on file somewhere, or copies of them kept.

Q. What was the aggregate amount of the certificates for which the lands were conveyed to you?—A. I could not tell. There are three pages in that paper you showed me.

Q. Where can you refer us to an account of that trust? You say it must be on file somewhere?—A. Those deeds Mr. Nichols had at one time. I think very likely he has got them yet.

Q. What I refer to particularly is an account showing the lands sold, the proceeds, and the disposition of those proceeds.—A. I never executed a deed myself, I think, to any of the land for anybody, except a release of lands back to the company.

Q. Who were the trustees besides yourself?—A. I think Mr. Pomeroy was one, and I am not sure that there was any other.

Q. Who attended to the business?—A. Mr. Nichols was the attorney. He had a young man with him in his office. There never were any conveyances or leases that I remember. All I recall is that we returned those lands and released them to the company.

Q. All of them?—A. Yes; I think so. I have not any of them. I never received a cent from the company.

Q. Then your recollection is that none of those lands were sold for the purpose of carrying out the trust, so that you had no account to render?—A. I do not think there were. I think they were all returned to the Central Branch. They asked me half a dozen times for deeds, and I gave them.

A CALL FOR A STATEMENT.

Commissioner ANDERSON (addressing Mr. Mink). We find in the minutes of September 16, 1880, that Mr. Pomeroy resigned as trustee of the lands and premises, and presented a statement of what had been done under the trust. Can you furnish us with that?

Mr. MINK. I will do so if I can find the statement.

LANDS USED TO RAISE MONEY.

Q. Were there any other trusts on these lands, with which you were in any way connected?—A. I rather think there is some other deed, but exactly why it was done or how it was done I cannot remember.

Q. Was it intended to secure the indebtedness of the road in some way?—A. That is the way I understand it. We had to turn every way to get money when the Government would not allow us to continue this road, and we used the lands sometimes to raise money, or paid money out ourselves, and took this trust, as I recollect. All these lands have been returned to the road or disposed of and proper returns made to the company.

TRUSTS NOT RECORDED.

Q. Then, as I understand it, your certificate of indebtedness remained entirely due, no part having been paid, up to the time of the transfer of this property to Mr. Gould and to the Union Pacific?—A. I do not say that. I say that I received my fee for services, but I should judge that in some way or other my $5,000 that I had loaned had been paid out of a fund. [After a pause.] Will you allow me?—these matters dawn on me little by little. As I remember it, if I remember aright, these trusts were not recorded, and the company was allowed to sell the lands from time to time and thus make provision for the certificates that are there spoken of. There was some such arrangement as that in some of the papers (whether it is this or not) that the company could sell. I remember, in some instances, the company did sell and we were asked to release and ratify. I remember, in a number of cases, that deeds would come to me, and I was asked to execute and my wife to ratify them.

Q. Then you wish to qualify the statement, as I understood it before, that no deeds had been executed by the trustees so as to show what the actual disposition of the lands was by the company, and the trustees merely gave the deeds at the company's request?—A. It is a great many years ago, and I am doing as well as I can to give you the information.

AN INQUIRY FOR THE BOOKS.

Q. The information I want to get at is, where I can find the books which will show the proceeds of the lands sold and the application of those proceeds?—A. The treasurer, Mr. Nichols, ought to be able to tell you about every cent of the money. As far as I know (and I think I know all the facts) every cent of money in this company went into the treasury, and was disposed of as any corporate money ought to be, to my certain knowledge. I was a director at the time, and I was on committees, and I am perfectly confident that not a cent of this money has ever been diverted to the private interests of any man concerned with it. If all corporations were managed as honestly as that you would not have any Commission.

EFFORTS AT WASHINGTON.

Q. In regard to the proceedings in Washington, were you the representative of the company during the years that they were attempting to get such legislation as you have referred to?—A. I was for about three winters, perhaps four.

Q. Were you the sole representative in Washington?—A. I was, for those winters. Previous to that Mr. Nichols had been for about five or six years in Washington, to spend the winter.

Q. Do you know whether certain resolutions were passed by the company placing in your control certain amounts of the stock of the company, with authority to use it as might be most expedient with reference to Washington business?—A. I do not believe there are any such resolutions. I do not believe the company ever had any stock to dispose of.

Q. After you became connected with it?—A. Yes. I say I think all their stock was out.

WITNESS AUTHORIZED TO GET AID FROM CONGRESS.

Q. What action was taken, if you recall any, by the board of directors in regard to disposing of any securities whatever of the company with reference to bringing about a successful result in Washington?—A. I do not remember of anything except (whether it is on the minutes or not I do not know) the company authorized me, if I could through any influence that I might exert, to get other people to interest themselves in this road. They authorized me to get any aid I could from Congress, and if I would do it, and could do it, there should be allowed me a certain percentage, as I recollect, of what was obtained. I do not know whether that is on the minutes or not, but that is a fact.

Q. Were you authorized, under that resolution, to dispose of any stock or bonds or securities of the company in any way?—A. No; I think not. I am sure not, for we had not any to dispose of. That is one thing that I remember; that if the relief that we were entitled to could be got through they could afford to pay me for the services.

Q. Was the amount that they, under those circumstances, were to pay you sufficiently large to cover the employment of other persons in assisting you?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it intended to cover the assistance of other persons?—A. Yes; it was intended to not only cover the assistance, but to engage other people to assist me in this matter, which I did. I employed three or four gentlemen to go with me to Washington.

Q. Will you please name those persons whom you did employ and who assisted you in this work?—A. I employed Mr. Henry Alexander to go with me to Washington. His pay was entirely contingent. I think he got two or three of his own friends to go on with me.

Q. You mean the gentleman of that name who is a lawyer in New York?—A. Yes.

THE DUTIES OF THOSE WHO URGED AID.

Q. What was the line of duty which these gentlemen discharged?—A. We were expected to advocate this law and to take care of the rights of this company and explain them to these gentlemen who were on committees, and to appear before the committees. I had to appear before the Judiciary Committee, composed of the most distinguished jurists in the Senate. I had to see our own Senators. I had to see the Vice-President of the United States. I had to see Mr. Hewitt, and I had to see a great many Senators and sit down in their rooms and go over the law and endeavor to persuade them that we were entitled to the relief we wanted, viz, the right to continue this road. That was all that was ever done. I might as well finish this now. I spent three winters constantly writing papers, publishing briefs and arguments, and endeavoring at one time to get bills passed for our relief, and at another time to get the matter referred to the Supreme Court; and at another time to get President Grant and the Solicitor-General to file a map of the route which we should take. I saw I suppose twenty different gentlemen, and spent time with every one of them going over the law and printed briefs and arguments. I never spent one cent, except that I paid my hotel bills. I never gave a dinner nor gave any man a cent of money, nor promised him any. I told the gentlemen that went with me that if we succeeded we could afford to pay them. But they never got a cent, and I did not.

Q. These promises were limited to the gentlemen who aided you in your work?—A. I was authorized to expend a certain proportion of the money that I was to have to give to gentlemen. I never extended a promise to anybody but Mr. Alexander.

Q. But you said he had two or three friends whom you took with you?—A. Yes; but he had his talk with them. I never made a promise to any Solicitor-General, Senator, Representative, or anybody else that they were to receive any money or interest or anything.

Commissioner LITTLER. Anything of value?

The WITNESS. Or anything of value. It was the poorest professional service that could be rendered.

NOTHING OF VALUE USED FOR THE PURPOSE OF INFLUENCING VOTES.

Q. Now, I will ask you the question in a still broader way. Was any property, thing of value, stock, or security, or money of this corporation ever promised by any officer of the corporation, within your knowledge, to any member of Congress or to any person directly for the purpose of influencing a vote?—A. Not to any person, directly or indirectly, or in any other way, to my knowledge, neither money nor anything else.

Q. What interest did you have, if any, connected with any of the branch lines which were subsequently consolidated with the Central Branch?—A. There is no other that is consolidated, that I know of. It is not consolidated with any of them.

THE ATCHISON, COLORADO AND PACIFIC.

Q. Or leased?—A. Yes; they are leased. I helped to build all of them. They were little 20-mile stretches, and then they were all consolidated into one, called the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific, about 100 miles long, and that is leased to the Central Branch. I was interested in building all those.

Q. Under what circumstances were those roads constructed—through a construction company?—A. Yes; all of them. We just took the stock and bonds for building the roads, and we furnished the money.

Q. What was the name of that construction company?—A. I think at one time it was the Republican Valley. At another time it had another name. It was not a corporation; it was a simple syndicate of gentlemen who got themselves together and agreed to build these roads and take what they could get out of them.

Q. In each case the contract for building the road provided that all of the bonds and all of the stock should be issued in payment for the construction?—A. Yes.

Q. In no case was there a cash subscription for stock direct?—A. No, sir. In every case I think those securities were turned over and the road was to be turned over with a certain amount of rolling-stock.

THE RAILROAD COMPANY AND CONSTRUCTION COMPANY NOT COMPOSED OF THE SAME PERSONS.

Q. In all those cases were the persons interested in the construction contract the same persons who were interested in the railroad?—A. No. We had a legal decision about that time that those things were not exactly proper, and we were a little careful, I think, not to have the same persons in the construction company that were in the railroad company.

Q. Are you speaking from memory now, or from general impression? Take any one of those companies that you refer to, and state whether the board of directors differed in any way from the persons interested in the building of the road.—A. I feel very confident that they were different gentlemen. I know that I took some pains to see that I was not acting in two capacities.

Q. Have you any memoranda or reports of this case from which you can furnish us with the names of the directors and the names of parties interested in the building contract?—A. I have not any of these papers. Mr. Pomeroy kept them all.

Q. Would Mr. Nichols have them?—A. He was not in all of them. He was a little timid about going into the first two construction companies that were formed, and did not put in any money. But I do not believe he has any papers.

Q. Mr. Pomeroy is dead, I believe?—A. Yes. His papers are in Boston, I suppose.

Q. Do you know who his representative is?—A. He left a son and a daughter, I believe.

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Friday, September 30, 1887.

COLLIS P. HUNTINGTON, being further examined, testified as follows:

By Mr. COHEN:

Question. Did you know Mr. Lucius E. Chittenden?—Answer. Yes.

Q. Was he ever employed by you for any of the companies that you were connected with?—A. He was employed by the Central Pacific Railway Company.

HOUSE BILL NO. 4060 AND THE HOLMAN AMENDMENT.

Q. Do you remember a bill that was introduced in the House of Representatives in the session of Congress of 1873, known as House Bill No. 4060, that accompanied the report of the Wilson committee?—A. I do not remember the date or the number, but there were a great many bills of that kind. In fact there have been so many that it has been pretty lively for everybody.

Q. Do you remember an amendment proposed by Mr. Holman to that bill, which amendment was defeated?—A. No; I do not.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I think the Holman amendment was an amendment proposed to the Edmunds bill, and that the Wilson bill was different. The Wilson bill provided for a committee of investigation.

Mr. COHEN. There was another bill at the same session introduced by Mr. Edmunds. This Holman amendment that I have spoken of was an amendment to the appropriation bill, and it was defeated.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The Holman amendment struck out the right to apply to the Court of Claims, if I remember aright.

Q. Do you remember the amendment of which I am speaking?—A. I do not; I think the House of Representatives has about four thousand bills each session, and more or less of them have to do with the Pacific Railroads; I do not remember the details to which you refer.

EMPLOYMENT OF MR. CHITTENDEN.

Q. Did you employ Mr. Chittenden to defeat that Holman amendment?—A. I do not recollect that he was employed for that purpose. As I remember there were $4,000,000 of our bonds in the United States Treasury, which they were holding by the right of might, and only by that right, and I got Mr. Chittenden to go over to Washington and write a brief, as I remember, and we got the bonds.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Chittenden's services in that behalf were rendered in 1871. I am speaking of the Holman amendment, which was proposed to the bill of 1873.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It was the same occasion when Mr. Huntington was examined as a witness.

Mr. COHEN. Yes.

The WITNESS. I do not remember about it. I should have said that to the best of my recollection Mr. Chittenden did not go over in 1873, but it is possible that he did. A little unpleasantness grew up between myself and Mr. Chittenden. I had forgotten about his going over after that. In fact I do not think he did.

Q. I want to call your attention to the evidence give by Mr. Chittenden yesterday before this Commission. In answer to questions he testified as follows:

QUOTATIONS FROM MR. CHITTENDEN'S TESTIMONY.

Question. Have you a copy of that bill in your copy of the Wilson committee's report?—Answer. I have, I think. It ought to be there (after looking at the book). This says; "copy of the bill," it is House bill No. 4060. It was reported on the 4th of March, 1873.

Q. What was the fate of that bill?—A. I really do not remember, except that I know that it did not pass. Taking my recollection I should say that at that stage in the session it could not pass without a suspension of the rules, and that the vote on the Holman amendment showed very clearly that there was not strength enough in favor of the bill to pass it. The controversy, as I now think, was substantially determined by the fate of the Holman amendment.

Q. That is, the defeat of the amendment striking out the right to bring suits in the Court of Claims?—A. Yes; I remember distinctly that the defeat of the Holman amendment was regarded as a measure of the forces of the different parties, so that after that there was not much apprehension about the passage of the Wilson bill.

Mr. Chittenden further testified:

Question. Now in regard to any members of Congress whose votes it was attempted or desired to secure, do you know of any instance in which any money or thing of value was used for the purpose of influencing their votes?—Answer. In regard to that whole subject I have no knowledge whatever that did not come to me while I was acting as counsel, and whether it strictly falls with in the professional rule or not (and I certainly hope that the gentlemen of the Commission will not suppose that I intend any disrespect to them). I will not answer any questions on that subject unless I am required to do so by an an authority that I am bound to obey. There are other reasons in regard to that investigation. While I did not act for the Central Pacific Railroad Company, I did act for certain gentlemen whose relations to the railroad company and to Mr. Huntington were made the subject of inquiry; and for that reason also I must decline to go into any examination or discussion of that subject.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Do you put your reasons for declining on the ground that you received this information as counsel for the company or for Mr. Huntington?—A. I put it upon the ground that I received it while I was counsel. I do not know that I can go any further than that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It is sufficient to raise the question that you decline to answer the question that has been put to you. That we understand.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I do.

NOTHING PAID TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS TO INFLUENCE VOTES ON HOLMAN AMENDMENT.

The question I put to you is whether, to your knowledge, any money, property, thing of value, promise of any nature or description was ever made to any member of Congress for the purpose of influencing his vote on that Holman amendment?—A. I am quite sure that there never was by me or by any one else at my request.

DIFFERENCE WITH MR. CHITTENDEN AS TO COMPENSATION.

Q. You spoke of having a difference with Mr. Chittenden. Will you explain what that difference was and how it arose?—A. Mr. Chittenden went over to Washington with me, and my recollection is that he had been over once or twice before this time. This was in 1871, as I remember. He came back and handed me a bill for $25,000; or rather I do not know that he handed me a bill, but he said he wanted $25,000.

Mr. COHEN. This matter I am talking about occurred in 1873, when he said he got this information as counsel which he refused to disclose.

The WITNESS. I have no recollection of his going after we got those bonds out of the Treasury. I have not got the data as to when it was.

Q. Will you state the grounds of the disagreement between you?—A. He was there for two or three days, as I remember, and for that service he wanted $25,000; or, rather, I met him in front of Fisk and Hatch's place one day, and asked him how much he was going to charge for going over, and he said $25,000. I smiled, I suppose, and passed on. He spoke to me several times about it along afterwards, and I told him I did not see it. I think about a year or more after that I told him that I would give him $10,000, and he finally took that amount. I think that closed my business with him.

Q. He has been dissatisfied since the payment of that bill, has he?—A. He has looked very much as though he was dissatisfied when I passed him. He has not talked very much about it.

WITNESS WAS EXAMINED BEFORE POLAND COMMITTEE.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. During this winter of 1873 were you examined as a witness before the Wilson committee?—A. I think I never was examined before any committee excepting the one known as the Poland committee.

Q. Were you not examined as a witness in 1873 before some committee?—A. I cannot say as to the date but likely it was in 1873. I do not remember the date, but the committee was what was known as the Poland committee, I am very sure.

Q. Was General Franchot examined at that time?—A. If he was I do not remember it.

Q. I do not mean necessarily the same day, but was he examined in connection with the same investigation?—A. I do not remember. I do not usually stop in Washington more than a day or so at a time. General Franchot remained there all the time when Congress was in session.

Q. Do you remember being present when General Franchot was a witness?—A. I am quite sure I was not.

Q. Do you remember the fact that you were yourself examined?—A. Yes; I was examined before some committee.

Q. Were you examined at some length?—A. Yes; I think so.

Q. Did your examination extend over a day?—A. It was all at one sitting of the committee, I think.

Q. Do you remember whether Mr. Chittenden was there during that examination when you were examined?—A. I should say he was not, but still it is possible that he may have been there.

PROBABLY HAD COUNSEL PRESENT.

Q. Do you remember having counsel present when you were being examined?—A. I probably did have. I almost always ask some one to come in in a case of that kind.

Q. Do you remember what this bill was that the committee reported in regard to the Central Pacific Railroad after having examined you?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Do you not remember that this examination occurred very near the close of the session?—A. No; I do not remember.

Q. Do you remember the fact that in the course of your examination it was developed that the books and the persons who possessed the information that Congress called for were in California, and that there was no time to get them before the close of the session?—A. No; I do not remember anything of it. I should say that there was nothing of the kind. What I was examined most particularly on was with reference to the Credit Mobilier or Union Pacific Contracting Company, as I remember.

Q. Have you ever read your evidence since you were examined?—A. No: I have not. I hardly ever do read my evidence unless it is necessary that I should do so.

EVERYBODY DROPPED IN BILLS ABOUT PACIFIC ROADS.

Q. The report purports to be dated on the 13th of February, 1873. Do you remember the fact that the bill that was reported by the Wilson committee with regard to the Central Pacific road differed from the bill that was reported in regard to the Union Pacific road?—A. No; I do not remember about that. As I say, almost everybody kept dropping in a bill about the Pacific roads, and it would be utterly impossible for me, even if I had done that and nothing else, to have carried all these Washington matters in my mind.

Q. Was there not considerable excitement at the time about the Wilson committee and the Poland committee and their investigations?—A. I should say not.

Q. You do not remember that excitement?—A. I do not remember any excitement; no.

AS TO CREDIT MOBILIER DISCLOSURES.

Q. You do not remember any excitement in regard to the Union Pacific Company and the Credit Mobilier?—A. No; I do not.

Q. You do not remember that the whole United States was very much excited about the alleged disclosures that were then made?—A. No; I do not. I have never seen the whole United States very much excited, except during the war.

Q. Will you look at the bill and see whether you remember it?—A. (After looking at the bill.) I think it is very likely that that bill was introduced. I do not remember it just now.

Q. Do you remember that you were examined in regard to the actual cost of construction of the Central Pacific road and in regard to the contract and finance books?

The WITNESS. In Washington?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

A. No; I do not. I cannot believe that I ever was examined there excepting before the Poland committee.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am speaking of this examination [indicating it], which you can take and read if you desire it, though I do not want to trouble you with it unless you prefer.

The WITNESS. I would rather not read unless you insist upon my doing so.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I will not insist.

COST OF CONSTRUCTION OF CENTRAL PACIFIC.

Q. Do you recall no allusion to the cost of construction of the Central Pacific road itself, and to the facts that could be found or ascertained from the books of the Contract and Finance Company?—A. I have been examined as to that, I think; at least I have been asked about it a great many times; perhaps not by committees; but I know I have been asked about it by other people, and I have told them that we never got any more than the Government agreed to pay.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am speaking of this examination connected with this bill that sought to appoint commissioners for the purpose of getting information from the books of the Central Pacific Company as to the cost of its construction.

The WITNESS. I do not remember any particular examination on that subject in Washington.

Q. You do not remember that you were examined on that subject?—A. I should say not; but the question has been up before standing committees of the House. I remember telling them frequently what we paid for certain things, such as materials to build the Central Pacific road.

Q. Was your memory in regard to the matters that had occurred between 1868, 1869, and 1870 better in 1873 than it is to-day?—A. Well, if I could see just what I did testify to I could tell whether I remember if it was so, and if I did not remember it now I should say that I remembered it better then than I do now.

Q. Do you remember that in February, 1873, you were asked how much stock of the Central Pacific you had received from your interest in the construction of that road?—A. No; I do not. I have been asked that question a number of times somewhere, but I could not tell exactly when. Mr. Hopkins always attended to those matters for me. He was a partner of mine in the hardware and metal trade.

FORMER TESTIMONY OF WITNESS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I will read to you a few questions and answers from that examination, to see if they will recall this matter to your mind. Regarding the land-grant bonds you were first examined. Your testimony is reported as follows:

Question. How many land-grant bonds did you get?—Answer. I can't say. I didn't get many.

Q. About how many?—A. I really couldn't say how many. I got them a few at a time.

Q. Did you get any stock?—A. Yes; I got some stock.

Q. How much?—A. I don't know. Mr. Hopkins keeps a memorandum of that.

Q. Do you not understand about how much stock you had of that company—have you no idea?—A. No, sir.

Q. Can you tell to within a hundred shares how much stock you had?—A. No.

Q. Can you tell within one thousand shares?—A. I do not think I can.

Q. Can you tell within two thousand shares how much stock you had?—A. Yes; I think I can tell within two thousand shares, probably. I should think I had something in the neighborhood of a million dollars of stock.

Do you remember that testimony?

DOES NOT REMEMBER THE TESTIMONY.

The WITNESS. No; I do not; and still that is about as I should have thought it would have run at that time. I did not look after those matters. Since then I have made some inquiries of people out there. Until Mr. Hopkins' death he kept all those things, and I did not know much what I had; but whatever I had was in his control, and I knew when the accounting time came everything would be right. I attended to all our business on this side, and Mr. Hopkins attended to everything in which I had an interest in California.

Q. As matter of fact, what have you testified to before this Commission as being the amount of your share of the Central Pacific stock that you received?—A. I do not remember exactly what I testified to. I do not remember just how much stock I had, but as I remember there were about $51,000,000 of stock, and I have something near a quarter of that amount; not a quarter, but something near a quarter.

Q. About $20,000,000 of stock?—A. Well, I do not think it was over $12,000,000 stock.

Q. About $10,000,000?—A. I should think somewhere along there.

MR. HOPKINS ATTENDED TO EVERYTHING.

Q. At the time of this examination you testified, and the reports also show, that all of the $54,000,000 of stock had been issued. Now, will you please explain how it was possible for you to testify before that committee in 1873 that you had received $1,000,000 of stock when your present testimony is that the shares of stock you received amounted to over $10,000,000?—A. Yes; that is very simple. Those things were done entirely in California. I knew but little of what they were doing there. I attended to the purchasing here, and I hardly ever referred to the details of my personal business there. I knew that Mr. Hopkins would take care of them. Anything I had to do there he would do for me. He used to borrow money for us there as we wanted to borrow, and he used it there. I hardly ever attended to anything on that side. For instance, I was never in the office of the Contract and Finance Company, although I believe it was in the same building as the Central Pacific office. I never asked Mr. Hopkins about anything except to see how much we owed. I kept pretty good track of that. In those days we used to owe so much money that it often made me uneasy.

Q. Is that the only explanation you can give for not knowing whether your ownership in this road was $10,000,000 or one million?—A. Yes; it strikes me that it is satisfactory to myself. If it is not satisfactory to the Commission I am certainly very sorry.

WHEN DIVIDENDS WERE PAID.

Q. How soon after giving that testimony did you receive a dividend on your stock?—A. I do not know. The records will show that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. From the records it appears that the first dividend was paid in September, 1873.

The WITNESS. They probably wrote me about the dividends, but I do not think I had any shares here until much later than that. I doubt if I had any shares here, except a thousand or two thousand shares that belonged to me personally, until after Mr. Hopkins' death.

Q. Would the presence of the shares here prevent you from getting credit for dividends declared in San Francisco?—A. Certainly not, but the money would be naturally used there to pay our debts. Any dividends we received were immediately used. We hardly ever kept much money on hand, but used it to pay our debts and stop interest.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The difficulty in my mind is this: I do not say that you do not satisfy me, but I confess it seems to me extraordinary that at this time in 1873 you were in fact the owner of ten or twelve millions of dollars of this stock, and the testimony given by you was that your ownership was one million dollars.

The WITNESS. I do not know how that was. Very likely this stock was held by the Contract and Finance Company, or if distributed I had not been informed of it. I did not look after the accounts, as I have said. Mr. Hopkins kept our accounts. I was always the outside man in all our business. He took care of the books.

WHO OFFERED TO SELL THE COTTON LETTERS?

Commissioner ANDERSON. In reference to a statement made by you some days since regarding the Colton letters, you stated that those letters had been offered for sale to you by an agent. You did not disclose the name of the agent or person to whom you referred. We would like you to state who it was that offered those letters to you for sale.

The WITNESS. Four different parties came to me at different times and offered those letters. I do not know who they were; I might have known. I did not ask them their names, nor the price they asked for the letters. I have no doubt that they came from the party that controlled the letters. Mrs. Colton can give you the information as to who they were, I have not the least doubt.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mrs. Colton, I understand, denies that any person authorized by her offered the letters for sale.

The WITNESS. I do not care anything about what she says.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I only desire to test the matter.

The WITNESS. I do not care anything about it. Four parties came to me to sell those letters. Whether they could deliver the letters I do not know.

Q. Can you identify the parties in any way?—A. One party said he came from Wells, Fargo & Co. Whether he did or not I do not know or care.

Q. When was that?—A. It was one of the times that I was in California, and he came to the Palace Hotel.

Q. Did he have any other letters with him?—A. I do not know. I did not ask him.

Q. Did he show you any authority to satisfy you that he could deliver the letters?—A. No; I did not ask him, because I did not care whether he had any authority or not. I did not even ask his name. When a man comes to blackmail me I do not ask him any questions as to whether he comes on his own account or for others.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That is very proper, but if you can furnish any clue to the parties who offered to sell these letters, the Commission would like to get it.

The WITNESS. If you will allow me I would like to know of what use the information would be to the Commission if I could tell them the names of the men that offered to sell these letters that were stolen? If it was of any use to the Government, or to this Commission, or anybody else, I might put myself out of the way to find out who it was; but unless the Commission can give me some reason why it will be of some benefit to the Government or themselves or some one of the human race, I do not propose to put myself out to find out who the vendors of these stolen letters were.

EMPLOYMENT OF MR. NORWOOD.

Q. Do you know Mr. Norwood?

The WITNESS. Mr. Norwood, of Georgia?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

A. Yes; I know him.

Q. Have you employed him to render any services in regard to the construction of some portion of the Southern Pacific road, or the extension of it?—A. I did employ Mr. Norwood.

Q. What was that employment, as you remember it?—A. As I remember it, it was to explain to members of Congress about what we were doing.

Q. What who was doing—the Southern Pacific or the Central Pacific?—A. The Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific; what we had done for the country; how we had built railroads through the sage-brush country, and what it was possible to do for that country.

Q. This was in 1878. To shorten this inquiry I will say that Mr. Norwood has testified positively, and has produced a written contract, from which it would appear that the services to be rendered by him were for the Southern Pacific Railroad; whereas, in the monthly statements sent by you to California we find the amount paid him to be charged against the Central Pacific, and it is so entered. What explanation have you to make as to why a retainer to Mr. Norwood for services to be rendered to the Southern Pacific Company should be charged by you to the Central Pacific?—A. Well, it is out of my mind at this time why it was. I have no doubt it was right if it was so charged. Very likely the contract was made with the Southern Pacific when the larger part of his services were to be rendered for the Central Pacific.

Q. Is that the only explanation you can make?—A. I do not think of any other. That is, I do not remember.

Q. May it not have been a mistake?—A. No; I do not think it was any mistake.

Q. You do not think you make mistakes?—A. No; not when I have a live thing right before me.

AS TO FURTHER WITNESSES.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. If the Commission please, I have a peremptory engagement at 4 o'clock. May I inqure whether any witnesses in relation to the Union Pacific matters are expected to be called this afternoon?

Commissioner ANDERSON. We shall examine no witnesses after 4 o'clock to-day. We may have to examine Mr. Effingham Nichols, but that is an exceptional matter.

The CHAIRMAN. I would say that Mr. Middledith informed the Commission at noon to-day that he was unable to prepare his statement in time for the meeting of the Commission to-day, but that he would let us have it probably to-morrow or early next week, submitting it in writing. We will submit a copy to you.

SIDNEY DILLON NOT INTERESTED IN OREGON SHORT LINE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I hope our comptroller may have access to it. I desire to say another thing, and would like it noted on the record. Mr. Reiff stated on yesterday on hearsay evidence that he believed some of the directors of the Union Pacific (pointing particularly to Mr. Sidney Dillon) had been interested in the construction contract of the Oregon Short Line Railway. During the recess to-day I called Mr. Sidney Dillon's attention to that statement. In reply he told me that he understood that he had testified broadly here that he had never been interested in that contract or any other. Whether that statement is on the record or not Mr. Sidney Dillon does not know, but if he finds that it is not on the record, he wishes to put on the record a statement under oath that he was not interested in the construction of that or any other branch line.

The CHAIRMAN. Your remarks have been taken down and will appear on our record.

Commissioner ANDERSON (resuming the examination of Mr. Huntington). I now show you the letter produced before the Commission by Mr. Thomas M. Norwood in his examination of yesterday—a letter written by you to him regarding the services which you desired him to render. The letter is as follows:

MR. HUNTINGTON TO MR. NORWOOD.

OFFICE OF THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA,
No. 9 NASSAU STREET, New York, June 4, 1878.

C. P. Huntington, A. & A.

Hon. T. M. NORWOOD,
Savannah, Ga.:

DEAR SIR: The Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California desire your counsel and professional services, and offer you a salary at the rate of $10,666 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments, the company, however, reserving the right to determine the engagement at any time not less than nine months. Whenever you have to travel on business for the company your traveling expenses, including hotel bills, will be paid monthly on an account of the same being rendered at its office, No. 9 Nassau street, New York.

Please favor me with an answer to above, and oblige,

Yours, very truly,

C. P. HUNTINGTON,
A. & A.

The WITNESS (after reading the letter). I should not have said that we paid him as much per annum as that. That is a pretty high price.

NOT A MISTAKE TO CHARGE THE NORWOOD BILL AGAINST CENTRAL PACIFIC.

Q. The only question is as to the entry of that charge against the Central Pacific Company. I ask you whether that entry may not have been a mistake?—A. No, that was not a mistake. I do not remember the details of it, but I do not make any mistakes of that kind. There was a good reason for its having been done that way. I have no doubt about that.

Q. Do you never make mistakes?—A. Well, rarely ever, with live business on my table. When it passes from me then I forget it.

A CORRECTION AS TO STOCK.

I should say, with regard to that stock, of which you inquired before, that Mr. Cohen tells me that it stood in the name of the Contract and Finance Company at one time. Almost everybody in California knew more about it than I did. When I testified before, I testified to what I believed to be exactly so. Very likely there was a distribution made after that, or, if before, I had not heard of it.

WAS THERE A DISTRIBUTION

Q. Do you remember when the distribution occurred?—A. No. I have not spent more than about ten days in a year in California for, I guess, the last twenty-five years.

Q. Do I understand you to say that the distribution of the $9,000,000 required to make up the $10,000,000 took place after the 13th of February, 1873?—A. I am satisfied that it was not distributed, or if it was that I did not know it, because if I knew I should have said so.

MAY HAVE BEEN OWNER OF ONE-QUARTER OF CONTRACT AND FINANCE COMPANY.

Q. What was the actual difference to your ownership whether the distribution had or had not been made? Were you not an owner of one-quarter of the Contract and Finance Company?—A. I might have been an owner of a quarter of the stock of the Contract and Finance Company, and yet never had any of that stock come into my hands personally, as it might have been sold and the proceeds used in other public improvements; so that what finally came to me as dividends of that company might have been something entirely different from the Central Pacific shares. I know we tried very hard to get people into the Contract and Finance Company, but we could find no one to take the risks.

Mr. COHEN. The stock might never have been distributed, but used to pay the debts of the Contract and Finance Company.

The WITNESS. I am satisfied that we could not have sold the stock for anything like enough to pay the debts on the completion of the Central Pacific Railroad.

Q. Have you concluded your statement as to the stock?—A. Yes; I think so.

Q. Does your statement in regard to the value of the stock, and as to whether you could pay the debts with it or not, refer to the period of the completion of the road in 1869, or the period when you gave this evidence before the committee in 1873?—A. I do not know how soon the stock began to appreciate. I bought Mr. Crocker's stock for 12 cents. He said we should have made it 12½, and I got him to take it back a year or so afterwards at the same price. My impression is that it was as late as 1873 that I got him to take it back. I am quite sure that that price would not have paid the debts of the company.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that you, in 1873, testified before this committee of Congress that you would not sell your stock for 50 cents on the dollar?—A. It is possible that I did; all things are possible to those who wait, and I waited a good while.

Q. And that you also testified that you expected a dividend very shortly on that stock?—A. I do not remember, but I testified according to the light that I then had. There is no question about that.

MR. HUNTINGTON'S TESTIMONY BEFORE WILSON COMMITTEE OFFERED IN EVIDENCE.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I offer in evidence the whole of this record of Mr. Huntington's testimony, taken before the Wilson committee, undertaking to identify it, if necessary, more fully than by the printed report. I hand Mr. Cohen a copy of the printed report.

Mr. COHEN. Of course I have no voice in determining what you shall put on this record.

Commissioner ANDERSON. If you desire further verification of it we will obtain it.

Mr. COHEN. I do not think you ought to put it on the record without giving us an opportunity to examine it. This is the first I have seen of it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Cohen might take the ground that the record is misprinted, and he would be naturally entitled to a further verification of it if he so desired before being committed to it.

Mr. COHEN. Would it not be sufficient to refer to it, instead of putting it in? It is very lengthy.

Commissioner ANDERSON. No; it is only a few pages long.

The WITNESS. The Government has a hundred millions of dollars that it does not know what to do with, and I should think it could print this without trouble.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I only offer it because, from what has been said this afternoon, it may be referred to in further proceedings of the Commission, and therefore you are entitled to know that we may refer to any part of it.

(The testimony of C. P. Huntington before the so-called Wilson committee of the House of Representatives in 1873 will be found at page [illegible] of Report No. 78, Forty-second Congress, third session.)

THE NORWOOD MATTER AGAIN.

Q. To go back to the Norwood matter. Do you remember that those charges were made against the Central Pacific on several occasions—that it was not all done in one sum?—A I do not know. I have not looked at it for some time.

Mr. COHEN. What payment?

Commissioner ANDERSON. The payments to Mr. Norwood. There were several payments for those services in the South.

The WITNESS. I do not remember.

Q. What reason can you suggest for charging the Central Pacific with work done under a contract which, on its face, appears to have concerned the Southern Pacific?—A. I do not know; I have no doubt there was a good reason for it. The Southern Pacific was operated by the Central Pacific for a long time, and of course the Southern Pacific was built in an effort to protect the interests of the Central Pacific against such wild-cat rates as we have had in the last year or two. Every month during that time we lost greatly by the cutting of rates.

Q. Was not the Southern Pacific just as much interested in the work being done in order to get it through as was the Central Pacific?—A. From this standpoint I should say, yes. Just what reasons there were at that time I do not remember now.

Q. Do those reasons apply to all that was done of this character on behalf of the Southern Pacific Company?—A. I should think not.

Commissioner ANDERSON. As your vouchers do not furnish us with the names of the persons employed except in two cases, we are unable to point you to particular individual bills; but I am referring to the employment of agents to fight the Tom Scott scheme, which employment would be naturally in the interest of the Southern Pacific, so that we might infer, when we had bills that were charged to the Central Pacific, that the other bills would also be charged to it.

The WITNESS. I should think not.

Q. How would you make the difference? What would be the point which would decide a different treatment?—A. It is thirteen years ago, and I do not remember the reasons why it was done this way or that, but from its having been done that way I am satisfied it was right. There are many things about this, as there are about other ancient history, on which I would find it difficult to enlighten this Commission.

Q. If we could have the names and the vouchers, we could also be satisfied. Do you recollect whether it was your general rule to charge the Central Pacific the expenses incurred in fighting the battle of the Southern Pacific against Tom Scott?—A. I should say, as I have said two or three times before, in answering the same question, that it was not.

THE STUB CHECK-BOOKS.

Q. Mr. Gates has testified to the course of business, and the manner in which these payments that were made by you for the account of the Central Pacific were made. He has testified that the checks that were drawn on Fisk & Hatch at one time, on Eugene Kelly & Co. at another time, and on the Fourth National Bank at another time, were printed, and that his name was printed in the "order"; that they were signed by you and then indorsed by him under your directions. Can you tell the Commission what has become of the stub check-books from which the checks were removed from 1872 to 1878?—A. I should say they were destroyed. They should have been destroyed. We should drive ourselves out of the building if we kept all such dead matter as that.

Q. Do I understand that they have been destroyed?—A. I think they have.

Q. As I understand the transactions, these books were the property of the Central Pacific corporation, were they not?—A. The stubs of the Central Pacific checks, of course, belonged to that company.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am referring to the checks which you used that were printed to the order of Mr. Gates.

The WITNESS. I have nearly all my checks printed that way; probably six or eight different companies' checks printed in the same way.

Q. I refer to the checks of Fiske & Hatch, of the Fourth National Bank, and of Eugene Kelly & Co., which covered the funds out of which you paid the unexplained vouchers, if you will permit me to so describe them, and which have been charged to the Central Pacific Company. I ask you whether these books and accounts were books and accounts of the Central Pacific corporation?—A. The Central Pacific check-books belonged to the corporation. I should say so.

Q. What I mean is this: You might have done this business by paying money out from your own individual funds. I mean from an individual account in which you would have all your own personal transactions. Then you might have charged the amount, and been reimbursed by the Central Pacific Company out of an account which might be signed officially, as by the Central Pacific Company. I want to know whether the payment of these different items which were entered afterwards in a monthly statement was done by you out of a book which contained only matters of the Central Pacific?—A. I should think most of them were in Central Pacific books, and the account would be charged to the different parties to whom it was proper to charge them.

WHAT HAS BECOME OF THE STUB CHECK-BOOKS?

Q. Then, assuming that these stub check-books were the property of the Central Pacific Company, I again ask you what has become of them?—A. The stubs were of no value, and they would naturally be destroyed.

Q. Were they destroyed by your direction?—A. Yes; they would be destroyed by my direction, I think, under general orders that after so long we would not keep telegraph stubs or other worthless material to cumber our rooms.

Q. I am only referring to stub check-books; no matter about "telegraph." How long do you consider it proper to keep stub check-books?—A. Well, I suppose about four years.

Q. Do I understand you then to swear positively that those books from 1872 to 1880 have been destroyed?—A. I would not swear positively that they have all been destroyed; no.

Q. Where would they be, if not destroyed?—A. I do not myself know where they would be.

Q. Where were they kept during the years they were in use; in your room?—A. When we moved out of the building in Nassau street we destroyed a great deal of stuff, and sent a great deal of truck to California; but I do not think we sent any of those stubs, because they would not have been of any value.

NATURE OF ENTRIES ON STUBS.

Q. What was your practice in regard to the entry made by you in the stub as to what information you would there put down? Did you generally put the date of the check in the stub?—A. I do not think I have made an entry in a check-book for years.

Q. I am talking about the stub entry. Did you fill it up or did Mr. Gates do so?—A. Mr. Gates, I think.

Q. Would he naturally get his instructions from you?—A. Yes; he probably would.

Q. Would he know the date?—A. Yes; if I should want to pay Thomas Jones, I should tell Mr. Gates to pay him. What he would put on the stub I would not know.

Q. Would you be interested to examine the stub to see that they preserved the information of the name of the person to whose order the check was given and the purpose for which the check was drawn?—A. I should think I naturally would.

Q. As to those checks on which money was drawn to pay General Franchot and Mr. Sherrill, do you remember, as matter of fact, whether in those stub-books the names of those persons appeared?—A. I should think they would.

Q. Do you remember whether any information from which the person who was to make the entry in the day-book or to post that item would be contained in those stubs?—A. I think not. I think there would be nothing but the date, the amount, and the name.

ENTRIES UPON BLOTTER.

Q. From 1872 to 1878 did you keep a day-book here of your expenses?—A. We kept a blotter.

Q. Who made those entries in the blotter?—A. The book-keeper; that is, whoever kept the books.

Q. What was his name?—A. I think it was Mr. Gates more generally. I do very little writing myself.

Q. From what memoranda would Mr. Gates make his entries in the blotter—from the entries in your check-book, or from information directly given by you?—A. Not always by me, because I am not always there. I suppose if a bill came in he would enter what it was for and the amount.

Q. But in regard to payments, did he have any source of information, except the stubs of your check-book and the checks themselves when before him?—A. I think he would.

Q. Can you think of any sources of information that he would have except those checks to make the entries of payments in the blotter?—A. Yes; the checks were made from some data or authority, which would be his guide to make the checks, and which would be continuing.

Q. So that the blotter would tell us to whom all those checks were made payable, at any rate?—A. Well, I do not know. A good deal of the money that I used would naturally be entered to me and probably would be so stated, if it was for miscellaneous expenses or legal expenses or anything else. It would probably be so entered.

THE BLOTTER PROBABLY DESTROYED.

Q. Where are those blotters that you used from 1872 to 1880?—A. I do not know, but we would hardly keep blotters so long as that.

Q. These are blotters of the Central Pacific Company, are they not?—A. On their business; yes.

Q. Were those blotters also destroyed by your direction?—A. They should have been.

Q. Would any gentleman that you know of connected with the Central Pacific Company take the responsibility of destroying blotters without instructions from you?—A. I should think not.

Q. Do you say they have been destroyed?—A. I should say so. I have said that when books like old blotters become so old we would want their room.

Q. Can you give this Commission any information as to where it can search for those blotters, so as to ascertain by actual inspection whether they are in existence or not?—A. No; I cannot, to a certainty; but I should say, if there are any such old ones, they would be in my office in the Mills building.

Q. Have you no person who is in charge of old papers or old books?—A. Mr. Gates would probably know. I do not follow old papers. I have been always the outside man, as I have heretofore explained.

Q. Mr. Gates says he does not know, and he thinks it very extraordinary that we should ask him such a question while you are here. Do I understand you to say now that you can give us no light as to where these blotters or stubs or checks or any other written evidence of these transactions can be found?—A. No; I cannot. There is a certain amount of live matter that we have in the office; but when papers get so old as to be of no use I give orders to have them destroyed, so that the room can be occupied by live matters.

LIMIT OF TIME FOR CURRENT ACCOUNTS.

Q. What is your custom as to checks—what is the limit of time that you observe before destroying them?—A. There is a reasonable time for keeping checks, after which they should be destroyed. There is no necessity for keeping a check, I suppose, over four years.

Q. From where did you get your four years' limitation?—A. I think a running account is outlawed in four years. In California it used to be that a book account or current account was outlawed in a year, I think; then they lengthened the time.

Q. Have those checks been destroyed?—A. I should say so; they ought to be.

Q. Did you give instructions for the destruction of those checks?—A. In a general way I told Mr. Gates that we had no necessity for keeping this dead matter occupying room which was otherwise valuable.

SCHEME OF THOMAS A. SCOTT.

By Mr. COHEN:

Q. What would have been the effect on the revenue and earnings of the Central Pacific Company—the aided line—if the proposition of Mr. Thomas A. Scott to obtain a subsidy from the Government to build the Texas Pacific road had been successful?—A. It would have been very injurious to the Central Pacific. It could not have been otherwise.

Q. Was not the Central Pacific, equally with the parties representing the Southern Pacific, interested in preventing the confirmation of Scott's scheme?—A. Most certainly, as was every tax-payer in the United States.

Q. Have you ever devoted any of your time to making an examination of the stubs of checks drawn for the business of the Central Pacific, or any of the other corporations that you represent?—A. I never have.

SPACE CAN BE BETTER UTILIZED THAN IN STORING DEAD MATTER.

Q. Your office is in the Mills building, I believe, is it not?—A. It is.

Q. It is somewhat expensive to get room there, is it not?—A. Yes; very.

Q. You think you can put the space to better use than to store up old papers, blotters, and check-books to satisfy the curiosity of an examining commission every time Congress appoints one?—A. Well, if I had supposed that they were of any earthly use to any one, there is no one that I would rather keep them for than a commission of this kind.

Q. I think we have it in evidence here that your business requires the issue of five or six hundred checks a day. Is that about correct?—A. I do not know. I give orders that no coupon must be paid except ing by check, and the number of the coupons is legion.

Q. How many check-books do you think you use in one year for all the corporations that are under your control?—A. We use a great many thousand checks. I could not say how many.

Q. It would take a large amount of cubic space to store all the stub check-books used in one year, would it not?—A. I think we pay more than 400,000 coupons a year.

COMPENSATION OF MR. CHITTENDEN.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Mr. Chittenden stated yesterday, and he repeated the statement to-day, that for the service rendered by him either to you or to the Central Pacific or the Southern Pacific at Washington he received not to exceed $3,500, and his best recollection was that he received only $3,000 for services rendered in 1873. He further said that if it appeared from the books of the Central Pacific Company that the company had paid $10,000 for those services, somebody had received $6,000 for him on account. Now, do I understand you to state positively that for that service you did pay him $10,000?—A. I am very sure that I did, because it ran along for a year or more.

Q. What sort of a voucher, if any, did you take from him, or have you no recollection?—A. I have no recollection.

Q. Would you have paid him that sum of money without a receipt or voucher of some kind?—A. Well, I should naturally have taken a receipt from Mr. Chittenden. I do not know whether I did or not. As to those Washington matters I used very frequently to take some money in my pocket and pay them to Mr. Franchot.

Q. If the books of the Central Pacific show a payment of $10,000 to Mr. Chittenden instead of $3,000 do you think there must be some sort of voucher on file in California evidencing that payment?—A. If I took it it would be there. We send all those things there.

Q. Are you as sure that you paid him $10,000 as he is that you only paid him $3,000 or $3,500?—A. I am sure I paid him $10,000. It was a thing that was a source of irritation between us for more than a year. I made him the offer and he did not take it at first. I do not think I can be mistaken.

NO MONEY PAID HIM EXCEPT FOR SERVICES RENDERED.

Q. Mr. Chittenden also refused to answer a question of this Commission as to whether he had received at any time money to be applied for corrupt or unlawful purposes. He declined to answer on the ground that he was your counsel, or the counsel of those companies. I will get you to state whether you, as the representative of yourself or of those companies, desire to remove from him the professional restriction that is upon him and let him state what he may know?—A. I certainly know that he never had any instruction for any such purpose. I never paid him any money for any such purpose, and I do not think he is a man that would use his own money for such a pupose. So far as I am concerned, I would be perfectly willing to remove the restriction, but it is a matter for the board of directors.

Q. Did you ever pay him any money for any illegitimate purpose at any time?—A. I never paid him any money at any time, except for his own purposes, I am very sure.

Q. Did he ever disburse any money as your agent at any time whatever?—A. I am quite sure he never did. I am quite sure that General Franchot was the only man that ever did so in Washington while he lived, and afterward Mr. Sherrill.

C. P. HUNTINGTON.

A BILL OF PARTICULARS.

Mr. COHEN. I now submit the bill of particulars of the transportation supplied by order of this Commission by the Central Pacific Railroad Company [handing the paper to the chairman].

The CHAIRMAN. I ask that Mr. Cohen read this bill.

Mr. COHEN. I did not make the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. You made certain statements or insinuations here with reference to the expenditures of this Commission. I demand that you read this bill in detail, item by item. If you do not do so I will ask the secretary to read it.

Mr. COHEN. I do not know what statement I made that is not borne out by the bill rendered.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the bill you have presented, and I ask that you now read it.

Mr. COHEN. That is a bill for transportation as I understand it. It is a copy of a bill sent to me from California. I have no objection to its being read. The only question I have now to ask is whether this closes our connection with the Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. I decline to hear any statement from you or to make any statement to you until this bill has been read.

Mr. COHEN. I am not making any statement, and I decline to hear any statement from you. I merely ask whether there is any further necessity for my presence here.

The CHAIRMAN. Just as soon as the bill for the transportation of the accountants—Mr. Stevens and his assistants—is submitted to the Commission, and as soon as the transportation account of the engineer appointed by the Commission to examine the Central Pacific road and the assistants aiding him are presented and examined by the Commission, so that the Commission may have opportunity of scrutinizing the detailed expenses for transportation, we will pass upon the bill of the Central Pacific Company.

Mr. COHEN. We will render you the other bills when I get the details.

AS TO SEPARATE ITEMS OF EXPENSE.

Commissioner LITTLER. I made a request of the company to have a separate bill made to my own name for the expenses of my wife and child.

Mr. COHEN. I have no means of doing that.

Commissioner LITTLER. I requested of the company that that be done.

Mr. COHEN. I do not think there is anything included in that bill except the Government portion.

Commissioner ANDERSON. A number of the items in this bill consist of charges for fifteen fares; will you explain the reason for that?

Mr. COHEN. I do not know anything about that except that it is a bill that has been sent to Mr. Huntington.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Is it not the custom of the road when a car is used to charge fifteen fares for the use of the car? You know that Mr. Morgan, our engineer, did not have any fifteen persons in his party. [Addressing Mr. Colburn.] You can explain that, can you not?

Mr. COLBURN. There is such a custom. The Pullman Company have a rule to that effect.

Commissioner ANDERSON. These items are probably the result of such a custom.

Mr. COHEN. As I have said, I know nothing at all about that bill, except that I was requested to present it.

Commissioner LITTLER. It will receive attention as soon as the transportation bills are all received.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Does this contain all the charges that you know of, to date, for the transportation?

Mr. COHEN. It is all that has been rendered to me. I do not know anything about it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The items for provisions contained in that bill are the only items you have any knowledge of?

Mr. COHEN. I have no knowledge of anything pertaining to the subject-matter except what I see in that paper.

REMAINING WORK OF COMMISSION.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you anything else to submit?

Mr. COHEN. I have nothing, except to ask what the pleasure of the Commission may be with regard to any further relations between it and the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

The CHAIRMAN. The Commission will hear Mr. Middledith's statement concerning remedies.

Mr. COHEN. Does that concern the Central Pacific?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; we will submit a copy of it to you.

Mr. COHEN. We will submit to you by Thursday next a statement as to how we propose to meet our obligations to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. That will do. We should like to have it next week at the latest.

Mr. COHEN. You shall have it on Thursday next.

The CHAIRMAN. In writing?

Mr. COHEN. In writing. Now, as to any brief or written argument that we may want to present to the Commission, how soon must it be filed with you?

Commissioner LITTLER. It ought to be filed by the 15th of October.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I think we had better say the 10th of October.

Mr. COHEN. We could not get it ready by that time.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We must get right to work on our report.

Mr. COHEN. Our argument will be in print.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We would like to consider it before coming to our conclusion. Send us your argument as early as you can—not later than the 15th of October, if possible.

The CHAIRMAN. There will be no further testimony taken.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Except that of Mr. Effingham B. Nichols.

The CHAIRMAN. The statement of Mr. Middledith will be submitted in writing, and also the propositions of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. COHEN. I think we should hear the proposition of Mr. Middledith before making ours.

The CHAIRMAN. You shall have a copy of it. The public sessions of the Commission now stand adjourned until the further call of the chair.

The Commission then adjourned to meet upon the call of the chair.

---

10 WALL STREET, NEW YORK,
Tuesday, October 4, 1887.

The Commission met. Present, Commissioner Anderson.

JOHN I. BLAIR, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Blairstown, N. J.

A VARIETY OF OCCUPATIONS.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. If you asked me what I was not into, I might answer more readily. I am into so many things that it is pretty hard to tell all of them. I am constructing Western railroads and giving my attention to banking and other business of a private character.

Q. How long have you been interested in the construction of railroads?—A. Since about the year 1845, I should judge; not as a contractor, but in the way of raising the means to construct railroads and letting them out to contractors to be constructed.

CONNECTION WITH SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Q. Did you have any connection with the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad?—A. I did.

Q. During what period; when did it commence and when did it terminate?—A. The company was organized, I believe, in 1864. The commencement of the construction of the road was in June or July, 1866, I believe.

Q. When did whatever relations you had to that road terminate?—A. I think in 1871 or 1872; that is, I was president of the road from 1864, I think, to 1871 or 1872, when I resigned.

Q. Who were the first directors of the road when you were president?—A. My recollection is that Mr. M. K. Jesup, of New York City, was a director; also Mr. Schuchardt, of this city; Mr. Platt Smith, of Dubuque, who was president of the Dubuque road, in Iowa; Mr. Crocker, of Oswego, and myself, of course.

ORGANIZATION OF COMPANY.

Q. Where was the first organization of this company effected?—A. It was an Iowa company. It was organized under the laws of the State of Iowa.

Q. Do you remember that James F. Wilson and A. W. Hubbard were also original directors or incorporators of the company?—A. I think their names were used, but I do not think they took any active part in the matter. I recollect these other gentlemen whose names have been mentioned, because they took a very active part in the road.

Q. Do you remember that two other gentlemen were substituted for those whose names I have given you, one being Mr. Oakes Ames?—A. I think Mr. Oakes Ames was a director at some other time, whether a year afterward or longer I cannot say.

Q. Was Mr. A. W. Johnson, of Maine, a director?—A. I recollect that he was a director at a later period. I recollect these names since you mention them.

SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR STOCK.

Q. What is your recollection as to what was done with regard to subscriptions to the stock?—A. I recollect, in the first instance, that a considerable subscription was signed by some of the directors, but it was virtually, in a measure, all abandoned. They did not respond, and I, as president, advertised to open books at Dubuque for those to subscribe who I supposed would be able to pay, and would pay. I was unwilling, as president, to go on and construct the road without raising the money independently of anything that we expected to obtain from the Government. I opened subscriptions at Dubuque, and I failed to obtain any subscribers, except a very few. I know I subscribed myself to a considerable sum, and I put down Mr. Ames, supposing that he would subscribe for the same.

Q. A thousand shares, was it not?—A. I think probably, yes. He was not there. And I think I probably put down a thousand shares for Mr. Lambard, who was not there. There was Mr. Platt Smith, who was president and a director of the Dubuque road. He put down for himself and put down something for a lot of friends, but they afterward refused to recognize his subscription. So it was struck off, and his subscription was struck off, except $5,000. I took his note for that and carried it for him; but he lost his money.

Q. Do you remember another large subscription by a construction company?—A. After the failure to obtain the subscribers that I had advertised for, it appeared to be a failure. I then issued circulars to, I think, all the stockholders of the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River road (a Nebraska road, running from the Missouri River to Omaha, the money to construct which I had raised), to see what they would do toward constructing the road. I got them to come in from time to time, and there was a large amount of subscriptions obtained from the various parties.

IOWA RAILWAY CONTRACTING COMPANY.

Q. Do you not remember that the Iowa Railway Contracting Company subscribed for ten thousand shares of this stock?—A. I think they did.

Q. At the same time that the other gentlemen subscribed for eleven hundred shares?—A. We got the other gentlemen to take that off their hands. They subscribed in the first place, but we got others to take a large portion of it off their hands.

Q. You yourself were president of this Iowa railway contracting company at this time, were you not—at the time they subscribed for these ten thousand shares?—A. I think I was.

Q. In what year did this subscription occur? Was it just before the construction commenced?—A. Yes; it was some time before the construction commenced, not a very great while, though, I think.

CASH PAID FOR STOCK.

Q. What, if any, cash or money was paid in on account of those subscriptions?—A. Every dollar of the cash was paid in to the extent of $1,791,400, and I think afterward there was a hundred and some odd thousand dollars more. I think Mr. Lambard paid that in. So that I think the whole amount of stock was $1,899,000, and that was paid in in clean cash.

Q. Is it your recollection that these subscriptions were paid to the Sioux City Company itself, directly?—A. That money was, every dollar, paid in in cash.

Q. To whom?—A. $1,791,400 was paid into my hands, I think; at least I collected it, or our treasurer collected it. I think part of it was collected by Mr. Williams, of Boston, and part of it by myself, but that was all paid out on the construction of the road.

Q. Did you not retain possession of it during the time between its payment to you and the time when it was paid out on the construction contract?—A. I do not understand you; but this money was all paid in while the road was under construction, through July, August, September, November, and January. The last 5 per cent. was in January.

Q. Of what year?—A. January, 1867.

Q. And was it all paid out during the same year?—A. Yes; every dollar of it was paid out.

Q. To whose credit was it placed?—A. It was paid to the contractors.

Q. To whose credit was it placed when it was paid to you?—A. What was not paid right to me was paid to the treasurer at Boston, who paid the money on the drafts to the contractors who were constructing the road.

Q. My question is as to the moneys paid to you—to whose credit did they stand after you received them?—A. The money went to the credit of the construction of the road.

Q. In what bank did you keep it?—A. I do not think I kept much of it in any bank, because as we got in the money we spent it right away. It was paid out right at once.

Q. The same day that you received it?—A. Well, not the same day that we received it, I suppose. We received it in July, August, September, and November, as we went along.

METHODS OF PRACTICE REGARDING CHECKS.

Q. Please describe your custom. If you received checks, would you not deposit them in a bank?—A. It was in this way: If the money was paid in Boston, to my treasurer, I knew what was to be drawn out, and I drew a draft on the treasurer at Boston, Mr. Williams. That money would be procured from some bank in Chicago who would advance it for the draft, and that money would be paid over right away to the contractors who were constructing the road.

Q. Where were you, personally, at the time you received these subscriptions?—A. I was generally out there when the money was paid.

Q. Out in what city?—A. Well, you might say at Cedar Rapids, and on the line of the road, generally speaking. Cedar Rapids was the place where we had our office most generally. The money was obtained from some bank in Chicago.

Q. Was it your practice to indorse over the checks you received to the contractors, or did you deposit those checks and draw drafts against them?—A. I always drew the money direct by my own draft.

Q. These checks that you received from the subscribers must have been deposited somewhere in order to pay the drafts that you gave to the contractors.—A. I would give a draft on the treasurer, at Boston, for what money was not paid in to me direct.

Q. But I am speaking of the money that was paid to you direct.—A. In the case of the money that was paid to me direct, of course I drew the bills and paid them out to the contractors. For some things I gave checks or drafts. For instance, if I had a sum of money to pay for ties or any other matters, I would give a draft on the treasurer for that; I would give the person of whom the ties or other property were bought a draft on the treasurer at Boston.

Q. When you speak of a draft on the treasurer, do you mean the treasurer of the Sioux City Company?—A. Yes; the treasurer at Boston, who collected these subscriptions.

Q. What is his name?—A. J. M. S. Williams.

Q. Is he now living?—A. No, sir; he is dead.

Q. Where did he keep his account?—A. In Boston.

BOOK ACCOUNTS.

Q. Do you know where the books are that will show the receipts of these moneys and their expenditures?—A. I do not, at present. I suppose that Mr. Williams had his own books where he kept his accounts.

Q. Did you keep any book account of the remittances you sent to the treasury?—A. I had vouchers of my settlement with the auditing department of every dollar I paid out, to the extent of this $1,791,400, and gave them all up to Mr. Williams, of the auditing committee, every voucher I had, and got their discharge, as I recollect.

Q. From what source do you derive the figures you have given us as to the amount paid in for the stock?—A. I looked at a memorandum that I had at home in my ledger—simply a memorandum that I took the figures from.

Q. Is that a ledger?—A. Only my private book in which I made simply an estimate of the stock that had been paid in. That was a memorandum that I kept; otherwise the books were kept at Cedar Rapids. A good many vouchers that I had taken we had to substitute. We had a fire that burnt up our early records, pretty much, and mostly all the vouchers I had.

ESTIMATED COST OF ROAD.

Q. With whom was the contract made for building this road?—A. In the first instance I undertook to build a road for the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company independently of any contract whatever. That was in June or July, 1866. The engineer, in the mean time, made a report that the cost of constructing the road would be $4,968,120. That was his estimate.

Q. Who was the engineer?—A. Mr. William W. Walker.

Q. Is he living?—A. I think he is.

Q. Can you tell us where he can be found?—A. He was in California the last I heard of him, with some road there.

Q. Was his estimate in writing?—A. Yes; he made a report.

Q. Did you see that report?—A. I did; I recollect seeing it.

Q. Have you a copy of it?—A. I have not.

Q. Please describe what amount of railroad building that estimate covered?—A. It covered all the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad, and it covered the shops and machinery, and the rolling stock, and all those items. I recollect that.

Q. The Sioux City being a railroad from what point to what point?—A. The Sioux City Railroad was from Sioux City to Fremont, Nebr., to a connection there with the Union Pacific Railroad.

CHARACTER OF COUNTRY.

Q. Are you personally acquainted with the country through which this road passes?—A. Yes; I am well acquainted with it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Please describe it.

The WITNESS. The country from Sioux City to the Mississippi River was a very level country. At the time I constructed the road you might say it was almost entirely uninhabited. There was one house at Missouri Valley, I recollect, and there was a house in the woods some 12 or 15 miles from there, and a few Mormons lived at the Little Missouri River, and then there was a few at Omaha, about 40 miles away. Then I think there was nothing until we got up to this side of Sioux City. There was a house or two there. Then there was Sioux City. That was about all the inhabitants there were there.

Q. How many miles did that cover?—A. About 75 miles, I think.

Q. You say that was a level country?—A. Yes.

DIFFICULTIES OF CONSTRUCTION.

Q. Were there any special difficulties of construction over that 75 miles?—A. Yes, sir; there is this difficulty about it—there was nothing there on which the contractors could feed their teams. They had to bring their corn from Cedar Rapids and that part of the country, and their other supplies from other parts. No one can have any idea of the expense of constructing a road at that time, when there were no materials. One thing from which you may judge is that I do not think we had a tie on the line that cost less than $1.25. The saying was, "An acre of land for a tie." I would rather have 300,000 acres of land, a good deal, than 300,000 ties.

MR. WALKER'S ESTIMATE.

Q. Please look at the estimate I show you, which is extracted from the minutes of the company, and see if you recognize it as the estimate to which you refer as being made by Mr. Walker.—A. I well recollect that Mr. Walker's report at that time was $4,968,120. That was for the whole line—101 miles—and the sidings.

Q. Do you recall the paper I show you as being the same estimate that he made—that the figures are the same?—A. I cannot say about that. I only recollect the amount.

THE MISSOURI BRIDGE.

Q. Do you remember that it included $1,000,000 for the Missouri bridge?—A. I think there was something for the Missouri bridge calculated on.

Q. One million one hundred and thirty thousand dollars?—A. Very likely. I recollect the whole amount of his estimate very well.

Q. How soon after this estimate was made was any contract made?—A. I commenced the road for the company in June or July, and the contract was made afterward. I think it was in November.

Q. In what year?—A. I think it was in September, 1867; the main contract was made in 1867, I think.

CONTRACT WITH DOUGLAS & BROWN.

Q. What contracts were there before the principal contract?—A. There were no contracts before that, I think. I had some portion of the grading let before the contract was made.

Q. To Douglas & Brown?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember at what rate per mile?—A. I do not now recollect what the rate per mile was. I recollect that it was changed. There was a rate per mile at which it was let out. There came a tremendous freshet during the summer, and we found that the grade was not high enough, because the water overflowed the grade we had laid down.

Q. Was not the rate with Douglas & Brown about $3,000 a mile?—A. I think that was something like the first contract. I think there was a raise afterward; that some addition was given. I know it was altered—at any rate, that is my recollection now—because we raised the grade considerably from the original contract.

Q. How much work did Douglas & Brown do?—A. I think they did the main grading.

Q. Do you mean for the whole road, or part of the road?—A. Well, I think they did the main grading for that road. I am not certain whether another Mr. Brown did a portion of it. I can not say at present, it is so long ago.

Q. Was any other part of the work let out by you before this contract of September, 1867?—A. Oh, yes; some of the work was let out before Mr. Ames and the others took the contract.

Q. To whom?—A. I think it was to Douglas & Brown. I am not certain whether they did the first work or not. I am not positive now about it, but my impression is that they were the men. I am not certain but that there was another Mr. Brown who had taken part. Whether the contract was merged in his or not I will not say now.

Q. What work did they do besides the grading?—A. I think that is all they did. That is my recollection of it now—that they did the grading, and nothing else.

Q. They did not lay the ties, then?—A. Oh, no; nor the track, nor did they build depot houses, stations, round-houses, nor anything of that kind.

Q. What they did, then, was, substantially, to grade the road?—A. Simply to grade the road.

Q. Do you know what payments were made to them for the work which they did?—A. I recollect that they were all cash payments that were made to them.

Q. Do you remember what the payments amounted to?—A. I do not now remember.

THE ACCOUNT BOOKS.

Q. Who kept those books?—A. They were kept at Cedar Rapids. The estimates were made out monthly.

Q. Who kept them?—A. The books were kept there, I think, by Mr. Walker, or some clerks that we had there at that time.

Q. Have you ever seen those books since the period when they were kept?—A. No; I have no recollection of seeing them after the settlement was made by the committee. Probably that might have been in 1870 or 1871. The vouchers—such vouchers as we had—were produced. The books were burned up. I do not know whether we had the books or not at that time.

APPROXIMATE COST OF REGULATING ROAD.

Q. Have you any recollection of the approximate cost or amount of money paid to Douglas & Brown for the work of regulating the road?—A. I have not now.

Q. Have you any recollection of the approximate cost per mile that was contracted or agreed to be paid?—A. It appears to me, since you speak of the $3,000 per mile, that that was on this side of the river; whether that included the extras that I gave them afterward I do not remember. I know I raised the contract considerably from what it was to be. The original contract, I think, was 35 cents a yard.

Q. That is, for excavation?—A. Excavation; yes, sir. The work over the river was very heavy. That was another contract, afterward. It was very heavy work over the river to Fremont.

Q. How many miles were there of this work over the river?—A. If I remember aright, it was about 26 miles.

EXTENT OF ROAD EMBRACED IN FIRST CONTRACT.

Q. What points are embraced; from Missouri Junction to Fremont?—A. No; it included to California Junction. The first contract, I think, was really only from California Junction, 70 miles, to Sioux City. The other was let afterward, I think; and there were 25 or 26 miles of road on the other side of the river that was very heavy work.

Q. Do I understand that when the contract of 1867 was made the grading and regulating had been substantially completed?—A. No; there had been something done on it, but there was nothing done on the other part. It was only 65 or 70 miles that was let at that time.

Q. That left about 30 miles to be graded?—A. That was not let yet. That was let the next year.

Q. At the time this contract of 1867 was made, can you tell how much money had been paid in on the stock at that time?—A. There must have been about $250,000 paid about that time.

Q. And all that money which you have described as received was paid out on this contract?—A. Every dollar of it, on the various contracts; not on that alone, but on the various contracts.

Q. Had any other funds been received up to that time by the company from any other source?—A. No, sir. I think I had to borrow a good deal of money besides.

Q. Can you give us any information as to how much money you had borrowed at that time?—A. I do not know that I can. I know that about December or January I borrowed—I do not recollect the amount of money borrowed.

Q. December or January of what year?—A. That same fall.

Q. You mean after you made your contract?—A. Yes.

Q. But I am speaking of the time before you made your contract. What I want to get at is this: Were those contracts with Douglas & Brown substantially all paid and out of the way at the time the contract of 1867 was entered into?—A. Oh, no; not at all. When the contract of 1867 was entered into with the contracting parties they assumed all the contracts that had been made by Douglas & Brown, and they assumed that contract.

Q. Still, that does not answer the question. Had the work done up to that time been paid for?—A. Yes; I think it had been. There was only some grading that had been done up to that time, I think.

THE CONTRACT OF 1867.

Q. With whom was this contract of 1867 made?—A. It was made with Mr. Oakes Ames and Mr. D. C. Blair.

Q. DeWitt C. Blair?—A. Yes.

Q. Was Mr. Oakes Ames a director of the Sioux City Company at that time?—A. I cannot say whether he was or not at that time. I suppose the books will show. There were returns made, I know, to the Government.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We have those here.

The WITNESS. Those would show.

Q. Was Mr. DeWitt C. Blair a relation of yours?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What relation was he to you?—A. My son.

STOCKHOLDERS INTERESTED IN THE CONTRACT.

Q. Did these two gentlemen take this contract in their own personal interest solely?—A. No; they took it for the benefit of all the stockholders.

Q. Please name the gentlemen for whose benefit they took it.—A. It was to be for the benefit of all the persons who subscribed to the stock. I think the stockholders were some sixty or eighty persons.

Q. Did these gentlemen subsequently make a distribution of all the assets received by them under this contract?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you the particulars of that distribution, so that you can inform us who received the avails of the contract?—A. Every stockholder that had paid in one single dollar got his proportion of the assets of the company—every dollar.

Q. But I want to know the names of the persons?—A. I cannot name them. I know there were sixty or seventy stockholders. That is my recollection of it. I cannot tell you the names. There were a great many Eastern people. There was a number of stockholders here and a great many of them in Boston.

Q. Please name those who received a large portion, or any of the principal stockholders whose names you recall.—A. Mr. Ames was a very considerable stockholder, and I was a considerable stockholder myself.

DISTRIBUTION OF STOCK.

Q. What was the total capital stock?—A. The total capital stock that was paid in was $1,899,000, I believe, and I had $1,791,000; but some paid in Boston afterwards. The stock issued was $1,899,000. There was no stock issued except such stock as was paid for.

Q. What proportion of this distribution did you receive?—A. I cannot say now exactly what it was, but I think I owned about an eighth of the concern—a sixth or an eighth portion.

Q. About a sixth or an eighth?—A. About, probably, one-fifth or one-sixth; I will not say exactly; I know I was a large stockholder.

Q. What proportion did Mr. Oakes Ames receive?—A. He was about equal with me.

Q. Can you not name some of the other gentlemen who received proportions as large as yours?—A. Mr. Lambard was a large stockholder.

Q. Give his full name.—A. Charles A. Lambard.

Q. He is dead, I believe?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember any others?—A. There was a firm by the name of Glidden & Williams, and John B. Alley. I think Mr. Alley was considerable of a stockholder. Mr. William E. Dodge, I think, was a stockholder.

THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Q. Which of the gentlemen whom you have named, and who participated in this distribution, were directors of the Sioux City Company in September, 1867, when the contract was made?

The WITNESS. Do you mean to ask me who participated in it?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Which of those who participated in the distribution were directors of the Sioux City Company when the contract was made?—A. All the stockholders, the whole lot of them, had an equal interest in proportion to what they signed for.

Q. But that is not what I asked you. I asked you which of those stockholders who received a share were directors of the Sioux City Company and voted for the contract.—A. I cannot say that; I can only say that it was unanimous, so far as the contract was concerned, with not only the directors but with all the stockholders, because they were all consulted about the matter.

Q. You were a director yourself?—A. Yes; I was president at the time.

Q. Was Mr. Oakes Ames a director?—A. I am not certain whether he was at that time. He was at some time a director. The minutes would show. I have forgotten about it now. He was not an original director.

Q. Did he remain a director after he once became a director?—A. My impression is that he did.

Q. Do the minutes give the date of his election?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Did William B. Allison share in the distribution?—A. I know that Mr. William B. Allison was a subscriber to the extent of $5,000; that was all. I think he took no active part in the matter. He lived at Dubuque, and I know that I insisted very urgently that he should take some stock in the road, because it would benefit Dubuque, but he took no action about it, except that he was a stockholder to the extent of $5,000.

Q. Was he a director?—A. I think Mr. Allison was a director in the original organization.

Q. Did he not act as vice-president of the company?—A. I cannot say that at present. I think, in the organization of the company, my name was used. I can not recollect about that. Afterward I took but very little interest in the matter, as I recollect. I recollect that I was appointed president of the road when I was not here at all. Probably Mr. Allison or some one of them acted as vice-president or other officer before I was elected.

Q. It appears from the minutes that he was vice-president in August, 1868, and I want to ask you whether your memory agrees with the minutes?—A. Well, he very likely was. Whatever the minutes say is, no doubt, true; but he took no active part. I recollect that very well.

Q. Mr. Walker, the engineer, was he a director of the road?—A. He might have been afterward, but I do not recollect whether he was or not.

Q. Did he receive any portion of this distribution?—A. No; nothing at all, except that if he subscribed for some stock he got his proportion; that is all.

Q. I am asking you whether he was a stockholder?—A. I am inclined to think that he did own a little stock, but I am not certain about that.

Q. Do you remember that Perry H. Smith was a director?—A. I recollect him very well; he lived in Chicago; he was a very wealthy man. It is likely that he became a director and came in afterward. There were a good many changes. A good many men went out.

Q. Do you remember Joseph H. Scranton?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he a director?—A. I cannot say; probably he was. He was a director in other companies that we had out West.

Q. Was he a stockholder?—A. Yes; I think he was. I think he had some stock. He was in the Cedar Rapids road. Almost all those men were solicited to take stock in this road, and I suppose Mr. Scranton took some. These men were all solicited to come in and do something toward the road, because outsiders had refused to do anything.

Q. Was De Witt C. Blair a director in the road?—A. I think he was at one time; still I am not positive about that. I suppose the minutes at Washington would show all that.

Q. Do you remember William T. Glidden?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he a director?—A. I am inclined to think he was, latterly.

Q. I mean when the contract was voted?—A. I cannot say about whether he was then or not. He undoubtedly was a stockholder.

Q. Was F. Nickerson a director when the contract was voted?—A. I cannot say that. The minutes would show. At the moment it is hard for me to recollect, there were so many changes from time to time, some of the men being dead.

HOW THE CONTRACT WAS CARRIED OUT.

Q. After this contract of September, 1867, was made between De Witt C. Blair and Oakes Ames, on the one part, and the Sioux City Company, on the other, how was the business of this construction conducted; was there a committee appointed?—A. My recollection is that after they took the contract the matter was turned over to me to carry out the contract for them—to see the money expended.

Q. That is, to employ the engineers and men to build the road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to receive the money and pay the contractors?—A. Yes; the whole thing was, I think, put in my hands to carry out—to construct the entire road and carry the whole thing out.

Q. With whom did you make a contract?—A. I think that the contract with Mr. Ames and Mr. D. C. Blair was rather a vote of the company.

Q. With whom did you make a contract to build the road?—A. There were different parties. Douglas & Brown to do the grading. The ties were supplied by another person, and the bridges by another person.

PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES.

Q. Give us the names of those persons as well as you can. From whom did you buy your iron?—A. Of the Johnstown Company, and of an Ohio company, of the Delaware and Lackawanna Coal Company, and I bought iron, I think, of the Reading Iron Company, and some, I think, of a Boston company. I think it was a difficult matter to get the iron from one company at the time, because they were needing so much iron all around.

Q. From whom did you buy the ties?—A. From various parties. I bought some, I think, in Chicago, some on the Missouri River, and some on the Mississippi. I might have got a few ties over in the Missouri Valley, along the Missouri River, but there was nothing there but cottonwood. I think my ties were pretty much all brought from Chicago or the Mississippi River.

Q. From whom did you purchase fish-plates and fastenings?—A. I think I bought them principally at Pittsburgh. I bought some also of the manufacturers at Chicago.

You may recollect, when you come to talk about building roads, that at that date fish-plates were at 6¾ and 6 7/10 cents per pound, and I have bought them since at 1½. Nails were 5¾ and 6 cents a pound, and since that they have come to be about 2 cents or 2 1/10. Iron was $80 and $85 to $100 a ton, at the works, where you could get it, besides the freight. Imagine ties at $1.25. You have no idea of the expense of things in those days.

SUB-CONTRACTS.

Q. With whom did you contract to do your excavating?—A. That was with Douglas & Brown, I think, chiefly. I think they had the main contract for excavating. They were very large contractors, and they had in their employ a very large force of men.

Q. With whom did you contract to do your blasting?

The WITNESS. Rock work?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

A. I suppose they did that. I do not think there was much rock work to do. There was not much rock work to do on the Iowa side. There were some to do, I believe, on the other side.

Q. What bridges did you have to build?—A. We had to build quite a number of them. We had to build a bridge across the river Sioux and across the Ford River. There was quite a number of bridges, but those were important bridges.

Q. How did you cross the Missouri?—A. We had two large steamers there, one of which, I think, would take over eight cars at a time.

Q. I understand that you conducted all this business yourself?—A. I did, sir. I believe there was nothing that I did not buy or contract for.

WHO KEPT THE BOOKS?

Q. Who kept your books at that time?—A. I had receipts and vouchers for everything. What was paid out at Cedar Rapids Mr. Walker kept the accounts of there.

Q. My question is, who kept the set of books—the journal and ledger account which was kept by you, between you and the contractors and the sellers of material whom you have enumerated above?—A. The money was paid out on vouchers, over at Cedar Rapids.

Q. But who kept the books?—A. Mr. Walker must have kept those books. He kept books there for what he paid out, he and his clerks.

Q. Am I to understand that those were your personal books?—A. No; I cannot say that they were my personal books, because I handed the money over to him, and whatever money I handed over to him he was charged with, and he had to account for it. That was all there was of it. He had to see that he was credited.

Q. They were the books of D. W. Blair and Oakes Ames, then, who had undertaken the construction?—A. Well, they were the contractors, but, really, I was substituted in their place to carry it out, and I was accountable for all the moneys that came into my hands. Mr. Walker had to show the committees that were appointed what he had done with the money that was paid over to him. I had receipts and vouchers for all the money that I received and paid. I paid for all the iron and materials of every kind and had them shipped and sent on.

Q. My inquiry is, in what books were kept the accounts, for instance, between John I. Blair, trustee, and the Reading Iron Company for iron sold by the company and bought by you in order to lay it on this road, in what books would that ledger account be found?—A. I cannot say what books that would be found in. The book that I had—the memorandum that I had—was a memorandum of the different purchases that I paid for, and for all these purchases I had the bills to show that I paid. The committee appointed to settle with me required my vouchers for every single dollar that I had paid out and every single dollar that I had received. They allowed me for nothing except on the vouchers that I produced. Those vouchers were all delivered up to the committee that made the settlement. Mr. Williams, I think, was the committee, and everything in the way of vouchers and everything I had was delivered up to him. I recollect that I took his discharge.

"A PIECE OF PAPER WOULD KEEP ALL THE ACCOUNTS."

Q. But this business must have been conducted by a set of books. When you ordered iron from these different parties you have named, and ordered fish-plates and ties, there must have been entries in the day book, and subsequently these entries must have been posted into the ledgers in order to enable you to know how much you would have to pay.—A. The construction of a railroad involves accounts that are very different, perhaps, from those used in other kinds of business. Probably a piece of paper would keep all the accounts I wanted to keep. If I bought a thousand tons of rails from a company that would be one bill and receipt. That might be put in an envelope. All those vouchers would be produced when the bill came to be looked for.

Q. I am not talking about vouchers, but about books.—A. So far as I am concerned that is the only kind of books I ever kept. Mr. Walker kept books at Cedar Rapids for the moneys that he had paid out. I know very well he had them, because he accounted for all the money he paid out.

Q. Where are Mr. Walker's books?—A. I supposed they were at Cedar Rapids, if they were not burned about 1869. I will not say about that. We had a fire there that burned up a good deal.

ACTUAL COST OF CONSTRUCTION.

Q. Have you any memorandum now in your possession showing the amount of money not only paid by you personally, but incurred by you as trustee of this contract, and which will inform us as to what was the actual cost of constructing that railroad?—A. The actual cost of constructing the railroad, the division among the stockholders, was $4,640,720. That is according to the figures I have.

Q. Why do you call it the division among the stockholders?—A. That was the actual cost. The stockholders had nothing divided except stock. The money for the Government bonds was expended in the construction of the road. The money paid in by the stockholders was expended, every dollar of it, in the construction of the road. The bonds that we had were estimated at 75 cents on the dollar.

Q. Are you not stating now the amount paid by the company to Mr. DeWitt C. Blair and Mr. Oakes Ames?—A. Mr. DeWitt C. Blair and Mr. Oakes Ames did not get a solitary dollar, only for the actual money that they paid for the stock; that is all.

Q. When you state the figures, $4,640,720, was not that the amount paid by the company to Messrs. Blair and Ames reckoned in bonds and in money as the payment was made?—A. That was the cost of the road. Mr. Oakes Ames did not get that at all; he got nothing at all; all he had to show for his money was really his stock.

DIVISION OF STOCK.

Q. I understand that he divided it; but I ask whether the fact was not as I have stated it?—A. I divided it. I did not give it to Mr. Ames. I gave the stock out myself.

Q. I ask whether the figure you have given represents the number of dollars you paid to the Reading Company and other companies for iron, or whether it represents the amount of money paid by the company to De Witt C. Blair and Oakes Ames, or to you as representing them, and divided up by you among the stockholders; which is it?—A. The Government bonds were sold for cash, and that went into the road, and so did this other money paid. Every dollar of this went into the road, and the only thing that Oakes Ames or any other stockholder had to show was simply the stock he had, and nothing else. That is all there is about it.

Q. We will come down to this division. You say there was a division made among the stockholders. When was this division made?

The WITNESS. The division of stock?

Commissioner ANDERSON. No; when was the division made?

The WITNESS. When I issued the stock to them?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

A. I guess it must have been in 1870 or 1871; along there. I will not say what time.

Q. Have you any written record of that division?—A. I think I have some memorandum of it at home, by which I could tell. I think it must have been about 1871, the time that I gave out the stock.

Q. Who gave out the stock?—A. I gave out the stock.

Q. Personally?—A. Yes; as president of the road. I gave every man stock in proportion to the money he paid.

THE STOCK-BOOK.

Q. This stock must have been taken out of a stock-book, a book containing the certificates?—A. Yes; I had a stock-book, I know.

Q. That stock-book must have had stubs?—A. Yes. If I had known you would call for me I might have told you the name of every stockholder, and what his stock was.

Q. Where is the stub of the stock-book?—A. I suppose it is at Cedar Rapids, if anywhere.

Q. Have you had it within the last year?—A. Oh, no; I have not had it—I was going to say for twenty years—since the year 1871, at the time I issued the stock and settled up with the company. I have no recollection of seeing anything of it after that. Everything was settled and paid for.

Q. This memorandum you speak of, which will show the persons who received stock and what they received—was it written by you? Is it in your handwriting?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. From what source was it taken?—A. I think it was taken from a memorandum that was made up by a clerk that I had. I think I have a rough memorandum of the stockholders with me at my place at Allentown.

Q. What is the name of the clerk to whom you refer?—A. Charles E. Vail.

Q. Is he living?—A. No, sir; he is dead.

Q. Was this distribution made by you in New York here or out West?—A. I think the figuring and distribution I made at Cedar Rapids. I might have done some of it at Blairstown, but I think it was at Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Q. What was, in fact, distributed?—A. Just the stock. We had nothing else to distribute.

STATEMENT FOR STOCKHOLDERS AS TO BONDS.

Q. Was there a statement made up for the stockholders?—A. I think there was.

Q. Have you your copy?—A. I have not.

Q. Can you refer me to any place where a copy of that statement could be obtained?—A. I could only give you the figures. I think I could give you the figures of what I got myself.

Q. The statement would naturally contain an explanation of what had been done with the Government bonds and the first mortgage bonds?—A. The Government bonds were all sold for money, and when I come to speak about distribution, we distributed the second bonds to those of the stockholders who would take them at 75 cents on the dollar. The stockholders got that with their stock. I would call the Government bonds the first-mortgage.

Q. Which bonds do you mean were given to the stockholders?—A. Not the Government bonds, but the bonds that we got.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Your own bonds?

The WITNESS. Yes; our own bonds. They were valued at 75 cents on the dollar.

Q. How much was the aggregate amount of bonds distributed to the stockholders?—A. One million two hundred and twenty-one thousand dollars I think the bonds were.

Q. The whole issue of bonds was distributed with the stock?—A. Yes; rated at 75 cents on the dollar.

Q. Each stockholder getting his pro rata of the bonds?—A. Yes; each got his pro rata; and if there was any fraction, he either paid it or received it, as the case might be.

Q. Did the company receive anything whatever from the stockholders for this distribution at that time?—A. The company had the road.

Q. But did it get any money from the stockholders for the bonds?—A. It certainly did.

Q. When?—A. Previous to the distribution.

Q. I understand that previous to the distribution you say they paid in the subscription for their stock?—A. Yes; the subscription for their stock, and they had to pay for the bonds, too.

HOW THE BONDS WERE PAID FOR.

Q. When did they pay for their bonds?—A. They had to pay for them about the same time. They had to pay the money, you know.

Q. Do you mean to say that when you got your stock and bonds that were rated at 75 cents on the dollar you personally paid 75 cents on the dollar on the bonds that were given to you?—A. That is what I considered that I paid for them.

Q. Well, did you pay it?—A. Yes.

Q. How many bonds did you get?—A. I will not say now. I got my pro rata, whatever that was.

Q. Approximate the amount. Out of $1,600,000 you say your share was about one-sixth. Did you get as much as $200,000 in bonds?—A. I suppose I did, probably. I must have had something like that.

Q. When were those bonds delivered to you—in 1871?—A. I think that was the time the distribution was made.

Q. What month?—A. I cannot tell the month now.

Q. Do you state that at the time you received your bonds you paid to the Sioux City Company for those bonds 75 cents on the dollar for them?—A. We had paid previous to that.

Q. I ask you now if you say that when you got your bonds you paid 75 cents on the dollar for them?—A. That is what we estimated the bonds cost us in clean cash. That was our estimate at the time.

Q. If you paid that amount to the Sioux City Company that would be over $150,000. Can you state to this Commission when that payment was made by you and how?—A. We paid it previously. We owed and borrowed a pretty large sum of money. We had borrowed and owed in one shape or another, and when we came out here we had the bonds to be distributed.

Q. That is to say, that after you closed your accounts up and built your road you found that you had left the stock and the company bonds, but the Government bonds had all been negotiated?—A. All had been negotiated, and we had the stock, and of course we had these bonds. The stock was paid for and the bonds were paid for.

Q. When you say the bonds were paid for, do you mean to assert that you ever paid the company, besides the subscription that you paid for the stock, 75 cents on the dollar for the bonds?—A. That is what our estimate was.

Q. I am not asking for the estimate. I ask you if you bought those bonds from the company and paid for them in the way I have described, by giving the company 75 per cent. of the par value of the bonds in addition to what you had paid in for your stock?—A. That is my recollection.

THE BONDS NOT A DIVIDEND.

Q. Is it not true that these bonds were divided up as a dividend among the stockholders, they having paid for the stock and considering themselves as the owners of the bonds?—A. No, sir; I think not. That is not my recollection at all. The bonds were estimated at 75 cents on the dollar, which, my recollection is, we paid the cash for. That was the cash value that the bonds stood us in.

Q. Am I to understand you as swearing that you have ever paid the Sioux City Company 75 per cent. of the par value of your bonds, in money, outside of your subscription?—A. Yes; that is what our estimate was.

Q. Will you refer me to any account of your own, or any check or evidence, of payment made by you to the Sioux City Company for those bonds?—A. I do not know that I can give you any other estimate than what I stated to you. I know that in our settlement of cash and everything the bonds had cost us 75 cents on the dollar, that we had paid the money for.

Q. These bonds were delivered by you to the different stockholders at the same time that the stock was delivered to the different stockholders, were they not?—A. I suppose they were. It would not have been a very long time afterward. I do not know how long we were making the distribution.

Q. Mr. Oakes Ames got his share, and Mr. De Witt C. Blair his share, and Mr. Lambard his share?—A. All the stockholders, I think, got their shares, if they paid for them; and if they did not, the bonds were sold.

SOME OF THE BONDS SOLD.

Q. Were any of these company bonds sold at all?—A. I think there were some sold.

Q. Who sold them—I mean before the distribution?—A. I do not know that there were any of them sold. There were some of the stockholders that did not take their bonds, or did not pay for them.

Q. Did not pay for their stock?—A. Did not pay for their bonds, and of course they were sold. I think there were some of them sold.

Q. In what book were the proceeds of any bonds sold ever entered?—A. I cannot say about that. It went into the fund, of course.

Q. My only question is, in what book the proceeds of bonds sold would be entered, so that you could find what you had on hand?—A. There was a memorandum of distribution made at Cedar Rapids. I think that was where the distribution was made. There was a circular made out and sent to them for each person's pro rata, and some minute was made of it there.

Q. Who received the proceeds of the bonds—the Government bonds or the company bonds?—A. I received them.

AS TO THE BANK ACCOUNT.

Q. In what bank did you place them?—A. We sold the Government bonds along as we constructed the road, and the money was paid out and distributed, I think, in 1869, or along there; it might have been 1868 or 1870.

Q. But you do not answer the question that I put to you. My question is, in what bank did you place those proceeds?—A. I think some of the proceeds were placed in the National City Bank here in this city.

Q. New York city?—A. New York city. I think some of the proceeds were placed there for a while.

Q. To whose credit?—A. I suppose it was placed to my credit; most likely it was. I guess some of the funds were left for a short time with the Park Bank. But we owned a very large portion of the bonds before the sale was made.

Q. Do you mean that when the proceeds of these bonds were placed to your credit in a bank you had no journal and no day-book and no ledger account at all in which you yourself kept an account of the amount so received by you?—A. I undoubtedly had an account in a bank or bank-book. But I can recollect this, that we never held funds very long in hand.

FUNDS ENTERED IN POCKET-BOOK.

Q. But if you only kept them on hand five minutes, would you not enter them in your own books?—A. Yes; I would probably enter them in my pocket-book, if in nothing else.

Q. Would you not enter them in a formal day-book or journal?—A. No; I did not do that kind of business. I would enter them by a single-entry charge.

Q. Do you mean to say that all the funds of the Sioux City Company were kept account of in a loose pocket-book in that way?—A. No; I do not pretend to say that they were kept in a loose pocket-book; but they were kept in a memorandum book. The funds did not lie long; I used them up as fast as I received them.

Q. What other funds did you receive besides the proceeds of stock subscriptions and the proceeds of the sale of Government bonds; did you receive anything else?—A. Yes; it all went to the company..

Q. I am only asking what else you received. From what other source did you receive money?

The WITNESS. Besides the bonds?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Besides the Government bonds and the payments on the stock.

A. We received some for the sale of lands.

ACTUAL COST OF ROAD.

Q. Before we pass to the lands, can you not tell me what the actual cost of this road was? I do not mean what the amount of the distribution was, but what the cost to you was—how much it cost you to do what you did. By "you," I mean you as trustee.—A. Four million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Q. From what source do you take those figures?—A. I take them from the cash we paid.

Q. From what source do you take them—from what paper or book?—A. I take them from the Government bonds we sold and our own bonds, and the money paid in for stock.

Q. Is that the only way in which you arrive at that conclusion?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you get it by adding up the amount of payments actually made by you—made by you, from a book in which those payments are entered?—A. That is my recollection of it.

Q. If that is your recollection, where is that book containing the payments made by you; you say you have footed up a list of payments made by you, entered in a book?—A. For all the payments that I made, myself, and all that Mr. Walker made (my paymaster in the West), I have vouchers for, and those vouchers I settled with the committee for, and delivered them over to him.

SOURCE OF INFORMATION.

Q. Now, we will go back to my question. From what source do you obtain the information that the cost of that road was $4,650,000?—A. The Government bonds were all used, and the capital stock and other bonds were all used for the construction of the road.

Q. Is that the only source of your information?—A. Of course, that is what I know is the calculation.

Q. Is that the only source of your information?—A. Well, I think it is, in a measure.

Q. Then you have not in your possession any material showing the amount of these vouchers that you have given up, and you cannot ascertain the amount by adding them together, to-day?—A. No; I could not, no differently than what I have stated here.

Q. How do you know whether they differ or not if you have not got them in your possession?—A. I know that was the amount; that is all. I recollect that was the amount.

Q. That was the amount of the stock and the two kinds of bonds?—A. That was the amount of the cost of the road.

Q. Do you swear that that was the amount of the vouchers which you delivered up to the committee?—A. Yes; I think so; I think that was the case.

Q. How do you know that that was the amount of the vouchers?—A. All I know is by the settlement.

Q. But that will not inform you that the amount of the vouchers was the equivalent of the stock and the two classes of bonds?—A. It certainly would. I think it would, sir.

Q. Now you say that when you made the distribution you had on hand for distribution the stock and all the company bonds?—A. Of course I had the stock. Whether I had the bonds all in my possession or not at that time, or whether they were in the possession of some of the others, I cannot say now. I think we had some of the bonds hypothecated for money at one time.

Q. But they were all distributed to the stockholders?—A. They were all distributed.

Q. And they were rated as being worth 75 per cent.?—A. Yes.

LAND GRANTS.

Q. What became of the land-grant of the company?—A. We were unfortunate about that. We got scarcely any lands at all. The lands were all taken up. I think we got no lands whatever in Iowa. We had a few swamp lands, I think, voted us by Sioux City.

Q. How many acres, in all, did you receive on the different grants?—A. We got nothing from the Government with the exception of that 26 miles of road on the Nebraska side. The Union Pacific Railroad had its grant, and this grant lapsing, we were entitled to one-half of the lands, whatever it was. The Union Pacific people made a division, and they did not stand by the division, so we had to sue them, and we eventually made a compromise. We got some lands there.

GOVERNMENT LAND.

Q. How many thousand acres? It appears from the Government reports that the amount of land awarded to your road under the acts of 1862 and 1864 was 41,236$\frac{53}{100}$ acres. Is that your recollection?—A. I recollect getting the land set off to us. I will not say what was the number of acres of land; but the Union Pacific road sold a part of the lands, and we sued them. We had the suit in the Supreme Court of the United States for a long while, and we eventually wanted money pretty badly, and we sold all the interest we had in those lands for $200,000 to the Missouri Railroad Company. We owed considerable money, and that amount was paid in to the company.

STATE LAND.

Q. What other lands did you have besides the United States grant?—A. The Northern Nebraska Air-Line Company received 48,000 acres of land (something short of that number, though they were entitled to that); the State had donated to them 48,000 acres of land. We consolidated with that company, and we got those lands. At least the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad got the benefit of those lands. In that consolidation I think we paid in something like $80,000 to that company; but, however, that money was all turned over to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company and they got the benefit of it. We had those lands on hand in 1873, I think. There was very little of them sold at that time. You must recollect this: At the time when we got these lands there was really hardly any sale at all for land, because the Government had passed the homestead law and no man would buy land of you when he could go and get 160 acres of land beside you for nothing. These lands lay and lay; and I recollect that we issued circulars to every stockholder we had, inviting them to take these lands at $2 an acre, and I think about two-thirds of them came in and took the lands at $2 an acre, and the other part did not. All that money was paid in in cash to the Sioux City and Pacific Company. That was in 1873.

SALE OF LAND TO STOCKHOLDERS.

Q. Please state again what was your course of business in relation to selling these lands to the stockholders.—A. There seemed to be no sale for them to individuals at all at that time. We held them and held them, and there was no sale; and we wanted money very badly at the time, I recollect, and the result was that we fixed a price on them that we thought was a fair value, and we thought the stockholders would take them and pay the money. We issued circulars to them, and I think about three-fourths of the stockholders came in and took the land at the price. The others did not.

Q. Did the directors apportion these lands to themselves also?—A. Just as far as they were stockholders they took their pro rata of land. Some of them did and some did not; but they went to all the stockholders of the company in proportion.

Q. Who fixed the price for which the land should be sold?—A. The company fixed the price.

Q. That is, the directors fixed the price?—A. The directors fixed the price.

Q. In what year was that done?—A. 1873 was the year when these lands were sold, if I am correct about it. That was the time I paid for mine. The lands lay scattered over a few counties of the State. They were scattered lands.

TRANSFER OF STOCK TO CHICAGO AND NORTHWESTERN.

Q. What was the arrangement, and how was it brought about, by which the stock of this company was transferred to the Chicago and Northwestern Company?—A. That stock, in the first place, was put into the hands of trustees. A good many put their stock into the hands of the trustees of the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad Company. I think I was one of the trustees. The stock was scattered, and it had very little value. There was some intimation made by some persons that they were about buying up the stock. If that had been done that road might have been embarrassed and passed into other hands.

Q. What road?—A. The Sioux City and Pacific.

Q. How?—A. They might have turned the business on to some other road, or, at least, they might have done this: If they had got the control of it the road might have gone into bankruptcy. That is about the amount of it, because really the Cedar Rapids road in Nebraska took care of it and kept it alive. The stock was put in their hands and we held it ever since, I believe. Something like that. I think there was something paid for the stock. I think we paid something for it—the Cedar Rapids Company of Nebraska did, I think.

Q. How much?—A. It occurs to me that it was about 15 cents.

Q. Then it was bought up in the interest of the Cedar Rapids Company?—A. It was bought up, of course, in the interest of the Cedar Rapids Company as well as of the Nebraska and our other interests, because we wanted to protect the road and protect the bonds. That was the amount of it. When we consolidated with the Northwestern road that was one of the assets belonging to the Cedar Rapids road, and everything that we had belonging to the Cedar Rapids Company we turned over to the Northwestern Company.

HOW THE CONSOLIDATION WAS EFFECTED.

Q. How was the consolidation with the Northwestern Company effected?—A. We changed stocks with them for some part. They assumed the bonds, and as to some of the road we sold the stock for bonds.

Q. As far as the Sioux City road is concerned, you transferred the stock to the Chicago and Northwestern Company?—A. They took it as part of the assets. It was an asset of the Cedar Rapids Company. We turned it all over. I do not know that there was any particular price fixed for it at all. It was in the whole deal, and we turned over everything that there was—the Cedar Rapids and all the Sioux City stock that we owned.

Q. What did you get for what you turned over?—A. We got stock from their road, and we got bonds.

Q. How many shares of Northwestern stock did you get?—A. I cannot say exactly how many shares we got. We had preferred stock that, I believe, we took a bond for, but I cannot say what the stock was. It might have been $10,000 a mile or more; I really cannot tell, there were so many things lumped together about the whole matter, about the different roads—we had a number of branch roads.

ADVANTAGES OF THE ARRANGEMENT.

Q. What advantage to the Northwestern was this property that was transferred by the Cedar Rapids and especially by the Sioux City and Pacific?—A. The Cedar Rapids road had a perpetual lease on the Nebraska road, reaching from the Mississippi to Omaha, and we had a number of other branches—the Diamond road and a short road up to Lyons, and some others. They had a perpetual lease on those roads. To have the business of the Sioux City road was some advantage to them. The Elkhorn road that we had was a long road that was built, and that was a feeder. The business that came off that Elkhorn road and across the Sioux City and Pacific went on to the Northwestern road. They got the haul on that business.

Q. They got control of it?—A. We thought it was for our interest to let them have it. We thought the Elkhorn road, too, was a great advantage to the Sioux City and Pacific, because we got that haul. The Elkhorn road crosses at Fremont and goes up the Elkhorn River in Nebraska. This road went through there and connected there at Fremont.

Q. Does the Elkhorn freight still pass over the Sioux City and then the Northwestern?—A. Yes.

Q. Does the Sioux City road enable the Northwestern road now to control that freight?—A. Yes; that branch, of course, enables them to control that freight in a measure, although we have another branch road that runs on and turns off when you get to about 15 miles from Fremont. That branch road runs down to Omaha. The business of the Elkhorn could be sent down to Omaha, instead of coming over the river and using the road the whole way. It was an advantage to the Northwestern to have the road in that connection.

EFFECT OF BUILDING PARALLEL ROADS.

Q. In what other respects is it an advantage to the Northwestern to keep the Sioux City road?—A. The way it is now it is not, except that one prong that goes over from Missouri Valley to Fremont. That is a valuable part of the land for them to keep, because it brings the Elkhorn business to them, but really the part that runs up to Sioux City is of very little value. There have been parallel roads built there—a road running down on the other side of the river and a road on this side. The Milwaukee Company has been building a road that parallels it a little way off, and since we have sold the Iowa Falls road to the Illinois Central they have built a road down, and the country is filling up. I do not think the Sioux City and Pacific is to-day worth 10 cents on the dollar. So few gentlemen can really estimate the cost of building roads at that day compared with what it is to-day. No one can know the great difficulty that we all labored under with these land grants when we got them. For the Government passed a law to give 160 acres to every homestead, and we had no sale for our lands at all. I think I paid $700,000 taxes on lands. You could not sell land to anybody that could get 160 acres for nothing.

EARNING CAPACITY OF ROAD.

Q. What are the present net earnings of the Sioux City road?—A. I do not know.

Q. The bonded indebtedness is $1,600,000 of company bonds?—A. Yes, and Government bonds.

Q. The same of Government bonds?—A. Yes.

Q. Is there any other liability that you know of?—A. No.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the earning capacity of that road, so that you can give us any information as to how much it can earn beyond interest on the company bonds?—A. The Northwestern of course is throwing all the business possible on that road. I think in all probability it is about earning the interest now on the company bonds; that is my opinion; and a great deal of that is derived really from the Elkhorn road.

PRESENT MARKET VALUE.

Q. In your judgment, if you were in the market buying a railroad, would you consider the Sioux City and Pacific road worth more than $1,600,000?—A. Well, I think the road has got valuable shops and machinery. All those things are very valuable. I consider that the Government bonds are worth about $1,000,000. I think the road is worth our bonds and about a million dollars of the Government's.

Q. It is worth, you think, about $2,500,000?—A. Yes; or $2,600,000. I think that is the worth of it to the Northwestern road. Without the Northwestern road, and standing on its own merits alone, I do not think it is worth the bonds, from the way in which they are cutting up railroads in that section of the country.

The Commission then adjourned to to-morrow, Wednesday, October 1, 1887, at 10 a. m.

METHOD OF BOOK-KEEPING FURTHER EXPLAINED.

JOHN I. BLAIR, being further examined, testified as follows:

The WITNESS. Before proceeding I would like to explain somewhat more fully about my mode of keeping books. When I am from home I make a memorandum of all my transactions, every day, and when I get home I transfer those memoranda into a book—each one into a separate book where it belongs. In this matter of constructing this road, when I was from home, and gave any check for iron, I entered it in this book. When I went home, the book that I recollect keeping for that contained one or two quires of paper. When I received a bill I marked across that I had got the bill. All the money that I would pay was entered in my book, entered in that pocket-book. Then any money that I would pay to the engineer or paymaster at Cedar Rapids I would charge to him, and he would have to show what he did with the money. I recollect now distinctly of taking this book along and all the vouchers to compare with the charges in this memorandum book. Those I handed over to the examining committee—all the vouchers that I had. Some vouchers that were missing had to be replaced. That book and those vouchers I gave over to the examining committee, Mr. Williams. I think I brought back that memorandum book. I had a vault in a store where I had had my office. I had been a merchant for some forty years. I kept some old papers in that vault. When I gave up business, I rented my store out, and the persons that rented it had the use of the vault. My book would show the amount paid to the different people. But my charges were not very numerous. For instance, there would be one transaction of a thousand tons of rails, and I would make one entry of that. That was my mode of doing business. When the thing was over I would take that book and my vouchers to settle with the examining committee that was appointed, when I would get my discharge. That was the end of it.

AUDITING COMMITTEE.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. I find from the minutes of the Sioux City and Pacific Company that this committee to which you refer was appointed in November, 1870, and consisted of Mr. J. B. Alley, Mr. J. M. S. Williams, and Mr. Charles E. Vail.—A. Yes.

Q. Which of those gentlemen are now living?—A. Mr. John B. Alley.

Q. Is Mr. Vail living?—A. No, he is dead; and Mr. Williams is dead.

Q. The resolution directed this committee to examine and audit the accounts for building and equipping the company's road and all expenses connected therewith. Is it your recollection that this memorandum book in which you posted the figures from your pocket-book is the only book of account that these gentlemen examined?—A. That is all they examined of mine and my vouchers. They examined Mr. Walker's account also.

Q. Did he have a book?—A. He had a book, I suppose, containing entries of what he had paid.

Q. Where was this examination held?—A. At Cedar Rapids, at the office of the company.

Q. And you say your recollection is that after that examination you brought your book away with you?—A. I think I did. I think I brought my book away with me. They kept all the vouchers.

AN ATTACHMENT BY MR. LAMBARD.

Q. Is this the only examination of your accounts that occurred?—A. I think there was another examination. It originated through themselves. There was a dispute of interest. I might state to you that in 1868, about the time that I received the Government bonds, and expected to sell them for the purpose of completing the road (with other moneys) there was an attachment taken out by a man by the name of Lambard, who was one of the original incorporators of the road. He came forward and claimed that he was entitled to one-ninth of the whole road; that there were nine stockholders, and that he was entitled to one-ninth of the whole interest. He took out an attachment in that year, in New York City, attaching all the money that might be in the Park Bank, as was supposed, and in the City Bank and in my hands, and otherwise. I was not to distribute a dollar of it. The result was that I had to go on my own responsibility and borrow money and carry through that road in various ways, and, of course, I charged the interest that I paid. This Mr. Williams, who was a treasurer in some other companies that we had interests in, was not considered responsible. I considered him irresponsible. He had considerable money in his hands belonging to other companies, and I wanted to oust him from that place. Then his friends came forward and said that I had not accounted for the interest that I had charged, and that it was all wrong; that I had money and that it was in the banks, and that I had got interest for it, &c. They brought suit.

SUIT BROUGHT BY MR. WILLIAMS IN NAME OF COMPANY.

Q. The company brought suit?—A. Well, not exactly the company. It was in the name of the company, but really it was Williams and these other parties that controlled it. That matter was referred to a master.

Q. Who was the master?—A. Governor Kirkwood, at Iowa City. We went through the evidence in the matter, and after we had got through I got Mr. Taylor's evidence and other evidence to show that the money that was attached had not been loaned to me at all, and that I had had no use of it whatever; that the money lay dead, and that the money I had borrowed I had paid interest for. After we had got through this evidence they discontinued the suit and paid the costs. That was the end of it.

Q. Where is that evidence to be found on file?—A. I cannot tell you anything about that. The matter was all before Judge Kirkwood, and when they got through they withdrew that suit and paid the costs, and that was the last of it. I paid no further attention to it.

Q. Is that all of the dispute that occurred between you and this company as to settlements?—A. I do not recollect any other matter. There was some controversy, I believe, about some receipts of the road—some things they thought I ought to account for.

COMMITTEES OF ARBITRATION IN 1872 AND 1873.

Q. Do you remember that in 1872 Mr. John B. Alley and Mr. J. M. S. Williams were again appointed a committee to arbitrate with you for a final settlement of the affairs of the company?—A. I suppose that was the matter that was referred afterwards to Governor Kirkwood.

Q. Do you remember that in May, 1873, a committee having charge of the suit against you made a report through Mr. Horace Williams?—A. I do not recollect what report they made about it.

Q. Who was Horace Williams?—A. Horace Williams was president of the Nebraska Railroad, I think, at the time, and lived in Iowa.

Q. Do you remember that he made any report on this subject?—A. I do not recollect.

DUDLEY FIELD ATTORNEY FOR LAMBARD.

Q. In regard to this suit of Lambard against yourself, who was Mr. Lambard's attorney in New York?—A. I think it was Dudley Field. I think he said he paid Dudley Field $10,000 to get a judgment, which he did, I believe, through Judge Barnard, for two or three hundred thousand dollars, I believe. He got judgment for one-ninth interest.

Q. Have you a copy of the papers in that suit?—A. I have not.

Q. Do you remember what the result of the suit was?—A. Oh, yes; I recollect very well what the result of the suit was.

Q. Lambard got a judgment, did he not?—A. He got judgment for a one-ninth interest—some two hundred and odd thousand dollars.

MITCHELL & CRANE ATTORNEYS FOR COMPANY.

Q. Who was the attorney for the company in New York?—A. Judge Mitchell was one of the attorneys. The firm was Mitchell & Crane at that time. Judge Mitchell is now dead.

Q. What counsel did they have?—A. I do not recollect whom they had.

Q. Is Mr. Crane dead, too?—A. No, sir; he is living.

Q. He is in New York, is he?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know where his office is?—A. Somewhere in Wall street; I forget the number.

AN APPEAL AND COMPROMISE.

Q. You say you appealed from that judgment?—A. Yes, we appealed from it.

Q. Do you know whether or not the appeal was ever argued?—A. There was a committee appointed, and I believe there was some condition that we should let Mr. Lambard have so much stock—that he might have all the stock he claimed. We did not care anything about that, but he would have to pay 40 cents on the dollar for it; so we turned over the stock to him and he paid all the costs, and the suit was discontinued. I think Mr. Lambard failed, afterward, to pay for his stock.

Q. What was he to pay for his stock—how much?—A. He was to pay just what the others paid.

Q. Was it not 40 cents on the dollar?—A. Yes; that was what he was to pay.

Q. And that was what the others had paid?—A. Yes.

A BLACKMAILING AFFAIR.

Q. This judgment was recovered by Mr. Lambard after all the subscriptions by the others had been paid?—A. All the subscriptions had been paid, and Mr. Lambard, before that, had made a subscription and had paid that, or arranged for it, and never said a word about this matter until we had got through the road, and then he came on and got out the attachment and shut everything up. We considered it nothing but a blackmailing affair from beginning to end.

Q. What I want to get at is, whether the papers in that suit would not disclose all the prior history of that road, and all the profits it was claimed the stockholders had made, and what profits Mr. Lambard was entitled to by reason of his right to subscribe?—A. I presume that was set out, but I cannot say about it. He thought at that time that it was very valuable, and perhaps other people did, because they thought we were getting 300,000 or 400,000 acres of land, while it turned out that we only got 42,000. There were no lands claimed within the bounds, except that much.

COMPLETION OF ROAD.

Q. Do you remember that under date of February 11, 1869, or in the spring of 1869, it appears in the minutes of the company that an announcement was made of the completion of a section of 32.27 miles, making in all 101.70 miles of completed road? Do you remember that in the spring of 1869 that was about the position of the company—that the road was constructed up to that point?—A. Yes; I think the road was completed about that time. In February or March, I think the Government commissioners were over to take up the road. I think that in 1868 they took up the part from California Junction up to Sioux City. I think that part was taken up then, and the next year afterwards this other part was completed.

AFFIDAVIT AS TO ISSUE OF BONDS.

Q. Do you remember that shortly after that period you and Mr. Walker made an affidavit, which appears on the minutes of the company, certifying that the Sioux City Company had not before that time issued any of its own bonds as securities in any form or manner which entitled the same, either in law or equity, to priority of preference in payment to bonds of the United States, and the company at that time had not executed any company mortgage of any kind on its road, or issued any bonds of any kind whatever?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember making that affidavit?—A. Yes; I think the bonds were issued in 1869. That was in February, was it not?

Commissioner. ANDERSON. Yes.

The WITNESS. It was in May, I guess, 1869, after the road had all been approved, and was through, that these bonds were issued—that is, the bonds that we were entitled to issue.

Q. Then it was true at the time you made that affidavit—which was after the substantial completion of the road—that none of the bonds of the company had been issued?—A. I think none had.

RESOLUTION OF MAY, 1869.

Q. It appears also from the minutes that in May, 1869, a resolution was passed, reciting that "In view of the facts stated, that the improvements necessary for the present business require additional equipment, and in view of the fact that the stockholders have not yet received any stock or other securities for their subscriptions paid in for the construction of the road or for the earnings of the road which have gone into the construction, Resolved, That the president be authorized to issue to the stockholders of this company capital stock hereof equal in amount to the calls heretofore paid or secured to be paid by each. Also, to distribute to the said stockholders an amount equal to 50 per cent. of such calls in the first-mortgage bonds heretofore issued by said company and paid to the contractors on account of the construction of said road, and which, by an arrangement with them, have been received from said contractors." Do you remember when that action was taken?—A. I think there was something of that kind. That is my recollection, since I have heard you read that.

DISTRIBUTION OF STOCK.

Q. How was it that a portion of those bonds had been delivered to the contractor—that is, I suppose, yourself, as trustee for Mr. De Witt C. Blair and Mr. Ames, and were then returned to the company?—A. I suppose, of course, the distribution would have to be made by me for them, to the stockholders. Whether they aided in the distribution or not I cannot say now. The distribution would have been made by me for them to the different stockholders pro rata.

Q. In other words, it made no difference whether the bonds went through you or directly to the stockholders, the same result was reached?—A. Yes; I suppose if they went through me, it was for them; how far they participated in it I cannot say.

Q. In connection with that, I will ask you whether, under the agreement that was made with you by De Witt C. Blair and James Ames at the same time that the main contract was entered into, that agreement, after referring to the main agreement, did not recite that the parties thereto assigned to you, in trust for the benefit of the stockholders of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company and their successors, all the profits of every kind and nature that may arise under this contract, and that the parties to that agreement released, quitclaimed, and confirmed to you, for the benefit of those stockholders and their successors, all profits and surplus profits under whatever color, form, or pretense the same might arise under said contract?—A. I recollect very well that that is about the substance of it; that neither Mr. Ames nor Mr. Blair was to have any advantage over any single stockholder. Every stockholder was to fare exactly alike. There was to be no discrimination on the part of any one. They were to have their pro rata share.

Q. So that, as far as concerned this distribution of 50 per cent. of bonds that were recited to have been paid to the contractors, it made no difference whether you distributed them under this trust I have referred to or whether they were distributed directly to the stockholders by the company?—A. No, I suppose it made no difference.

THE REMAINING BONDS AND STOCK.

Q. Do you remember that shortly after that another resolution was passed directing you to complete the distribution of all the remaining bonds and stock of the company among the stockholders?—A. I recollect that it was done.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I will read to you the language of the minutes:

The president was requested to make distribution, on or before the 1st of January, 1871, to the stockholders of this company of all bonds, stock, and cash assets which have accrued to said stockholders in the construction of the Sioux City and Pacific railroad, and to close any and all outstanding contracts for construction, and to make final settlement with the contractors on or before said date.

Do you remember that that was done?—A. I know that there were full and final settlements made with every person, whether it was at that time or afterward. It may have been some time shortly afterward; probably that year.

Q. What I mean to inquire about is whether all the company's bonds and all the company's stock were distributed by this action among the stockholders in proportion to the amounts of stock held by each?—A. Yes, that was done.

Q. And the consideration which the company received from them was the money (whatever it was) that the stockholders had paid in to the company toward the construction of the road?—A. Yes.

Q. And you think that a correct statement of the amount of the moneys paid by the stockholders will be found in the Lambard suit?—A. I cannot say about that. I suppose it would. I cannot say what it is stated at there.

PREFERRED STOCK.

Q. Do you remember the transaction by which preferred stock was issued in payment for 6½ miles of road between California Junction and Missouri Valley?—A. That was made in order to make a connection with the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad, so that all freight for the Government and everything else could come direct through Sioux City.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Connection with what company?—A. Connection with the Cedar Rapids road. These 6½ miles of road were built and leased to this company.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Please state what the transaction was, what you got, and what was paid.—A. We remitted the cost on those 6½ miles of road at $25,000 a mile—$169,000 I think it was; and that was leased to that road permanently.

Q. What did your company agree to pay for it—the Sioux City road?—A. I say that was the amount.

Q. In what? State the transaction.—A. I think there was a lease taken to the Sioux City and Pacific road—a lease or sale. They were to pay interest at 7 per cent. on $169,000, which was the cost of the road.

Q. How did they secure that—did they pay it in cash or in preferred stock?—A. They paid it in preferred stock.

Q. Tell us about that?—A. They gave preferred stock.

Q. They issued preferred stock?—A. Yes.

Q. To what amount?—A. To the amount of $169,000.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. For the 6½ miles?—A. Yes; I think a little more than 6½ miles; and issued preferred stock for these $169,000.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Did they give them anything else; did they give them any common stock?—A. No; that is all that was given them.

COMMON STOCK GIVEN IN PAYMENT FOR LANDS.

Q. What disposition did they make of the lands that the 6½ miles were entitled to receive?—A. That was not entitled to any lands. That belonged to the Cedar Rapids and Missouri Valley Railroad Company. I have no clear recollection of what the terms were. I recollect the $169,000, however. [After looking at the agreement.] I see that there was some common stock issued.

Q. Was there not some land that the Cedar Rapids Company was permitted to hold which really belonged to these 6½ miles, as part of the adjustment?—A. When I come to think about it, I think the Cedar Rapids Company owned a large amount of land. We owned considerable land there. Probably 1, 2, or 3 acres of land that we might have owned there we deeded for depot grounds, station grounds, &c., over to the company, in addition to the road, and I presume that that was what this common stock was given for. I cannot say. That was land belonging to the Sioux City Company.

CHARACTER OF COUNTRY.

Q. How did this 6½ miles of road compare with the rest of the road as to the country through which it passed?—A. It was estimated at that price as being the cost. I suppose the cost of that part of the road was correctly estimated. It had no rolling stock, shops, or machinery, or anything of that kind whatever.

Q. I ask you how the country compared with the country through which the Sioux City road passed, as to difficulties of construction—was it substantially the same?—A. Substantially the same. It was considered a little lower ground part of the way.

DISTRIBUTION OF FIRST-MORTGAGE BONDS.

Q. I find an entry on the minutes to the effect that you were to make a further allotment to the stockholders of $400,000 of first-mortgage bonds which had been set aside in connection with Mr. Lambard's suit. Will you please explain that?—A. I suppose that all the bonds were not distributed at the same time; that a portion of them were held back.

Q. Had not four hundred bonds been placed in somebody's hands in order to enable the company to appeal from the Lambard judgment?—A. Yes; that was the case.

Q. Then when the Lambard judgment was settled or arranged you distributed those four hundred bonds among the stockholders?—A. Yes; they got them all.

MR. BLAIR RETIRES FROM PRESIDENCY OF ROAD.

Q. I find, from the minutes, that in September, 1871, John I. Blair retired, Horace Williams was elected president, and John I. Blair, as financial agent and treasurer, was directed to turn over all bonds or coupons, paid or unpaid, with all books of account, papers, and property, in his hands; and he was also instructed to pay over some balances as specified in the report of the auditing committee, and a balance from him also as treasurer of the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad, to the Sioux City and Pacific. Do you remember that action?—A. I do not recollect that; but I recollect that some time afterward, in settlement, everything was settled. I paid everything, every dollar that was in my hands. There was some balance, I think, in my hands.

Q. Do you remember that Mr. Williams succeeded you as president?—A. Yes.

SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

Q. Do you remember that at this time you were required to turn over all books of account to the company?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what, if any, books of account you did turn over?—A. I suppose all the books that were at Cedar Rapids were turned over. That might have been. I do not know. I suppose that was a reference to the books while I was president—that our books and property of every description would be turned over to the new president—including all supplies and everything that belonged to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad.

Q. Would not that also embrace the construction books showing the transactions of the company relating to construction?—A. I suppose so. I guess those had all been given up before that, so far as vouchers and everything of that kind was concerned. They were all given up.

Q. You have told us that two years before this you took the book showing the actual cost of the road to the auditing committee, and took it back and placed it in a vault?—A. I think at the time I gave the vouchers, and made a settlement with the auditing committee, they took all the vouchers; and my impression is that I took my book home, because it was simply a transcript of the payments that I had made. I had given all the vouchers up to the company.

Q. My question is: After the resolution was passed calling on you to deliver up all the account books relative to the affairs of that company, did you deliver up this particular book to which you have referred which contained a statement of the actual cost of construction of the road?—A. I cannot say whether I did or not. I do not know that I was ever called upon to do that. I had been running this road as president, and I had all the books of the operation of the road, which was a separate and distinct thing entirely. We had moneys to receive and moneys to pay, and everything of that kind. And everything that I had in the old company in any shape whatever we turned over to the new organization—to the president of the railroad. Of course I paid no further attention to it. All the books, papers, vouchers, and everything that there was for the running of the road and for the construction, so far as I know, were turned over.

Q. You say that in regard to this particular book that contained the statement of the actual cost of construction of the road, and which you exhibited to the committee and then took away with you, you did not think you were called upon to turn that book over?—A. I do not think that I was, because they had all the vouchers. The settlement had been made with the committee before that, when I gave up all my vouchers.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. You mean the auditing committee?—A. The auditing committee.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Your recollection is that you did not give up to the company the book containing the actual cost of construction of the road?—A. I will not say that I did. My book that I had, after giving up all my vouchers, and reporting to the company all moneys that I paid over to Mr. Walker, which equaled the amount that he had paid out, I suppose, or more, he being the paymaster there. He had to make a settlement with the committee. He had to account for the money which had been paid over to him. He settled that account himself. I settled my own account with them and gave all up. My recollection is that this book contained one or two quires of paper. I kept all my books by single entry—simply making a charge of such an amount on such a day.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Do you not know where that book is now?—A. I do not. It may be that I can find it. I had an office in a store where there was a vault, and I rented that out afterward. I might find it. All this was twenty years ago, however.

SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC LAND COMPANY.

Q. I find the following resolution passed in March, 1872:

That the Sioux City Company sell all their lands in Nebraska, except those needed for station purposes, to the Sioux City and Pacific Land and Town Lot Company on such terms as the executive committee shall deem just and equitable, and receive the stock of said Land and Town Lot Company in pay therefor.

Do you remember that action?—A. Yes; I recollect that we did sell the lands, and that there was a value put on those lands.

Q. Who was president of the Sioux City and Pacific Land and Town Lot Company?—A. I forget whether I was president of that company at that time or not. Probably I might have been.

OWNERSHIP OF STOCK.

Q. Who owned the stock of that company?—A. Those who subscribed.

Q. Were they not, substantially, the same people who were stockholders in the Sioux City Company?—A. Yes; we put a price on all these lands that we had for sale. We sent circulars to every stockholder, asking him to take a share of these lands.

Q. That comes afterwards. I am now referring to the Sioux City and Pacific Land and Town Lot Company. I only want to know if the stockholders in that company were not, substantially, the same people who were stockholders in the railroad company?—A. I think they were. All who were willing to come into the company and contribute toward it. Those who did not come into the company of course were not. But I think, substantially, they were. I will say that three-quarters of all the stockholders of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company came in and took their pro rata of land and paid for it in money. The pro rata that would have belonged to the remaining quarter if they had come in, was then offered to the other stockholders to take it in proportion, if they would.

HOW THE COMPANY PAID FOR THE LAND.

Q. Please confine yourself, at present, to the transaction with this land company. The resolution states that the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company is to accept pay for these lands in stock of the land company. Is that the way the land company paid for the land?—A. The land company, in the first place, paid cash for the land and then took stock in the company.

Q. Who took stock in the company?—A. Every man who paid his pro rata share for the land got stock of the company, because when the land was sold he would get his proportionate pay as a stockholder.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The language of your resolution is that the Sioux City company should receive the stock of the land company in payment for the lands?

The WITNESS. The Sioux City company did not receive it, because the money was paid. Cash was paid to the Sioux City company. If they took stock of course all the parties took it and paid the money. I know the money was paid for the land. I took my share and paid cash. But others did not take their share of the land, because they did not think it was any object.

DISTRIBUTION OF STOCK PROPORTIONED TO MONEY PAID IN.

Q. In order to refresh your recollection as to the manner in which these lands were first disposed of, before the action was taken to offer them first to the stockholders at $2 an acre, I read to you from the minutes the action which follows the action to which I have already referred as to the lands in Nebraska. The minutes say the lands in Iowa were similarly disposed of to the Sioux City Land and Town Lot Company in Iowa, and the president was directed to dispose of all lands and town lots in Iowa held by him in trust to the same company (that is, the land company), and a resolution was passed as follows:

Resolved, also, That the officers of the said land company be authorized to issue the land stock to be paid to this company, to the individual stockholders of this company pro rata, instead of to the company.

Do you remember that that was done?—A. I do not recollect what was done, but I know this: that the price fixed upon the land was paid in cash to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company. I think the stock was issued to each stockholder for the amount he actually paid—for the number of acres and the price. The money was paid in first to the Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company, all in cash, and the stock was afterward issued by this company. When you come to speak about the lands in Iowa, these lands were some swamp lands that were voted by Woodbury County. I got them to vote some swamp lands there. They thought they would do something toward the erection of a depot there, and they voted some swamp lands, and I had a hard time after that to get the lands out of them. Those were all the lands we got. We got no Government lands whatever.

SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC LANDS SOLD TO STOCKHOLDERS.

Q. When you say that the lands were paid for in cash, do you refer to all the transactions, or only to the transaction subsequently had in regard to receiving $200,000 and selling the lands for $200,000?—A. That $200,000 that we sold the lands for was for lands that were a portion of that 42,000 acres that we got from the Government. The Union Pacific Company claimed them, and we had a suit in the Supreme Court of the United States, I think, at the time to recover those lands from them, and also to recover the lands that they had sold. The Union Pacific Company sold the lands, and denied that we had any rights whatever in the lands. We brought suit, and we thought our case was a good one; still it was uncertain. The Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company wanted the money pretty badly, and we sold the lands to the stockholders for $200,000. I know they paid for them in money. That is about the amount of it. So far as I am concerned I know I can say that it was a loss to me individually.

Q. What I want particularly to know is whether you are positive that at the time of the conveyance of the Nebraska lands to the Sioux City and Pacific Land and Town Lot Company, in March, 1871, and at the time of the conveyance of the Iowa lands to this same company in March, 1871, there was any consideration paid by the land company, in money, to the railroad company?—A. According to my books it was in 1873 that the balance of that 42,000 acres was sold.

STOCK ISSUED DIRECTLY TO STOCKHOLDERS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am talking of a transaction that occurred in March, 1871, under a resolution, by virtue of which the Sioux City company sold all its Nebraska lands to this land company. The resolution directed that the stock of the land company should be received in payment therefor by the railroad company. Then a subsequent resolution directed that the land company might issue its stock in payment for these lands direct to the stockholders of the railroad company instead of issuing it to the railroad company.

The WITNESS. Of course it was issued to the stockholders—those who took their proportion of the $200,000 purchase. The stock was issued to those who paid, exactly in proportion to the money that they paid.

Commissioner ANDERSON. This transaction occurred two or three years before the $200,000 transaction, and the effect of it, as stated in the minutes, would appear to simply distribute the lands which are referred to—the Iowa and Nebraska lands—among the stockholders of the Sioux City company as a dividend.

The WITNESS. No; we paid money for it. We paid cash. I paid cash, and so did every one, so far as I know. We paid the money squarely in to the company.

Q. Let us see what you did yourself. What stock did you receive of the land company in March, 1871, or in the spring of 1871?—A. I have it down, I think, that that land in 1873 was 48,000 acres.

LAND OBTAINED THROUGH CONSOLIDATION WITH NORTH NEBRASKA AIR LINE.

Q. Are the 48,000 acres included in the Nebraska lands?—A. No. Those are lands that we got of the North Nebraska Air Line consolidation. I and some others controlled the charter of the North Nebraska Air Line Company, and we got 48,000 acres of land by that charter. Those lands were turned over to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company. Those lands were held. We might have sold some from time to time. I will not say how many were sold, but whatever was sold the Sioux City company got the benefit of.

Q. When you say that, do you mean that the company got the benefit of it or the stockholders got the benefit of it?—A. It was paid into the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company. It was not paid to the stockholders; it was paid right in to the road.

Q. Will not their account show if they received any money?—A. I suppose it will. The money was paid in clean cash. I paid my money in clean cash. The fact was that the railroad was in debt.

Q. Why should you pay in money to the Sioux City Railroad Company when the transaction showed that the lands were passed over to the land company and it was the land company that should pay the Sioux City, and not the purchaser of the land?—A. I took my share of the land, and so did every other stockholder, and each man paid his money in to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company.

Q. From whom did you take your lands?—A. The lands were turned over to the Sioux City and Pacific Company, and I suppose they made the title to the lands to us.

Q. Then when you took your lands from the land company were you not bound to pay the land company for the lands?—A. You may say that I was interested in the land company; but I individually paid the money over for my land to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company. Then, for that, this land company gave me stock for my money. They were the owners of the land, and they gave me stock for my money in the land company.

Q. How much did you pay?—A. Oh, I did not get any stock in the land company. Out of this 48,000 acres, I got what I paid for at $2 an acre. The land was set off to me and I got a deed for it, I presume. I got the land, I know, at $2 an acre; so did every other stockholder that paid.

CUTTING ACROSS THE CORNERS.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Do you mean to say that instead of paying the money in to the land company and having the land company pay it in to the Sioux City Company, you cut across the corner and paid directly to the Sioux City Company?—A. Paid directly to the Sioux City Company.

Q. And then the land company issued to you the stock?—A. No. I am speaking now of the 48,000 acres, whatever was left of it. They gave us the land at $2 an acre. The other was different. This 48,000 acres was really offered, not to the company, but to the stockholders, at $2 an acre, and circulars were sent to them—not to the land company, as to that 48,000 acres. The stockholders came in and took the land. The other matter of $200,000 that was paid was different, because that was money paid in, and stock of the company was taken for that.

WITNESS PURCHASES 7,000 ACRES FROM SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC COMPANY.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Are we to understand that you bought all of the 48,000 acres?—A. No, sir; not at all. I only got my pro rata.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. How much cash did you individually actually pay in?

The WITNESS. Into the land company?

Commissioner LITTLER. Into the land company or the railroad company.

A. I think I got about 7,000 acres of land, and I paid in $14,000 for it. That money I paid in cash to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company.

STATE OF NEBRASKA BRINGS SUIT.

Q. Was there not a suit brought by the State of Nebraska to avoid your title to these lands—a suit based on these transactions and alleging them to be illegal?—A. Yes; we had some suit with the State of Nebraska. It was a suit brought by some of the officers in the name of the State of Nebraska. It was considered a blackmailing transaction on the part of some outside gentlemen who wanted to be paid something for services and other things. They got this matter up.

Q. From whom did the company get these 48,000 acres—from the General Government or the State of Nebraska?—A. From the State.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Where are the papers in this suit to be found?—A. I cannot tell you. I suppose in the State of Nebraska.

Q. Who was your lawyer?—A. Judge Cook was one.

Commissioner LITTLER. D. C. Cook?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Q. Is he living?—A. No; Judge Cook, of Cedar Rapids. Unfortunately, like almost everybody who went into the transactions in those early days, he is dead; and those who are not dead are all busted up.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. You are still able to pay 100 cents on the dollar?—A. I am.

TOTAL AMOUNT OF LAND GRANTS.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Will you please enumerate all the lands that this company got from different sources?—A. We got 48,000 acres of land from the State of Nebraska—from the Northern Nebraska Air Line Company, of which I was one of the incorporators. That we turned over for the benefit of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company. Then we got our share of the proceeds—whether it was all or not, at least it was said to be all, of the 48,000 acres. Our charter was granted at the same time that the Union Pacific Railroad Company's charter was granted, and, of course, where we lapped the Government decided that we were entitled to one-half of the land. But the land had been pretty much all taken up for some distance out, and the Union Pacific Company disputed our right and we had to bring suit. They had sold a good many of these lands. In the settlement of the matter the question of the sale of the land was in suit, and we wanted the money. We were pretty sure to recover. It was just about like this: that the stockholders of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad and the Cedar Rapids and Nebraska Railroad had got either to loan the money to sustain the road and keep it along or else get something on those lands. The company had a right to the lands, and we valued the right at $200,000, and issued circulars to our stockholders to come in and take their pro rata.

RESULT OF LITIGATION WITH UNION PACIFIC.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Were those lands still in litigation between those two companies?—A. Yes; and it was undecided whether we could get anything or not.

Q. How many acres did you finally get out of that litigation?—A. I cannot tell. I think the Union Pacific Company had sold, probably, one-half of the lands.

Q. How much did you claim under your grant?—A. We claimed 42,000 acres.

Q. How much was involved in this lap?—A. That was the total amount we claimed was due us. They claimed that it was not so much.

Q. How many acres did you get out of this controversy, do you remember?—A. I can not say that.

Q. Was it not about 8,000 or 9,000 acres?—A. It might have been. They had sold some, I know, and we had to compromise with the Union Pacific Company at last. It was decided in our favor.

Q. How much money beside the land did they give you in settlement?—A. I really cannot say.

Q. What is your best recollection as to the amount they gave?—A. I cannot say, for my part, what it was. I recollect that they had sold very nearly half of the land.

Q. Do you recollect how much an acre they paid to you, in money, for the lands which they had sold?—A. It appears to me that it was $4 or $5 an acre, with the interest, that they paid. I think we set some one to calculating what they had sold the land for at the time, and the interest on it.

Q. How much other land (not the land in controversy) did you get from the Government as part of the grant to the Sioux City road?—A. We got no land whatever except that. There was where our great loss was. We ought to have been entitled to 300,000 or 400,000 acres of land, but we got nothing.

Q. Have you any means of furnishing the Commission with a statement of the amount of money you received in addition to the lands growing out of this dispute between the two companies?—A. I have not. I can simply state this: that I took my pro rata of that $200,000 that I paid. I paid $40,000, and I know I held $40,000 in stock. I have been receiving some dividends on it; some years 10 per cent. and some years less and some years more. And my calculation is that, in getting out, I shall get, probably, 50 cents on the dollar (counting the interest I got) for my $40,000.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. What $40,000 do you refer to?—A. I paid $40,000 cash for part of that $200,000. Many did not take their proportion at all. I took my proportion of that, and the rest was divided among the others. I took my pro rata, so as to make up the amount.

WOODBURY COUNTY SWAMP LANDS.

Q. Have you enumerated all the lands which the Sioux City Company got?—A. The 48,000 acres.

Q. And part of the 42,000?—A. Yes; that and the swamp lands.

Q. What were the swamp lands?—A. They were swamp lands that Woodbury County voted to us.

Q. How many acres?—A. I do not recollect. They voted us all the swamp lands they agreed to, but I do not know how many acres there were of them.

Q. What became of the swamp lands? Did they go into this land company?—A. I think so. We had some law business about that at some time, and when I come to think about it, I think we only got a portion of the swamp lands—that they had parted with some of them.

Q. Where were these swamp lands?—A. In Woodbury County.

Q. Are these the Iowa lands referred to in the resolution of 1871 providing that they be deeded to the land company, and providing that the land company might issue its stock to the individual stockholders instead of the railroad company? Are those all the lands that you had in Iowa?—A. Those are all the lands that we had in Iowa to my recollection.

LAND GRANTS TO CEDAR RAPIDS COMPANY.

Q. Did you get any from the State of Iowa?—A. I think not. It is my impression that we did not; I cannot say; possibly we might, but I think not.

Q. Did you get any lands from Harrison County?—A. I think not.

Q. Did you get any lands from Monona County?—A. Those were Cedar Rapids lands.

Q. Did they ultimately come to the Sioux City Company under the consolidation?—A. We sent to Washington and we claimed the swamp lands and we marked them off; but they had been sold to others and we had lost them, and eventually we never got any swamp lands from the State.

Q. How could the Monona lands go to the Cedar Rapids Company?—A. All these lands were Cedar Rapids lands. They got a million acres and more from the State. The Cedar Rapids Company was a land-grant road across the State. We got all those grants.

STATE LANDS OF NEBRASKA.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Do you know how the State of Nebraska became vested with the title to those lands, in the first instance, from the General Government?—A. The General Government, as I understood it, gave each of these territories half a million acres of land for railroads and other improvements which they might deem proper.

Q. Was that by the terms of the act of admission into the Union?—A. I suppose so. That is what was done. The State afterward passed a law to give to any railroad company that would build ten miles of road, 20,000 acres of land, and if they built 50 miles they were to have 100,000 acres of land.

COUNTY BONDS.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. In addition to the lands, did you receive any aid of any kind from other counties—county bonds or money?—A. Yes; I think the Northern Nebraska Air Line Company received some aid by bonds that were voted.

Q. By what counties?—A. I think it was Washington and Dodge counties.

Q. Do you remember the amount?—A. I really forget the amount now.

Q. Whatever it was, was it paid to the company in county bonds?—A. Yes.

Q. Did those bonds subsequently inure to the benefit of the Sioux City Company?—A. I think they got the benefit of it.

DISPOSITION OF BONDS.

Q. Do you know whether the bonds were sold or what disposition was made of them?—A. They were prorated among the stockholders.

Q. Did you get any of them?—A. I did.

Q. Do you remember how many you got as your share?—A. No, I do not.

Q. Did you get about a fifth or a sixth?—A. I got my pro rata. I do not know that there was any time set out for the payment of bonds. They paid about 1 per cent. interest a year, I believe, on the valuation—1 to 1½. That was all that was ever received on the bonds.

Q. Are they still outstanding?—A. Yes, and likely to remain so.

Q. Was there any aid of this same character extended by any other counties?

The WITNESS. To the Sioux City and Pacific?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes, or that came to the Sioux City and Pacific ultimately.

Q. I do not recollect at present. I recollect about those swamp lands being voted to us. We only got a part of them. We had to bring suit.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am referring now to county bond aid.

The WITNESS. No; we got no other county bond aid.

LITIGATION WITH WASHINGTON COUNTY.

Q. Did Washington County bring suit against your company?—A. There was some controversy in Washington County about the bonds. I would not say exactly what it was—whether they brought suit against us or we against them. There was some controversy with them. It was some blackmail business, I believe. Some of them wanted to get paid.

MISSOURI VALLEY AND BLAIR RAILWAY AND BRIDGE COMPANY.

Q. Do you remember that there was a company got up known as the Missouri Valley and Blair Railway and Bridge Company?—A. Yes.

Q. When was that company formed?—A. Four or five years ago, I think the company was got up.

Q. Who got up that company? Who were the principal stockholders?—A. I took some stock in it.

Q. How much was the capital stock?—A. I really forget what it was.

Q. In what State was it organized?—A. I suppose the organization was in Iowa. I will not say exactly about that.

Q. Do you not remember as to the capital stock?—A. I do not recall the amount of the capital stock at present.

Q. How much stock did you have?—A. I forget how much stock I did have. I know that I took my share of it in the organization, but I will not say how much I did take.

THE STOCKHOLDERS.

Q. Who were your associates in that enterprise?—A. They were generally, I think, stockholders in Nebraska railroads and in the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad, and the people interested in the Elkhorn.

Q. Were they not the same persons, substantially, who controlled the Sioux City at that time?—A. Many men who had previously controlled the Sioux City Company were "broken," and dead and gone.

Q. I am referring to the people who were stockholders in the Sioux Company in 1882. Were they not also stockholders in this bridge enterprise?—A. I think some of them were.

Q. Did you control the enterprise? Did you hold a majority of the stock of the Bridge Company?—A. No, I did not. The stockholders of those various companies might have controlled the majority. Of course they did, but I do not recall so much about that.

THE DIRECTORS.

Q. Who were the directors of the Bridge Company?—A. I was one of the directors originally; but I do not recollect about it.

Q. Do you know whether the directors of the Bridge Company were, substantially, the same people who were directors in the Sioux City Company?—A. I cannot say about that.

OBJECT OF THE ASSOCIATION.

Q. What was the object of the Missouri Valley and Blair Railway and Bridge Company?—A. To build a bridge. I think I bought for the Missouri Valley five or six hundred acres, and the river came and took the land off into the other State, on the opposite side. At least the land all went off. We then got land a mile above, and that went off again. So we were troubled all the time to build tracks here and there in various places. Therefore it was thought best to get the bridge; and we got up this bridge. I know it was built for cash, and it cost us, I think, about $1,200,000. We issued a bond on that bridge, I recollect. I think the bonds were all taken at par, about.

TRANSFER OF RIGHTS AND FRANCHISES OF SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC.

Q. Do you remember that the first action taken in regard to this was the passage of a resolution that all the rights, privileges, and franchises conferred upon the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company under the act of Congress of June 27, 1862, relative to the construction and maintenance of a railway bridge over the Missouri River, be and the same are hereby transferred and assigned to the Missouri Valley and Blair Railway and Bridge Company? Do you remember that the first thing you did was to undertake to acquire those franchises and those rights?—A. I think there was something like that passed. That is my recollection.

Commissioner ANDERSON. You say you had a certain amount of stock, but you cannot recollect exactly how much it was.

The WITNESS. No; I cannot.

TERMS OF CONTRACT.

Q. For how much was the bridge bonded?—A. I am not certain, but I think about $1,000,000.

Q. What were the terms of the contract made between the Sioux City and the bridge company?—A. I do not recollect those terms.

Q. Have you a copy of the first contract between the Sioux City Company and the bridge company for the construction of that bridge?—A. There was a law of Congress to justify the building of that bridge as an independent property in some shape.

Commissioner ANDERSON. What I desire to get at is the terms of the contract made between the bridge company and the railroad company, specifying how much the railroad company should pay for the bridge, and any other terms relating to its construction.

The WITNESS. I do not recollect what its terms were.

Q. Please look at the paper I now show you and say whether that is not the construction agreement.—A. (After examining the paper.) I recollect that that is the purport of an understanding, from the fact that the earnings of the bridge would not pay the interest, and therefore the Northwestern and Nebraska and the Cedar Rapids roads agreed, really, to guarantee any deficiency that there was in the payment of the interest on the cost of the bridge.

Q. The understanding was that these five companies had various interests in this crossing of the Missouri River, and that your company should build the bridge and issue bonds up to the cost of the bridge, and in consideration of their right to use the bridge, they should guarantee, in certain proportions, the payment of the coupons on the bonds issued by you. Then it was also provided that a certain amount of the stock of the company should be issued to each of the companies in the proportion of their respective interests in the bridge. Is not that so?—A. Yes; that is about my understanding of it. Whatever stock was issued was issued in that way.

Q. After that did the Blair Company go on and build the bridge?—A. Yes.

CANNOT REMEMBER THAT HE REMAINED PRESIDENT OF THE BLAIR COMPANY.

Q. Did you remain the president of that company during the construction of that bridge?—A. I do not recollect whether I did remain president of the company or not.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It is only four or five years ago.

The WITNESS. Yes; but I have been president of so many companies, and my name has been used in so many things that I really did not take much interest in it.

Q. Did you retain your interest in the stock of the Blair Bridge Company?—A. I did, and in the stock of the other roads that I was interested in, in their proportion of the stock.

CONTRACTORS.

Q. With whom did the Blair Company make the contract to build the bridge? I mean the actual builders of it. Who built it?—A. That company, I suppose, built it. The Blair Bridge Company built the bridge.

Q. But I mean, with whom did they make their main contracts for iron, steel, and material that entered into the building of the bridge?—A. I think a Pittsburgh company supplied the iron, and I think the stone work was supplied by another contractor who had done work on the Bismarck bridge. I do not recollect his name. The bridge cost $1,200,000, while the Union Pacific Railroad Bridge was mortgaged, I think, for $1,500,000. We built it for clean cash, and there is no security on it except the actual cost of the bridge.

Q. In what books would the actual cost of the bridge appear—the books of the Blair Bridge Company?—A. I think so; I think the cost of the bridge will all appear, regularly. What we wanted was the control. I do not think that stock represents any value. It was only to hold control.

BONDS REPRESENT THE ACTUAL COST.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Do you think the bonds represent the actual cost of the bridge?—A. The bonds represent the actual cost of the bridge, and the value of it. Of course there was some other capital there of the stockholders, to build it, provided they did not negotiate the bonds, but afterwards the bonds were negotiated.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Do you know whether, in order to determine whether bonds should be issued, any statement of the actual cost of this bridge was rendered to those different companies so as to satisfy them that the bridge had actually cost $1,200,000?—A. I think there was. I think they were perfectly satisfied with the actual cost of the bridge, and that it was all paid for.

TRANSFER OF STOCK TO NORTHWESTERN COMPANY.

Q. Do you know what the Northwestern paid to the Sioux City for the stock that was transferred in December, 1885?—A. It was only their guarantee, I guess. I do not think there was much money.

Q. Do you know what the Northwestern paid for it in money?—A. They might have taken their pro rata of bonds. The bonds were issued in lieu of the stock, and the stock might be considered as given over as a pro rata of that guarantee. If there was a deficiency on the payment of the coupons, that company had to pay in proportion to that stock; it would have to contribute towards the deficiency.

Q. As a matter of fact, did not the Northwestern assume all the obligations of the Sioux City, and pay to the Sioux City $37,000 for $37,000 of stock?—A. I want to say this: When we sold out to them the assets were all turned over, and this may have been some indebtedness that the Cedar Rapids Company owed; I will not say about that. When we consolidated our roads with the Northwestern they assumed all the indebtedness, and they assumed the indebtedness of the coupons.

Q. Was there an exception made to the liabilities of the Sioux City that were assumed by the Northwestern?—A. Yes, sir; I believe they did not assume to pay the Government anything.

THE GOVERNMENT BENEFITED.

Q. They excepted the liability to the Government, did they not?—A. Yes. Now, let me tell you, gentlemen, as to how the Government fared in the construction of this road. After this road was constructed I went to Saint Louis and got Captain Lawrence to go to Sioux City with two steamboats. We put some money up there, and after that the Government sent all its Army stores to Sioux City, and a store-house was put up there. He said he had been a very large contractor, and had for some years carried more or less goods for the Government up the Yellowstone, and otherwise, from Saint Louis. The difference in that year was that the Government gained over $1,600,000 between what they paid in taking the goods from Sioux City and what they had paid before.

HOSTILE LEGISLATION.

Q. Do you know whether, in the Congress of the United States or in the States of Nebraska or Iowa, your company has had to encounter hostile legislation at any time?—A. We had considerable litigation on this swamp-land matter. I recollect about that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I do not say litigation, but legislation, as to trying to put down freight or passenger rates.

The WITNESS. Yes; we have had all that trouble with these commissioners. We supposed that when we built a railroad it belonged to us, but I do not know about that now at all, because the commissioners say what we shall have for carrying, whether we make anything by it or not. The result of it is that in various parallel roads, you might say, to-day (except the long roads of the country), that all the others must go into the hands of a receiver and go into insolvency.

Commissioner LITTLER. What Commissioner Anderson wants to know is whether the legislatures of Nebraska or Iowa have at any time attempted to pass legislation restricting the company in its charges for freight and passengers, thereby threatening the revenues of the company.

The WITNESS. Oh, yes; that is done about every year, pretty much. These matters are got up almost every year before the legislature.

Q. Was any bill ever actually passed?—A. I think there have been various bills passed, such as appointing commissioners to see what we should have for carrying freight, &c. These commissioners, of course, are some of them, men who know very little about railroads, and they wish to serve their constituents, you know, who elected them, and if they can cut down freights, &c., they consider that they ought to be re-elected, as they have done the community considerable service. That is about the amount of it.

INFLUENCING LEGISLATION.

Q. In regard to these measures that were so numerous, and, as you say, frequently coming up in the legislature, was it your habit to attend at the capitol of Iowa or Nebraska?—A. No; I never attended.

Q. Did anybody attend on your behalf?—A. We had, sometimes, somebody to go there.

Q. Who attended at Des Moines, Iowa, in behalf of your company?—A. I do not recollect. I think that sometimes we had somebody who was over in Nebraska. That has happened of late years more than formerly. Everybody was at the railroads in former years, but lately every man that took a pig to market wanted a free ticket.

Q. Can you not name some man who attended to these matters for you? Mr. Hall?—A. Mr. Hall was one of our managers, and I think he attended sometimes, and I sometimes wrote letters to members with whom I was acquainted, not only in Nebraska and Iowa, but I used to do that frequently to our members of the legislature who I thought were disposed to do what was right; I would write them on the subject.

Q. Did you have any lawyers engaged in this business?—A. I do not know that we had any in particular. We might have had, but I do not recollect.

Q. To your knowledge, has there ever been any money, or stock, or bonds, or property of any kind or nature used or paid by any agent of the company for the purpose of influencing legislation?—A. No; I never paid anything.

ONLY WANTED WHAT WAS JUST.

Q. And you have no knowledge of any such transaction?—A. No, sir. I might say as to all the transactions with the Government in the early days that I got all my lands from the Government myself. I filed my route, and everything, from beginning to end. I never employed a lawyer. I did it all myself. As a general thing, if I found a bill that had merit in it I found that just men would always work for it and wanted no pay. There was another set, of course, that never did anything without pay, but I never wanted anything of them, because I never wanted anything but what was just.

VOUCHERS FOR DISBURSEMENTS.

Q. Do you know whether during the period of your connection with the company any of its disbursements were not evidenced by sufficient vouchers?—A. I know of none.

Q. Do you know of no case where vouchers were passed without disclosing on their face the names of the persons to whom the money was paid and the purpose to which the money was applied?—A. No; I do not. For my part, if there was any such thing it was kept from me.

MOTIVES OF LEGISLATORS.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. You spoke about a certain proportion of legislators who always acted from high and honorable motives, and did not want to be paid, and then you spoke of another class of fellows who did want pay. How did you happen to know that?—A. I knew that by experience in my own State.

Q. You were speaking of the New Jersey legislators?—A. Yes; and I believe it is the same thing in other States—in Pennsylvania, and I guess in all the others. And so far as New York city is concerned, you know they never did anything there unless they got paid. People here are complaining of poor Sharp. He was only the people's agent, to carry out our objects. He was only an agent. He made a sharp bargain. Without him we should not have got the road in Broadway at all.

MONEY NOT A NECESSARY FACTOR IN LEGISLATION.

Q. Recurring to the class of men who always want pay for their services in legislatures, do you state that from your personal knowledge in relation to the legislators of Iowa or Nebraska, or either of them?—A. No; I do not speak of them so particularly in regard to that matter. I have not had so much experience about the matter with them. When I undertook to build the road across the State of Iowa, raised the money and carried it through, I was rather popular. Dubuque company had failed to build its road. I wrote them a letter to the effect that if they would give me the lands I would build that road. I did not go to the legislature. I think the Iowa company spent a large amount of money that winter, and I think they only got three votes that winter—in the senate, I think, but one. They gave me the land, and I built the Iowa Falls and Sioux City road, which is leased to the Illinois Central Railroad Company.

Q. In all your operations and experience in constructing railroads in those States you have at no time found it necessary to pay, and have not at any time paid, money to influence legislation in any of those States, have you?—A. No; they were willing to give me more legislation than I wanted. I built the roads in Iowa, and it was for clean money. I never sold a share of stock or a bond. I raised the money and built the roads, and when all through I gave every stockholder his pro rata.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Tell us about the telegraph line connected with the Sioux City road.

TELEGRAPH LINE.

The WITNESS. We put up the telegraph line as part of the property.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Did you operate it?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you sell it?—A. Yes; it all went with the property.

Q. Was not the telegraph line sold by your company to the Western Union?—A. Yes; I think it was.

Q. Then it did not go with the railroad, did it?—A. We were to build a telegraph line. We built a telegraph line, and when we ran our telegraph separately we had a great deal of trouble. We built our own railroads and telegraph lines, and whenever we wanted to go over their line they charged us extras or headed us off, and afterward we concluded to sell out to them, but to retain some privileges. For railroad purposes I think we used it free.

Q. Look at the paper I now show you and say whether that is the agreement of the Sioux City Company with the Western Union Company?—A. That appears to be the contract.

Q. Is that the contract, as you recollect it?—A. Yes; I recollect the sale.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The consideration, I think, is $6,250?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Q. Is that your contract for your telegraph line?—A. Yes.

Q. And such privileges as are reserved in the contract?—A. Yes; we reserved all the privileges that the railroad company might want hereafter.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT BONDS.

Q. Did you personally sell the Government bonds, or were they sold to some New York house?—A. I think I sold them mainly myself; still I cannot say about that.

Q. Were not some sold through Winslow, Lanier & Co.?—A. No; I think not.

Q. In whose hands were those bonds that were attached by Mr. Lambard?

The WITNESS. At the time of the attachment?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

The WITNESS. I either had a portion of them at home at Blairstown, or else I had them deposited for safe-keeping in the Park Bank or the City Bank.

Q. Did you not mention some broker's firm here, in your statement made before, on whom the attachment was served?—A. I think there was some broker here who had some money in his hands on call. Drexel was the name—one of that firm. I think I had left some of those bonds in their hands at a certain price. The money, I think, I left in their hands. They were to pay some little interest—3 per cent., or something like that—until I might call for it.

Q. Do you remember at what rate those bonds were sold?—A. Some of them were sold a little under par at one time.

Q. In what year were there any bonds sold under par?—A. About the time that we got those bonds (it must have been about 1869) I think some were sold under par and I think some sold at par.

Q. Were not some sold at quite a premium?—A. No, sir.

Commissioner ANDERSON. United States sixes.

The WITNESS. I know that at that time I got the full market price.

A STATEMENT OF PROCEEDS.

Q. Have you a statement of the proceeds of those bonds?—A. Yes; I think I could show you a statement. If you look at the quotations you will see they were sold at par and some of them under par.

Q. They were sold in 1869 or 1870—all of them—were they not?—A. Yes; I think they were.

Q. They were sold at the full market value?—A. Yes.

FIRST-MORTGAGE BONDS.

Q. Do you yourself now hold any of the company's first-mortgage bonds?—A. I do.

Q. How many bonds do you now hold? I mean if they were the bonds originally issued to you.—A. The bonds originally were. I think I have got some $200,000 of them or a little more. Some I bought and some I gave away.

Q. I am referring now to bonds that were distributed to you as your share. Do you still hold them?—A. I hold a portion of the bonds that I originally got. The others I disposed of.

Q. Do you know whether any of the other distributees hold any of the bonds that were originally distributed to them?—A. No; I do not. I bought some of the bonds of some of them, I recollect. I think there are very few of the original persons who got the bonds that hold any of them I think their circumstances were such that the bonds were parted with.

MEMORANDUM BOOK USED BY WITNESS.

Q. In regard to the memorandum-book you produced a while ago, will you please show it to us, and state how far you can, from that memorandum, give us the items of the cost of construction of this road?—A. I have not got the original book; I said only I knew what the original amount was.

Commissioner ANDERSON. You had the original book here about half an hour ago—a black book.

The WITNESS. Oh, no. That book I was showing you is a book I have brought here, showing you the manner in which, when I am from home, I make entries of my business transactions. You can see it takes a page every day.

Q. Is that a mere sample, or is it the identical book relating to this road?—A. This book is for this year. It is a kind of book that I use every year.

Q. Have you the book corresponding to that in character for the year 1870?—A. I may possibly have it. Sometimes while I am from home I may give checks for $100,000 or more or less, and I enter it in my memorandum book, and when I get home I charge each one.

CALL FOR ORIGINAL BOOKS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The Commission will ask you to look for the book to which you have referred as having been exhibited to the committee appointed to audit your accounts, which you say you afterward took back and placed in a vault, and also will ask you to look for the original memorandum book from which original book the entries were made in the book first above referred to, and if you can find either of those two books it will ask you to produce them before the Commission.

The WITNESS. I will send them to you with pleasure. I have to go west soon, but will examine before I leave home, and write you. We had accounts and correspondence with various roads, and there were baskets full of my correspondence for years and years.

PRESENT PAYING CAPACITY OF SIOUX CITY ROAD.

Q. Is there anything further that you can state in regard to the value of the securities that the United States has for its claim, or with regard to the best adjustment that can be made between the road and the United States?—A. I can only give my opinion as of the present time. I think this road is about worth our bonds, and we could afford to pay the Government about a million dollars for the whole debt. That would be my opinion.

In the first place, there is a road built parallel on the other side of the river—right down the river. The Milwaukee Company is building a road parallel, the Illinois Central is running a road down to Onawa, and the Sioux City road is completely "cut up." So far as the Illinois Central is concerned they will not give you a dollar's worth of business if they can help it. The Milwaukee road used to give us business at Sioux City. They are getting their own roads now, and they give us nothing. I did own the road up to Yankton and Sioux Falls, but eventually I sold it to the Milwaukee road and they agreed to give us their business. Since then they have built their own road, and do not give us any business.

This competition has cut business down to such a point that, absolutely, a great deal of the local business we do does not pay expenses. But we say, here is a thing we had better carry if it pays half the expense of the men that run the road. If we do not get anything more than the actual expenses we had better take it, because it will pay our men. Then we have to live on the profits that are above that. If we did not do that we would have to pay all our expenses out of the profits, and have little business.

ITS VALUE TO THE NORTHWESTERN COMPANY.

Q. Do you not think that the Northwestern, considering the importance of this road to its system, could well afford to pay the Government $1,500,000 for a quittance in full?—A. No; the only valuable part is the part from the Missouri Valley to Fremont. That is of value because of the four or five hundred miles of its Elkhorn road that crosses this road. That is the valuable part. But there is a road now that has been built from Blair to Omaha that really would take the business there. But it is, with the bridge, a very important part to the Northwestern; but the part up to Sioux City is of very little value except as an up and down route along the river.

AMOUNT RECEIVED FOR STOCK.

Q. Are you a director in the Northwestern?—A. Yes.

Commissioner LITTLER. I would like you to state to the Commission just what the Northwestern paid to the company for this Sioux City stock.

The WITNESS. The Cedar Rapids owned the stock, or the greater portion of it, and we turned over all the assets that the Cedar Rapids had, and all that we had with our road, and I do not believe we got much for the stock in the trade—the way we sold out.

Commissioner LITTLER. Refresh your memory and state, to the best of your knowledge, just how that stock was accounted in the trade—at how many dollars.

The WITNESS. I am under the impression that in the deal (from my calculation about my own interest and otherwise) we did not realize over 10 or 15 cents on the dollar.

Q. How many shares of the Sioux City were there?—A. There was $1,200,000 of stock. But the Cedar Rapids did not own all that stock. I do not know how much of it there was. We might have a million and a half of them.

OUTSTANDING STOCK.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Did the Northwestern buy the rest of the stock?

Commissioner LITTLER. The outstanding stock.

The WITNESS. I think not. I guess there is some outstanding yet. It may be, though, that they bought it all in.

Q. Do you know what they paid for the outstanding stock?—A. No. I do not know, but I do not think they paid over 10 or 15 cents. People used to offer me stock for that.

PRESENT VALUE: CONTROL OF ROAD.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. How much is that stock worth to-day, considering the fact that it controls the property—the Northwestern Company having a majority?—A. The only value I consider it to have to-day is for the purpose of controlling the road.

Q. You would not take that for it, would you?—A. Yes; I would sell it for that, only that I want it to control the business.

Q. The Northwestern people would not sell it for that, would they?—A. I do not think they would.

Q. Is it not worth 30 cents, at least, to the Northwestern Company?—A. I do not think so.

Q. Would you, as a director of the Northwestern road, advise the sale of a majority of this stock at 30 cents on the dollar?—A. No; I should not advise them to sell it, because they keep the control of that road by it. They had better keep it, not sell it; but if it was not to keep the control of the road I should be glad to part with it for 10 cents on the dollar. The only object of the bonds of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad was to take care of the people who owned the bonds. We have protected the bonds. We have contributed to pay them.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. By "we" you mean the Northwestern, do you?—A. No. The Northwestern contributed by giving rebates, and all that. But I mean the Cedar Rapids, which has 300 or 400 miles of road, and the Elkhorn, and such roads. We have got to take care of the road. If they could not pay it we had to take hold and borrow the money and pay it.

THE GOVERNMENT DEBT.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. In view of the fact that the Government debt threatens at an early day to wipe out this stock, and thereby wipe out the control of the Northwestern Company in this property, and in view of the fact that the Sioux City forms a part of this system, I again ask you whether, under all the circumstances, the Northwestern could not well afford to pay the Government $1,500,000 for a release of this debt?—A. I do not know what they could do when the time comes around, but at present I should think it would be generous to pay $1,000,000. I am speaking now as if I were the United States. When the Government comes to take the road, if it does take it, we can make as good a bargain as any other road, and if we cannot, the Government could keep it and run it, and it could see how it would come out then. That is all there is about it.

LAND PATENTS: HOW OBTAINED.

Q. Who attended to the business of obtaining patents from the Government for your lands?—A. I did. I got them all out of the Government myself.

Q. What was the course of proceedings? Was it to make application for location?—A. Yes, we located the road. It was all marked off on the books at Washington. They took the map and marked off how much land there was. Then we selected lands in the office, and they approved it, and they gave us patents.

Q. Did you take out patents as soon as they were ready in all cases?—A. I cannot say whether we did right away. They laid some time without being taken out, because we wanted to avoid the tax all we could.

EFFECTS OF HOMESTEAD LAW.

Q. The fact was that if the patent had been issued the lands became taxable?—A. The lands became taxable; and we, of course, wanted to avoid that, because we could sell no lands. Here was the trouble. When the Government passed the homestead law no man would buy an acre of land from us. I think the tax was $700,000 before I sold an acre. The homestead men got such privileges that nobody would buy lands of us. The Government had an immense amount of land lying there. I think on the Iowa Falls road they had half a million acres. But, Lord-'a'-mercy! when the homestead bill went through the homesteaders came there like the locusts of Egypt.

IOWA FALLS CONTRACTING COMPANY.

Q. There was a number of corporations to which you have referred, and we want to know about who the officers and directors of those corporations were. There is the Iowa Falls Contracting Company. Who was president of that company?—A. I was.

Q. Who were the directors, do you remember?—A. I do not remember exactly. They were some of our stockholders.

Q. Do you mean some of the stockholders of the Sioux City Company?—A. I do not know whether of the Sioux City Company. They might have been. The stockholders of the Iowa Contracting Company were, I think, stockholders of the Iowa Falls Company.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Can you send us a full list of those officers when you get home?—A. I do not know that I could. I might have the minutes. But at Cedar Rapids they would be able to tell you.

OTHER COMPANIES CONTROLLED BY THE SAME INTERESTS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. There are the Iowa Falls Contracting Company and the Missouri Valley Land Company?

The WITNESS. That Missouri Valley Land Company was the Missouri and Pacific.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The Sioux City and Pacific Land and Town Lot Company. You were the president of that, I believe?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Commissioner ANDERSON. And it was in the control of the same interest, substantially, as the other companies?

The WITNESS. Yes.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Were you also president of the Missouri Valley Land Company?—A. I guess I was.

Q. Who was president of the River Sioux Town Lot Company? Was it one of the same people who were in the land company, only that it referred to town lots instead of lands?—A. I guess so. I am not certain about that.

PRESIDENT OF FIFTEEN OR SIXTEEN COMPANIES.

Q. Were you president of the Missouri Valley and Blair Railway and Bridge Company?—A. I think so. We had fifteen or sixteen companies; and I believe at one time I was president of all of them.

Q. Were you president of the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad?—A. Yes; I was president of that company, and raised all the money for it, pretty much.

Q. Were you president of the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River?—A. Yes.

CALL FOR A LIST OF OFFICERS OF THE SEVERAL COMPANIES.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Can you not send us a list of the officers of those several companies?—A. At Cedar Rapids I might find all this information, and probably I may at home. I will look and see whether I can hunt them up.

Commissioner LITTLER. I wish you would, and if you have them all, send them.

The WITNESS. Yes. I am obliged to leave for Iowa to-morrow or next day. I am bound over in recognizance there to appear on behalf of the State. I have been building roads out there. I can get the particulars, undoubtedly, of these officers, either at Cedar Rapids, or I may have them at home in some entries. I used to have them all, but this is so long back that really I hardly know where to look.

Commissioner ANDERSON. In regard to those two books, I would like you to write me a note here in case you cannot find them, saying that you cannot find them.

The WITNESS. Yes; I will give you all the information I can, with pleasure.

AS TO THE WISDOM OF BUILDING BRANCH ROADS.

Q. Will you give us your opinion as to the wisdom of the construction of the branch lines on the Union Pacific road, and state what effect, whether good or bad, they have had upon the main line with reference to its earnings?—A. Some of their branches have contributed to them, and others that they have built have been a loss to them. That is my view about it. I think they have spread out entirely too far.

Q. What is your judgment of the wisdom of a great trunk line building branch roads or feeders?—A. It is only to secure territory that it should be advisable to build. I would never build a spur road if it was not to secure territory; not one.

Q. That is what they are built for, is it not?—A. Yes; but a good many have built these spurs as matter of speculation.

Q. But where there is valuable territory which can only be made tributary to the main line through the construction of a branch line, and where the branch line is built with that view, and upon economical business principles, is it or not a wise project, as a rule?—A. Yes; it is wise. I have done a great deal of it myself. It is to hold territory. We get the long haul on the main line, and if that branch will pay merely running expenses we consider that we are well off. Then we have got the business, and have got it on the long haul.

Q. So that it sometimes pays, does it, to build a branch line, although the earnings of the branch line, separated from the main line, do not really pay interest on the cost of construction?—A. It would be valueless so far as paying interest on cost was concerned.

A WISE INVESTMENT.

Q. And yet it would be a wise investment?—A. A wise investment for a main road. I have done it. Although the branch line was a loss the business it made for the main line made up for that.

Q. In other words, you got a long haul on the main line of traffic which otherwise you would not have had?—A. Yes; a long haul. It would give us a full load to pull. There is no road between here and Chicago that could live except on the through business. When I ran the Delaware and Lackawanna road I made money at 2 cents a ton per mile, and lost money on the way business at 5 cents per ton a mile. We never started from the coal mines until we got all we could pull to the New York market. There the engineer got his dinner and took all the empty cars back.

LONG AND SHORT HAUL.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. It is the long haul that pays, is it not?—A. Yes. When we started to take out the local business, the first 10 miles out we had to stop; and perhaps the car for that station might be in the center of the train, and that had to be got out, and so the engineer would fool away his time all the way down, especially if he was a little green and did not get the cars well arranged. Take a road 20 miles long, and if you get 10 tons on that 20 miles you can take it for 1½ cents a ton; that is $3 for a car; and probably not a full load at that. Even if you get a full load it would only be $3; and it would not pay the grease for the axles. You cannot get a team to-day to carry under 20 cents per ton per mile; but if you wanted them to take a ton 1 mile, and then unload it, they would not take it. But if you wanted them to carry it all the way, they would do so. And now when we take freight for 1½ cents a ton people complain. If you charged the prorate it would cut off the West. This long and short haul principle, as they attempt to apply it, would ruin the West. The Union Pacific used to charge a shilling a mile.

Q. Do you consider each of these branch lines of the Union Pacific a loss?—A. They built a branch line—some of that line that went to Den-

Q. (Interposing.) To Leadville, do you mean?—A. Yes; some of the mountain road they have got.

Q. You are not sufficiently familiar with them to state whether they are profitable or not?—A. No.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Then I will not ask you about them.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD BE GENEROUS.

The WITNESS. The Union Pacific has got to come down in its prices. It values its stock at something, but I do not know what it will come to in time. If the Government will be generous to it, and give it a long time to pay, paying a little every year, it would come out all right.

Commissioner LITTLER. Paying a little of the principal, and the interest every year?

The WITNESS. Yes. The company probably could do that. As I have said, with the Northwestern, that would be about as much as it could afford to pay. That would be about as much as $2,600,000 for the road, which I think would be about all that it is worth. Still, after a long while, the company might do better.

Q. Do you know how much you owe the Government?—A. I cannot say.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It will be about $5,000,000, I believe, in 1897.

COST OF RUNNING A RAILROAD.

The WITNESS. I do not know how much. I know this, it is pretty hard work to run a road. It takes a good deal of capital to run these roads. Take the case of a Western road; if goods go from Philadelphia to Sioux City you have got your little prorate to pay. About nine-tenths of it has to be paid to the Philadelphia road at the end of the month. When the goods come there the merchant may not have the money, and does not take out the goods, and so you have got to raise the money to pay. Then if you burn wood you must get your supply a year ahead. You have no idea how much capital it takes to run a road, after all is said and done. You have got to pay your men every month, and the other railroad expects to get paid every month. I have had experience enough to know that you need a great deal of capital to run a road. That used to pinch us wonderfully on this Sioux City and Pacific Railroad. The Government pays nothing. Its goods all come there and have to be carried. The other roads pay sometimes six months after convenience. [Laughter.]

The Commission then adjourned, to meet upon the call of the chair.

The Commission met upon the call of the chair, all the Commissioners being present.

A SUGGESTION FROM MR. STANFORD.

The Commission received the following telegram from Mr. Leland Stanford:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., October 20, 1887.

To ROBERT E. PATTISON, E. ELLERY ANDERSON, and DAVID T. LITTLER, United States Pacific Railway Commission, Room 33, No. 10 Wall Street, New York:

In your examination of myself, you asked me to suggest some way of settlement between the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Government. Now that the testimony has closed, and, as I am advised, nothing material has developed in conflict with the equities as established by the testimony taken in California, I desire to suggest that the Commission report in favor of the appointment of a proper court to consider the equities existing between the Government and the Central Pacific Railroad Company, as inquired into in accordance with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, and render final judgment thereon. Then the question what further legislation may be needed can be fairly considered. I consider that the act of Congress directing inquiry into the equities erects a different standard by which to measure the relations between the railroad company and the Government from the purely legal relation theretofore existing.

LELAND STANFORD.

TESTIMONY OF EFFINGHAM H. NICHOLS.

EFFINGHAM H. NICHOLS, being duly sworn and examined, testified as follows:

The WITNESS. I should like to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. We shall be glad to hear you.

The WITNESS. I received a letter from Commissioner Anderson inquiring of me two things: First, the early history of the Union Pacific Railroad, Central Branch, and, in the next place, the cost of the road. On those two matters, with what time I have had, receiving the note only yesterday morning, I am prepared to give a very concise and succinct statement, if you will allow it, which is full of interest, and which embraces all the facts of my relations to the road and its history down to the time we parted with it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am perfectly satisfied with that arrangement, reserving the control of the examination afterwards, when you have finished your statement.

The WITNESS. That will be satisfactory, of course.

HISTORY OF CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC.

My first statement, then, is a statement of my relations with the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad, and its history from the time of my connection with it until the time that a majority of the stock was sold, as I afterwards understood, to the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

My attention was first called to what was then called the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company in the year 1865. In connection with Mr. William C. Wetmore, of this city, and Mr. R. M. Pomeroy, of Boston, now deceased, and Chauncey Vibbard, representing Mr. Erastus Corning and a few others, a conference was had in regard to the matter. We were told that this company had been in existence for a long period of time—I forget how long; that it was chartered under an act of the Territory of Kansas bearing date 1859; that it was entitled to certain subsidies in bonds and lands under the Pacific railroad acts of 1862 and 1864; that its visible assets or available assets would be, in pursuance of those acts of Congress, 1,600 of first-mortgage bonds, 1,600 of United States bonds, and $1,000,000 of stock. It was capitalized with $1,000,000 of stock, besides the land.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The lands to be granted?

The WITNESS. The lands to be granted. We examined into this matter with great care. We were told that we should have to take it subject to certain existing obligations, which would require them to retain about 400 of the first-mortgage bonds, and also that it was subject to certain contracts for lands. We directed our attention at once to inquiring into the matter and finding out what the rights were of this company. We found it to be true that its charter was a Territorial charter granted by the Territory of Kansas. The rights that were given to the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad Company under the acts of Congress of 1862 and 1864, which authorized it to continue or to build a line west of Atchison 100 miles, and for that purpose to use any charter which had been or might be granted by the State of Kansas, we found had all been assigned to this company. Then we also examined and found that the general plan of the Pacific Railroad had been completed by the filing of the maps. We found that, upon an examination of the acts of Congress, they were acts which, according to their title, provided for the construction of a railroad, a unit, and that the different parts of the road which had been assigned to different companies were integral portions of that unit. We found that the maps were completed, as I have stated, and therefore that the plan of the Pacific Railroad was perfect and complete.

In discussion with Mr. William C. Wetmore, our attention was particularly drawn to this question: Suppose, after we had completed our 100 miles of road, that any of these other companies should fail to complete their portions, might we not be in trouble and be left standing in the wilderness? We then directed our attention to the sixteenth section of the act of 1864, which not only provided that any two or more companies might be consolidated and become the successors of all the rights of the individual companies, but also provided in the strongest and most emphatic language that in case the companies did not consolidate, any of them, such company, upon the completion of its road, "shall be entitled to continue and extend its road until a connection shall be reached, and shall be entitled to lands and bonds."

AS TO THE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT.

We were further informed that a construction contract, which was afterwards abandoned, had already been made by those previous parties with a man by the name of William Osborn. We examined into that question, and found that the interests in that contract were divided into sixty-fourths.

I will state here, because it comes in appropriately, that afterwards we concluded to abandon that contract entirely. We obtained the consent of all parties to abandon that contract, and to let the company go on and build its road in good faith, the same as an individual would, upon certain terms and conditions, which I will hereafter state.

At that time Mr. Samuel C. Pomeroy (ex-Senator Pomeroy) was the president of the road. A man by the name of Willis Gaylord was the treasurer, and a man by the name of James Wadsworth was the secretary. We concluded to go into this scheme, and we took different interests in this contract.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. In what contract?—A. In this construction contract with Mr. William Osborn, which, as I have stated, we afterwards canceled.

Q. In the Osborn contract?—A. In the Osborn contract. We went on and paid in about $600,000.

Q. Will you be a little more specific just there as to what this contract was? If you have a copy of it we would like to see it.—A. I have no copy of it. I do not know where there is any copy.

Q. Who were the parties?—A. It was a contract entirely between that railroad company and this William Osborn. These interests were assigned by William Osborn to different parties. I will endeavor to recall those names before I leave, and give them to you, as far as I can. There were a great many of them.

Q. Can you state what Mr. Osborn was to receive from the company and what he was to do?—A. He was to receive all the bonds that were remaining.

Q. That is, the first-mortgage bonds and the United States bonds?—A. The first-mortgage bonds and the United States bonds, and the proceeds of the capital stock, and I think some portion of the lands.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. The stock itself?—A. Yes, sir; the stock itself.

Q. Not the proceeds?—A. Virtually that contract became absolutely null and void, for reasons which I will give you.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. In order to ascertain the effect of the change, we want to understand what the contract was. In consideration of the first-mortgage bonds, of the United States bonds, and of the stock itself, or its proceeds, as the case may be, was Mr. Osborn to build and equip and deliver 100 miles of road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after the contract was made, he assigned most of the interests in that contract to certain parties associated with yourself?—A. Not all of them. He retained four sixty-fourths.

Q. Did he assign all except four sixty-fourths?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which were subsequently canceled?—A. Which were subsequently canceled. As I have already stated, we went on and paid in about $600,000 cash.

Q. Either to Mr. Osborn or for what he had done?—A. We paid to Willis Gaylord.

VIRTUAL CANCELLATION OF THE CONTRACT.

Q. Was it not to meet the actual expenses?—A. That was to meet the actual expenses of building the road. With that condition of things we became dissatisfied; that is, this new organization, if I may so speak, became dissatisfied. The result was that Mr. Ralph M. Pomeroy, of Boston, who is now deceased, became president of the road; I was elected the nominal treasurer, although I was counsel of the road and could not give it attention. Mr. Thomas M. Sother, who is now somewhere in Southern California, and who is an aged man, being upwards of eighty years of age, I think, and feeble in body now, was elected secretary and was the acting treasurer of the road. Also, at that juncture, the parties who were interested in the contract, at my instance, having paid $600,000, agreed to surrender this contract—all except Mr. Osborn. We bought him out and the contract was virtually canceled.

Q. Can you give us the date of this transaction?—A. The books would show, but the books are in possession of our successors; that is, the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

Q. Please examine the extract from the minutes of December 1, 1868, and see if that refreshes your mind as to the time when this occurred.—A. I have read a part of that.

Q. The question is, whether that refreshes your mind as to the period when the Osborn contract was altered or changed?—A. I think it very likely that that was about the time.

Q. About December, 1868?—A. About the time, although it had been virtually abandoned before that. I know that papers were prepared by which these parties agreed to cancel. Where those papers are I do not know.

Q. Before you proceed to state exactly what occurred, will you please explain to us the physical condition of the road at this time, and how far it had been constructed?—A. That I could not state, except by reference to the papers. I know that the road was nearly, if not quite, completed. I think this will all come in in my statement, if you will allow me to go on with my statement.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Very well, you may proceed.

CONDITIONS OF CANCELLATION.

The WITNESS. This contract was canceled upon conditions that, having paid in $600,000, six thousand shares of the capital stock should be issued to the parties that had paid in that amount of money; also upon the condition, as respects the company, that the remaining $400,000 should be subscribed for and paid for in cash, provided, as a further inducement to this cancellation, that 400 of the first-mortgage bonds should be divided up among the stockholders. And I think also it provided that the remaining first-mortgage bonds should be purchased by those parties at a certain price; but I am not sure about that.

Q. Was it not also understood that the 6,000 shares which were to be issued to the parties who had paid the $600,000 were to entitle them to their pro rata interest of all the profits and advantages which would accrue to them under the Osborn contract?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It is so stated on the minutes.

The WITNESS. Well, I refer to the final action, which I may have confused with that in regard to it. In the year 1866 we were informed that there was a bill pending before Congress which had been introduced by the Kansas Pacific Railroad, which might possibly affect our rights. We went to Washington, and I was the counsel of the company, having been employed from the beginning. We presented a protest against the passage of that bill as a matter of precaution, although, upon examination, we found it had no effect upon us. That bill was passed.

PASSAGE OF THE SMOKY HILL BILL.

After the passage of that bill we began to fear lest parties at Washington in authority might think that that Smoky Hill bill affected our rights in some way. In order to make ourselves secure and safe in the matter, we at once applied to the honorable Benjamin R. Curtis, one of the most distinguished lawyers in his day, for his advice in regard to the effect of the Smoky Hill bill. We obtained from him his opinion, which we have in print. It was to the effect that it did not affect our roads in any way, but that we would have the right, after the completion of the road, to go on and continue our road to a connection with the Union Pacific at the 100th meridian, and receive lands and bonds. It was thought advisable we should at once apply to the Secretary of the Interior, then Mr. Browning, and file a map, and ask to have our lands withdrawn.

PROCEEDINGS BEFORE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Q. You mean withdrawn from the right of public settlement?—A. Yes, sir; withdrawn from the right of pre-emption and settlement. My impression is we had no formal argument before Mr. Browning. I think he went out of office without any formal decision being rendered, but upon that subject I am not certain. We went subsequently before Mr. Cox. Before we got there, I had applied to Mr. Curtis to review his argument, or at least his opinion, and to give us a more full opinion upon the subject, which he did, confirming his first opinion. We then went before Secretary Cox, of the Interior, and the matter was argued before him by Mr. Evarts and myself. I have stenographic copies of his argument and my argument on that occasion. Mr. Cox must have referred the matter to Attorney-General Hoar, and there is every reason to believe, as I can show you from the papers, that Attorney-Gen-and Hoar held that we were entitled to extend our road and to receive lands and bonds. But no formal opinion was given to Mr. Cox. Mr. Cox states, in his opinion, that he was unable to reach that clearness in regard to the matter that he would desire, and therefore could not withdraw the land. But he stated that our equities were such that it furnished a case, or a strong claim, for Congressional legislation. We immediately after that prepared a bill which, in substance, according to the best of my recollection, was this: That nothing contained in the Rocky Hill bill should in any way affect the rights of the Central Branch Company, under the acts of Congress, and particularly under the sixteenth section of the act of 1864.

AS TO AUTHORIZATION TO EXTEND THE ROAD.

Q. In connection with that, will you read the lines which, in your judgment, authorized you to claim that, if a consolidation did not go into effect, the Central Branch would have the right to continue?—A. It is the strongest language that mortal man could draw, and is in these words. The sixteenth section, you will observe, commences in this way:

And be it further enacted, That any two or more of the companies authorized to participate in the benefits of this act are hereby authorized at any time to unite and consolidate their organizations, as the same may be or shall be, upon such terms and conditions, and in such manner as they may agree upon.

Then the act goes on to state that they shall have the right, in case any other company shall not finish the portion of the road assigned to it, to go on and build the road and to receive the lands and bonds.

Q. That the consolidated company should have that right?—A. Yes, sir. Now towards the close, about half a page from the close of that section, you will see:

And in case any company authorized thereto shall not enter into such consolidated organization, such company, upon the completion of its road, as hereinbefore provided, shall be entitled to, and is hereby authorized to, continue and extend the same under the circumstances, and in accordance with the provisions of this section, and to have all the benefits thereof, as fully and completely as are herein provided, touching such consolidated organization.

That gave us the right to go on and have our bonds, &c., on the plan as filed and fixed before we entered into our undertaking, and before we spent a dollar on the road.

OPPOSITION BY KANSAS PACIFIC.

As I have stated, we went before Congress with an act of the character I have mentioned. We found, to our surprise, that we were bitterly opposed in Congress by the Kansas Pacific Company—that was the inference—and also by another company, the name of which I cannot fully recollect, but I think it was called Saint Joseph and Western, which road lay a little to the north of us and was interested in lands. The result of matters before the Senate was that we were defeated by a vote of 27 in our favor to 28 against us. The leading minds of the Senate were all with us, and their comments and remarks are in one of those bound volumes which I will leave with you.

Under the advice of the Hon. William Pitt Fessenden, the Senator from Maine, who seemed to take a great interest in this matter, and who came to see me at my rooms, we went again before the then Secretary, Mr. Delano, and presented our petition, having first obtained an order from the President to review and to examine into this matter, and Mr. Evarts again, with myself, argued the matter before Secretary Delano. I think we were assisted at that time by the Hon. Daniel W. Gouch, of Boston, formerly a member of Congress; also by Mr. George S. Hale, a prominent lawyer of Boston. Mr. Delano, after giving the matter consideration, referred it to the then Attorney-General, Akerman. Owing to some engagements of Mr. Evarts, I went before Akerman with ex-Attorney-General Hoar, and in that way learned the facts in regard to his opinion, which I have also the evidence of here, because I afterwards obtained his opinion.

We went before Mr. Akerman. We argued the matter, and we were opposed in that argument by Mr. Williams, formerly of the Senate, who afterwards became Attorney-General, which fact it is necessary for me to state here for certain reasons. Before any opinion was given Mr. Attorney-General Akerman was asked to yield up his portfolio, and Mr. Williams came in as Attorney-General, and the matter of course came before Mr. Williams. But he could not act, and it was therefore referred to Mr. Bristow.

Mr. Bristow, when Mr. Hoar and I came before him, stated to us that he had had an extraordinary conversation with Mr. Akerman, and he did not think it was proper for him to proceed; but after some conversation he concluded he would hear the case. We went on and argued the case at length. Finally, he indorsed the papers—and it is a matter of public record—and declined to decide the case.

The matter then came up before Solicitor-General Phillips. We went before him, and the book which Judge Dillon holds in his hands contains all the proceedings which were then had before Mr. Phillips. That book contains stenographic copies of my argument, of Mr. Benjamin R. Curtis's argument, who succeeded me, and of Mr. Evarts's closing argument. It also contains Mr. Phillips's opinion in full, confirming our right to continue our road and to receive lands and bonds.

MAP APPROVED BY PRESIDENT GRANT.

Under the acts of Congress it was then necessary for us to take our map to the President, General Grant, for his signature. It had to receive his approval. The map was sent by the Secretary of the Interior to the President and it was signed by him, and the President became functus officio. The act was complete, and our rights were acknowledged by the Government.

Q. In what year was that?—A. That must have been in the year 1873, the early part, I think. December 12, 1872, was the time the argument was made. The opinion of Mr. Phillips is dated January 10, 1873, and the map was signed very shortly afterwards—within a week or two afterwards.

Q. How far did the map extend westward?—A. It extended to a connection with the one hundredth meridian, as provided by the act of Congress.

Q. Did it extend to a connection with the Union Pacific?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What point would that be? Would it be at the North Platte, about?—A. The best way to call your attention to that is to look at that map. There [indicating] was our road running out 100 miles and we connected there.

Q. Where you have a flag up?—A. Yes, sir.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The flag was never planted there.

The WITNESS. The flag was never planted there by us. We surveyed it. We had already surveyed the route. It was done by our surveyor, Mr. Gunn, under the protection of a company of 80 mounted cavalry whom General Grant and General Sherman gave us for that purpose.

AFTERWARD PRESIDENT GRANT TORE OFF HIS SIGNATURE.

The next thing that came in order was a matter that was attended with great surprise. Mr. Boutwell, who was then Secretary of the Treasury, under the pressure of public clamor and under the pressure of the public debt—whose motto seemed to be the reduction of the national debt, right or wrong—requested the President to withdraw that map. The President sent to the office for the map and tore off his signature and put it in the drawer in his official room in the White House and the matter was referred to Mr. Boutwell. The matter has remained there with Mr. Boutwell to this day. I went to the President and asked for an explanation. He said to me, "Mr. Nichols, do not be alarmed. Do not be worried. This will be all right." That was the last conversation I had with the President upon the subject.

In that condition of things, having already paid in $1,000,000 for our capital stock and finding ourselves the subject of public clamor, and owning and acknowledging and feeling it to be one of the worst exhibitions (I mean this tirade against the Pacific Railroads) that I have ever known or that this country has ever experienced excepting where grave judges have sat and condemned poor helpless women for witchcraft, we began to look into the situation. We tried to save this wreck and to see what could be done.

THE CAUSE OF SUCH ACTION.

Q. You have not exactly explained so that we can fully understand what it was that occurred that prevented any accomplishment of your designs of extension. Were you not informed that, for reasons that were deemed satisfactory by the officers in Washington, it was concluded that you had not established your title and that they desired to reverse their action?—A. No, sir; the President was informed by the Solicitor-General that we had this right in every respect; and what took place I have already stated. And we were informed by Columbus Delano, Secretary of the Interior, that he had recalled the map. I went to the President to see if it was so, and he showed me the piece of paper, which was about that size [indicating], which lay in the drawer, and told me not to be alarmed.

Q. Have you had no other conversation with other officers so as to be able to give us some explanation of the probable motive for this unusual action?—A. No, sir; never heard of any explanation.

Q. Do you think it was absolute caprice?—A. I think it was the pressure of public clamor against the railroads, which was then in its height, was the cause of this action.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Through whom was it executed?

The WITNESS. What executed?

The CHAIRMAN. This thought, this public clamor, which led up to the tearing off of the signature and the withdrawal of the support of the Government. Was it at the suggestion of Mr. Boutwell, who was Secretary?—A. All I know in regard to that is that Mr. Delano told me that the matter had been recalled and referred to the Secretary of the Treasury. That is all I know in regard to it. The matter of public clamor is a matter of public notoriety which requires no statement from me.

EFFORTS TO SECURE A REMEDY.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Did you make no efforts to have your rights, as you considered them, established by the opinion of Solicitor-General Phillips and by the actual fact of the affixed signature of President Grant? Did you make no further efforts?—A. We seemed to have been stuck at that point, and I returned to my constituents and had a conversation with them. It was suggested that perhaps neither I nor Mr. Curtis nor Mr. Evarts had the necessary experience in such matters that was necessary to move things along, and it was suggested that I should not return to Washington, and that Mr. Day should take my place, which I at once acquiesced in, as I was too much interested in the affair to run any risk in regard to the matter. Mr. Day went to Washington in company with Mr. Henry M. Alexander, both prominent lawyers in this city. But nothing was accomplished, except that Mr. Day did succeed in having us omitted from the effects of the Thurman act. I think that is true.

I now return to the thought of what we should do.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Before you proceed, let me ask this: How much land did you claim under the act of Congress?—A. We claimed the full amount. There was only, I think, one-tenth or one-twelfth of it left.

Q. How much land did you get?—A. I can not recollect. The land-books would show. They are in possession of the company, to which I have no access.

Q. What portion of the land do you claim to have failed to get?—A. I should think it was more than nine-tenths.

Q. You never did get it?—A. Never did get it; no, sir. We never had any relief in any way whatever.

THE LIMITATION IN THE LAW AS TO LENGTH OF ROAD.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Before you leave this subject, what answer is there to the objection that there is a limitation in the act applicable to the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad, and to the company that might derive any rights from it, by which limitation it is provided that "in no event shall lands or bonds be given to said company, as herein directed, to aid in the construction of their said road for a greater distance than 100 miles?" What answer is there to the objection that the act itself fixes an absolute limitation of 100 miles applicable to your company? This is section 13 of the act of 1862, and applies directly to the company in which you are interested.—A. The act of 1864, very obviously.

Q. The act of 1864 did not mention that portion of it?—A. It referred to any portion—any company—

Be it further provided, That any two or more of the companies authorized to participate in the benefits of this act—

That, of course, applied to every company connected with it. And then it says:

And in case any company authorized thereto—

We were authorized to enter into this act and have the benefits of it—shall not enter into such consolidated organization, such company, upon the completion of its roads, as hereinbefore provided, shall be entitled, &c.

That word "entitled" is a strong word.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Shall be entitled to what?—A. (Reading:)

shall be entitled to, and is hereby authorized to, continue and extend the same under the circumstances, and in accordance with the provisions of this section, and to have all the benefits thereof, as fully and completely as are herein provided, touching such consolidated organization.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It seems impossible to imagine that a road which was restricted to 100 miles west of Atchison under any circumstances could be intended as being included within the permission to consolidate with the Pacific Railroad and to continue indefinitely. The subject-matters are absolutely inconsistent.

The WITNESS. Bear with me one moment. This act is entitled, "An act to construct a railroad"—a unit. The parts assigned to each company were integral portions of that unit. We built 100 miles, and the Kansas Pacific Company was required by law to so locate its road as to connect with us at the end of 100 miles. We did build our road.

WAS THE KANSAS PACIFIC REQUIRED TO CONNECT?

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Where do you find any provision in the act that requires the Kansas Pacific to so locate its road as to unite with you at a distance of 100 miles?—A. I will give it to you.

And the railroad through Kansas——

Q. What section is that?—A. Section 9 of the first act.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The act of 1862.

The WITNESS. The act of 1862, section 9. If you will go to section 3, about fifteen lines from the top——

Commissioner LITTLER. Read the portion you refer to.

The WITNESS:

And said railroad through Kansas [which is the name given to the Kansas Pacific road] shall be so located between the mouth of the Kansas River, as aforesaid, and the aforesaid point on the one-hundredth meridian of longitude that the several railroads from Missouri and Iowa herein authorized to connect with the same can make connection within the limits prescribed in this act, provided the same can be done without deviating from the general direction of the whole line to the Pacific coast.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The Kansas Pacific was to build to the one-hundredth meridian, which was 394 miles west of Kansas City, and there to make connection with the Union Pacific. A reference to the Iowa and other railroads, which were authorized to build and make connection, cannot apply to a railroad which was only authorized to extend 100 miles west of Atchison, because you were not going within 150 miles of any connection.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir, we were. That is a matter of fact. By the bye, the locating of that road was subject to the approval of the President, if, by reason of the position of the country, in any way they could not come exactly within 100 miles; and those few miles of road it may be, we would have had to build. But, in submitting this matter to counsel, there has never been the least doubt in their opinions. When we went to Mr. Curtis about it we wanted advice. We did not ask for an opinion in our favor. There has never been any question in regard to this.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I suppose you will return to the question of the cost of the road subsequently, because that is what we are mainly interested in.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; this first part of my statement simply concerns the history of my connection with the road.

Q. Are these 100 miles only the part that is covered with road?—A. Yes, sir; 100 miles. We went beyond the Blue River to a place called—I have forgotten its name. The meridian of Fort Riley, I think, is 87½ miles. I can give you that exactly.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I do not know that it is material. We cannot rule, very well, on anything that the Secretary of the Treasury or General Grant has done.

The WITNESS. But he was functus officio after having performed that act. The opinion of Mr. William Whiting—some of you may have known him; he is dead now, but he was a very prominent counselor at Boston—was obtained by Senator Wilson, and it is in one of those books.

THE BUILDING OF EXTENSIONS.

After this condition of things we looked at our property. I, as counsel to the company, felt a great interest in it; but I was also interested because I owned about one-tenth of it, having put in about $100,000. We concluded that the first thing we must do was to stop payment on our first-mortgage bonds, as we had no money with which to pay it. Mr. Pomeroy and I had lent the company $400,000. We concluded to fund the coupons of our first-mortgage bonds for a certain period of time; for something like three and a half years. During this time the country began to fill up, and we were induced to go on and build extensions to this road. We did build extensions under different charters, embracing altogether 288 miles, I think it was. We will call it, in round numbers, 300 miles. These extensions I was requested afterwards to consolidate, which I did.

Q. Under what name?—A. Under the name of the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific Railroad Company, which embraced all the extensions, excepting one, which ran up to the north and which is called the Jewel County and Western Railroad Company.

Q. Will you give the names of the consolidated branches?—A. I have given them.

Commissioner LITTLER. Give the names of the constituent companies.

The WITNESS. I am unable to do that. There were, I think, six of them. After this consolidation was effected we, who had always acted in perfect good faith, instead of leasing the Central Branch to the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific, leased the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific to the Central Branch, so as to increase its value and increase its resources and increase its income.

Q. Whom do you mean by we?—A. I refer to the gentlemen who were in the management of this thing.

Q. Do you mean the controlling powers of the consolidated branches?—A. Yes, sir. I mean the controlling powers in the consolidated branches.

THE MEN WHO CONTROLLED.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who were the controlling powers?—A. Mr. Oliver Ames came in late and was a powerful man in the enterprise. Mr. R. M. Pomeroy was very able, looking very carefully after everything.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We only want their names.

The WITNESS. There was Mr. Erastus Corning. There was Mr. Vibbard. There was a man by the name of Charles Gould. There was Mr. Henry Day. There was a man by the name of William C. Wetmore, and a man by the name of Greenleaf.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Do you mean Augustus W. Greenleaf?—A. Yes, sir. Then there were also John A. Stewart and Nathaniel Thayer, of Boston.

Q. Do you mean John A. Stewart of the United States Trust Company?—A. Yes, sir; also ex-Governor William Claflin and Mr. George S. Hale.

Q. A. S. Barnes?—A. A. S. Barnes; he came in later. After awhile——

Q. Can you locate these years a little more definitely? "After awhile" does not express anything definite.—A. About the year 1880 Mr. Oliver Ames came to me and asked me if I would sell, or agree to sell, to him my stock, together with a controlling interest, whatever I had, in the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific at the same price at which he should sell his. I agreed to do so.

Q. Can you tell us in what year this was?—A. I should think it was about 1880.

Q. Was it just before the actual transaction occurred with which we are all familiar?

The WITNESS. Which transaction do you refer to?

Commissioner ANDERSON. The actual sale of the interest which you described as having been to the Union Pacific, and which appears to have been first made to Mr. Gould.

A. Yes, sir.

MR. AMES'S TRANSACTION IN THE STOCK.

Q. Was it just before that?—A. Yes; some little time before that. I think it was several months, however, before Mr. Ames concluded his transaction. The result was that I got $250 a share for my interest—$250 for each share of my stock. But that statement requires explanation.

Q. Two hundred and thirty-eight dollars, was it not?—A. Two hundred and fifty dollars. But this statement, as ordinarily understood, is not true, because there was sold with it a ratable portion of the other 300 miles—of the stock representing the other 300 miles. In other words, the majority of the capital stock of the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific road, and of the Jewel County road went with it, and what we therefore received, proportionally, was, say, 62½ on the dollar.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. For all the stock?—A. For all the stock. But it had all been concentrated—its chief value lay in the Central Branch Union Pacific—by reason of our own act.

Q. What was the entire capital stock of the consolidated company at that time?—A. That I could not tell you. I think we only issued $6,000 of shares per mile. There were sixteen first-mortgage bonds and $6,000 of stock per mile, while on the Central Branch there was a first mortgage of $16,000 a mile and the stock amounted to $10,000 a mile.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Will you please explain how you figure this 62½ per cent.? How many shares did you put in of the Central Branch and of the Consolidated Company?—A. My statement is this, that what was equivalent to, or what bore the same relation to the other portion of the road, was sold, if there had been $10,000 of the stock issued to the mile. There was not. There was only $6,000. If it had all been capitalized alike it would have been about 62½ per cent., because there were only 383 miles all told.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Then, I understand that there was a certain amount of the Central Branch sold, and that represented 100 miles of construction. But regarding the ownership of the Central Branch as carrying with it something like 250 miles of consolidated branches, the beneficial ownership of which was substantially in the Central Branch, then if this consolidated branch railroad had had the same amount of stock issued per mile as had been issued on Central Branch, and you added the stock together of the Central Branch and of the consolidated company, you would find that the $250 per share for stock of the Central branch, would be equivalent to about 63½ per cent.

The WITNESS. Sixty-five per cent.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It would have been equivalent to 65 per cent. on the aggregate of the stock of both classes?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Do you mean that the amount of money which you received for your Central Branch stock, if spread over all the stock, would amount to about 65 cents on the dollar?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what you mean?—A. Yes, sir. I will here state that the Central Branch stock sold at one time as low, after it had all been paid for in full, as 15 cents on the dollar.

SELLING PRICE OF STOCK.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. It sold within two or three months after your sale as low as 100, did it not?—A. I know nothing about that. There was so much bid for a controlling interest in the stock.

Q. But I am speaking of the value of the stock in the market. Did it not sell as low as $100 within three months after that sale?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did it not sell as low as 80 cents on the dollar within three months before the transaction?—A. I should think it did, and lower still.

Q. Do you know of a sale at 160 the day before you got 250?—A. No, sir; I was not a party to any transaction of buying or selling at that time, and know nothing about the details of any of them. I simply attended to my own matters.

THE COUNSEL EMPLOYED BY THE COMPANY.

I would like to add here that we employed, at Washington or elsewhere, the following counsel: Mr. Benjamin R. Curtis, Mr. Daniel W.

Beach, Mr. George S. Hale, Mr. William M. Evarts, Mr. E. Rockwell Hoar, Mr. William Whiting. Also we employed Mr. Thomas A. Hendricks and Mr. Beverly Johnson, after they were out of office. Mr. Pomeroy employed General Craig and Peter Abel, and a prominent lawyer at Quincy, whose name I cannot recollect. Mr. Henry Day, as I stated, was also employed, and so was Mr. Henry M. Alexander.

Commissioner LITTLER (jocularly). I guess your case failed for want of sufficient and able counsel.

The WITNESS. It would seem so.

COST OF THE ROAD.

On the second point on which Mr. Anderson wanted to make inquiries I will give all the information I can, but it is not definite. But I think it will be found that the general outline which I will give is correct.

The available resources of the road, I have already stated, were the first-mortgage bonds, the second-mortgage bonds, and the stock, making altogether, if we had realized par for them, $4,200,000.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. That is, $1,600,000 of the first-mortgage bonds, $1,600,000 of the United States bonds, and $1,000,000 stock?—A. Yes, sir. For the amount of our counsel fees, and the board of myself and counsel, and printing—I think our printing bill must have been $10,000—and stenographer's fees, and traveling expenses, I should have to refer to the books to ascertain; but I should think it must have amounted to $100,000. The commissions and interest on loans made from time to time, during construction, must have amounted to $100,000. This is only general. The interest on bonds, before we made default, must have amounted to $150,000 or perhaps $250,000.

Q. That was after some receipts were had from the road, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; I will show it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That will hardly come into construction, the interest on the bonds.

The WITNESS. I know; but I am going to deduct this to show what was left. I should think the salaries must have come to $100,000.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That is not "construction."

BONDS RETAINED BY THE OLD ORGANIZATION.

The WITNESS. I am speaking of things that did not come into construction. I am going to deduct this in a moment. Sundry suits, $50,000; retained by the old organization, $400,000 bonds, and given to the stockholders, 400 bonds. And then, at the instance of Mr. Corning, we employed a man by the name of Wheeler, an Englishman.

Q. Do I understand those 400 bonds to be two separate amounts, as stated there?—A. Yes, sir; 400 bonds given to the stockholders, on the condition of surrendering the old contract, and our agreeing to complete and pay for in full the balance of the stock, the full million dollars.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I understand that the parties after the reorganization were substantially the same as before; it was merely an alteration in the form of doing the business.

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Q. The parties in interest did not change?—A. There was no possible relation between them whatever.

Q. Did the parties change?—A. All changed.

Q. When Mr. Osborn's contract was, as you call it, abrogated or modified, did the parties who subscribed for the $400,000 differ from the parties who had advanced the $600,000?—A. Oh, no, sir.

Q. They were the same?—A. They were the same. But the parties with whom I was associated were a new set of men entirely. It was a reorganization of the old concern, the history of which I know comparatively nothing.

THE CHALICE PARTY.

Q. Whom do you mean as the prominent leaders of the old concern, before you came in?—A. There was a man in Atchison by the name of Chalice.

Q. Do you mean to say that the Chalice party actually received $400,000 in bonds?—A. I mean to say that the old organization, when it came to us, retained in round numbers 400 bonds. It might not have been exactly that number. Where they went to, I know nothing at all.

Q. Do you mean 400 of the first-mortgage bonds of the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not 400 United States bonds?—A. No, sir; 400 first-mortgage bonds of the company.

Q. You say those bonds were actually issued so as to form a part of the permanent obligations of this company before your party appeared on the scene at all. Do I understand that?—A. That I do not know; about that I cannot tell.

Q. In order to ascertain exactly what assets your people realized—A. (Interrupting.) They certainly were issued before Pomeroy and Gaylord resigned and left the concern.

THE BOOKS DO NOT SHOW TO WHOM CERTAIN BONDS ISSUED.

Q. Do you know whether the books show to whom those 400 bonds were issued?—A. No, sir; they do not show anything about it.

Q. From what source do you derive the information that enables you to state that before your party acquired their interests and during the reign of the Chalice party, 400 of the first-mortgage bonds of this company were issued, so as to become a part of its obligations?—A. It was made a condition of permitting us to come in and to take this franchise. It was declared to us to be subject to all these obligations. We tried to find out what those obligations were, but we never could.

Q. As matter of fact, do you remember, from your examination of the books and affairs of this company, that 400 of its first-mortgage bonds had been actually issued to the Chalice party, or anybody representing them?—A. My recollection in regard to that is not clear, but I should say that they were certainly issued before Mr. Willis Gaylord resigned as treasurer.

Q. Is it not true that the claims of the Chalice party were subsequently settled, after negotiation and adjustment, for $10,000 in money and ten bonds?—A. That is entirely a different matter. That refers, according to my recollection, to certain bonds which they had also issued long before we knew anything about this concern, to Chalice and others, for certain lands. There was also a suit brought by a member of the Chalice party, claiming that he was entitled to 2,000 shares of stock, I think it was.

THE OSBORN CONTRACT.

Q. Then I will put it this way: Is it not true that under the Osborn contract, as it stood before the additional subscription for 4,000 shares of stock, and as it stood afterwards, including the whole business, all of the $1,600,000 of the first-mortgage bonds of this company were issued to Mr. Osborn and by him, under the assignments, divided up among the parties in interest?—A. It is not true.

Q. How many were issued?—A. I do not think a bond was ever delivered to Mr. Osborn.

Q. I do not care about the form. How many of those bonds were allotted to the parties in interest?—A. Never anything, excepting the 400 bonds, which was upon the condition of surrendering their claims to this contract and upon condition that they would pay up the remainder of the capital stock.

AS TO PROFITS UNDER THAT CONTRACT.

Q. What were the profits which are alluded to as being the profits to which the holders of the sixty-fourth interests were entitled, under that contract?—A. If that contract had been carried out and executed, which it never was, under the Osborn contract, they would have been entitled to their proportionate interest of whatever might have been left after building the road out of the assets contained in that construction contract.

Q. What did you say became of the first-mortgage bonds of this company, apart from the $400,000 which were allotted to the parties under the Osborn contract?—A. I am already engaged in stating that, and will go on to state it further.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Very good; you may proceed.

The WITNESS. Four hundred bonds were retained by the original association prior to our connection.

Q. Do you mean the Chalice party?—A. Prior to my connection with it.

Q. Do you mean the Chalice party?—A. It has never been called the Chalice party.

Q. I call it that for convenience. Do you mean Abel, Fairchild, Chalice, McBratney, Strongfellow, Spencer, Sickles, Butcher, Hart, Irving, Dickinson, and Pomeroy; were those the people you refer to as having retained $400,000 in bonds?—A. I know nothing about it, excepting that they were retained by Willis Gaylord, the treasurer. What he did with them I do not know.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Then proceed with your statement, and we will try to get it otherwise.

WHEELER AUTHORIZED TO NEGOTIATE BONDS.

The WITNESS. At the instance of Mr. Erastus Corning, an Englishman by the name of Wheeler was sent abroad to negotiate the sale of the 1,200 first-mortgage bonds, with the understanding that if he brought us back $1,000,000—they were to be sold at not less than par—he should have 200 bonds.

Q. Can you give us the date of this?—A. I cannot, but it will appear by the records.

The following extract from the minutes of June 26, 1865, was read:

Henry G. Wheeler authorized to sell 1,000 6 per cent. first-mortgage gold bonds, of $1,000 each, of the Atchison & Pike's Peak Railroad Company and Telegraph Line, in any foreign market, on the best terms he can obtain, not below par value in United States currency; and as an inducement for the success of the negotiation of these bonds, the company appropriated 5,000 shares of the capital stock, and 80,000 acres of the land granted by the United States, or so much of said stock and lands as may be found essential by the said Wheeler for the success of his negotiation; and the secretary is authorized to deliver to William Osborn for Henry G. Wheeler the stock referred to.

SETTLEMENT WITH WHEELER.

Q. Is that what you refer to?—A. I remember such a transaction, but my recollection of it is as I said, that he was authorized to sell $1,000,000 of these bonds at par, and that he was to have the 200 bonds for his services, and that he agreed to do it within a certain time. He did not do it within the time, and he was recalled; and when we called upon him to deliver back the papers, documents, and bonds that he had in his possession, he refused to do it. We had him arrested, and we settled with him, and gave him 150 bonds. So that that took away 150 bonds from us. I think it was 150 bonds. I am not positive as to that amount.

Commissioner ANDERSON. On May 13, 1869, it appears from the books, 50 bonds were charged up as having been given to settle this matter with Wheeler.

The WITNESS. My recollection is that it was 150 bonds. Then I will state that those different things that I estimated, deducted from the "available assets," as I termed them, namely, $4,200,000, left $2,800,000.

Q. Why do you deduct them if they were not a part of the construction?—A. So as to get at what was actually expended on the construction of the road.

Q. How would it follow that the remainder was expended on the construction of the road? It might have been put into the pockets of the board of directors, for all we know.—A. I certainly should have known it. I state my recollection; that is all I can do.

A CALL FOR THE BOOKS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. What we want from you, if you have it, is a statement that you know of a certain book or books where the payments actually made by Mr. Osborn, or by the parties who built this road, at so much for excavation, and so much for iron rails, and so much for actual expenditures, can be found. We do not want a simple statement that after deducting certain amounts that you know of from the "available assets," you conclude all of the remainder was expended on the construction of the road, because that is no proof.

The WITNESS. So far as the money expended in the construction of the road is concerned, I presume that those books were kept out in the office at Atchison, and whatever books there are in the concern here have all been given over to our successors in office. They were delivered over by Mr. Thomas M. Sother.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Our book-keeper, who has been over all the books now in the possession of the Union Pacific Railway Company, informs us that all he finds are the operating books, and that the construction accounts start with balances taken from Osborn's books.

The WITNESS. I never saw them.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The Osborn construction books cannot be found?

The WITNESS. I have never seen them.

Q. Who kept them?—A. They must have been kept out at Atchison.

Q. In what form did you and your associates make your payments to meet the cost of construction incurred by him?—A. The books were kept, as I said before, by Mr. Sother. That is, the books that related strictly to the treasurership were kept by Mr. Sother, and were all in his handwriting. I used to examine them once in a while in company with Mr. Pomeroy. Mr. Pomeroy was the active business man; I only acted as counsel.

AS TO DISPOSITION OF BONDS.

Q. Did you yourself receive any of the first-mortgage bonds or United States bonds of this company?—A. Never. I sold them myself, and put the money into the treasury, every dollar of it, and received about 99 cents on the dollar, average. I remember that, because I examined it.

Q. Put it in the treasury?—A. It must have gone into the treasury.

Commissioner ANDERSON. You must know if you had the money.

The WITNESS. I am only speaking from my memory. If I received any money when Mr. Gaylord was treasurer, it went into Mr. Gaylord's hands.

BONDS GIVEN AS COMMISSIONS ON LOANS.

Q. Do you mean the treasurer of the Central Branch or the treasurer of William Osborn?—A. The early part might have gone to Willis Gaylord, who was also acting as treasurer of Osborn. That might have been. Let me state that there were commissions paid to persons who, in our dilemma, lent money; and instead of the commissions being allowed in the way that is usual, or as was usually done in Wall Street at that time, and as was paid by the Union Pacific and other railroad companies (paying 5 per cent. in cash or 2½ per cent. for commissions on a loan) our executive committee allowed, besides the interest on loans, a bond.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. You mean commissions, not interest on loans, do you not?—A. I mean commissions on loans. They allowed bonds for a certain amount, but I do not remember what it was. I have loaned the company, in company with Mr. Pomeroy, as high as $400,000 in cash, and we received some bonds as commissions, but in no other way.

(A paper was here shown to witness at pages 71, 72, 73, being the report of one of the accountants to the Commission, Mr. S. F. Perrenoud, on the Central Branch.)

Commissioner ANDERSON. This is a list of the bonds in the accounts of the company, as kept, which appear to have been issued without any corresponding compensation or any proceeds that can be traced into the company.

The WITNESS. What are these taken from?

Mr. PERRENOUD. Taken from the treasurer's books.

The WITNESS. What are they called?

Mr. PERRENOUD. They are called the bond-book, the journal, and the ledger.

The WITNESS. Under what heading?

Mr. PERRENOUD. Under the heading of "Donations and compensation bonds."

Commissioner ANDERSON. Allotted with the stock.

The WITNESS. How many are there of these? All I can say in reply to this is that not one dollar or one iota of property was ever divided among the parties in interest under the Osborn contract with the exception of the 400 bonds which were made a condition of the surrender of the balance of the stock, the parties agreeing to pay up that stock and to take the remainder of the bonds. I should think that this statement that is shown me was a statement of the disposition of bonds, but there were no bonds given excepting for adequate compensation.

Mr. PERRENOUD. Those three hundred and ninety-nine or four hundred bonds are stated there.

The WITNESS. As given with the stock?

Mr. PERRENOUD. Yes.

The WITNESS. Do you say this includes the 400 bonds given with the stock?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes, that includes the 400 bonds given with the stock.

Mr. PERRENOUD. Or 399.

The WITNESS. My memory will not enable me to throw any more light on this. [Referring to the pages of the report above specified.]

AS TO COST OF ROAD.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Can you give us any information, from your knowledge of these 100 miles of road, of the country through which it was built, the kind of iron and ties and fish-plates that were used, the cuts and blastings that may have occurred, and what the actual cost of that 100 miles was?—A. I cannot tell you in dollars and cents. I know that we paid as high as $110 for common iron rails delivered in Kansas, when you can buy them delivered there to-day, of steel, for inside of $40, and perhaps inside of $35; and that we paid for rolling stock from three to four times, my belief is—I state that on information and belief as to what they can be bought for now.

Q. Can you not form an estimate as to whether this road cost, say, anything not less than $15,000 a mile and not more than $250,000 a mile?—A. The only way I can form any estimate is this: I have reason to believe, in a fair level country, for about from $18,000 to $20,000 per mile, a road can now be built and fairly equipped. As I look back and try to reflect upon that—because Mr. Anderson has called my attention to it—I do not see how that road could have been built for less than $50,000 per mile at that time; and yet it might have been. I am not an expert in those things. I am a lawyer by profession. I knew that everything was done under the supervision, or a great deal of it—at least all the latter part of it—of Mr. R. M. Pomeroy, and he was a very close business man.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Was any portion of this road built through the aid of the construction company?—A. Yes, sir; a small portion of it. It commenced to be built in that way.

AS TO THE OSBORN CONTRACT.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. You were naturally interested in the figures of the Osborn contract, whether that went through or not, to see how much it actually did cost and to see whether you were getting any profit or not under the contract, or to see what would be just terms of adjusting it, so that your attention was probably called to the Osborn balances in order to show you and your associates how much he had been expending. Is that not true?—A. That is not true in my case.

Q. I think you have stated that from time to time you saw the Osborn books, as kept by Mr. Sother?—A. No, sir; I have not stated any such thing.

Q. Do you remember ever seeing the Osborn books?—A. Never.

Q. Do you remember ever conversing with Mr. Sother as to how much this road had cost?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember that subject being discussed among the associates who were interested in the contract?—A. It must have been.

BALANCES TAKEN FROM THE BOOKS.

Q. I show you the balances taken from the construction books of Mr. Osborn, as they appear on the Central Branch books, the total for construction being given at $2,306,430.42, to which is added the equipment amounting to $243,924.52, making a total for construction and equipment of $2,550,342.94, to which was added afterwards bills contracted for construction and equipment not included in the above but paid afterwards, $181,002.29, making a total of $2,731,347.23. I will ask you whether, in your judgment, those figures correctly represent the cost of that road?—A. I should think it very probable, but I only refer to it by inference, because Mr. Sother was a very correct accountant, and Mr. Pomeroy was a very severe man in regard to money matters, and no such account was ever made up by me personally. I am not a book-keeper. Whose handwriting is that in?

Commissioner ANDERSON. In whose handwriting, Mr. Mink, are the transcripts of the balances taken from Mr. Osborn's construction books?

Mr. MINK. I do not know.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It was probably some officer of the Central Branch.

The WITNESS. The question I ask was, From what official books was this taken?

Mr. PERRENOUD. The operating books kept in Kansas.

The WITNESS. I do not think I ever looked at them. I do not think I ever saw them.

Q. As these purport to be transcripts of balances which appear on Osborn books and are so described, my question was whether the figures here given tally with your general memory as to the cost of construction of this road?—A. It seems to me as though it must have been a great deal more than that. I do not see how that was ever built for that amount. I have no doubt of the accuracy of the books.

DISPOSITION OF BONDS.

Q. What knowledge have you of the disposition made of either of those classes of bonds, the United States bonds or the first-mortgage bonds?—A. Not one bond, to my knowledge, was ever given away without consideration to the company. Not one bond, so far as my knowledge goes, was ever divided under any construction contract, excepting the 400, which were made a condition of the final agreement of surrender, &c., as I have already stated. Not a dollar of money, so far as my knowledge goes, has ever been used in payment for legislation, or to influence any son or daughter of Adam to do anything but what was proper.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The daughters of Adam have not figured in this investigation yet.

The WITNESS. I used to hear sometimes in Washington about daughters of Adam.

Q. It is not quite sufficient for our purpose to say that the bonds were not issued without consideration. Do you mean to say, of your own knowledge, that all the bonds of this company, except the 400 which were given as an inducement to obtain subscriptions to the stock, were actually sold for money?—A. So far as my knowledge goes, sold for money.

Q. How far does your knowledge go?—A. It goes, in a general way, over it all. The man who would have a more accurate knowledge of it would be Mr. Pomeroy, who is now deceased. But my own belief is that value received was paid for everything, except that as to the 400 bonds that were divided, it was a very poor bargain to put $400,000 there.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I do not dispute that. The $400,000 bonds that were divided, as appears from the minutes, were distributed pro rata among the gentlemen who subscribed for $400,000 of the stock.

The WITNESS. For the remaining $400,000 stock.

AS TO DISPOSITION OF MONEY PAID FOR STOCK.

Q. Is it not true that the money paid for that stock was also immediately directed to be appropriated for the benefit of the same parties who subscribed, in order to pay the amount due by them for construction account?—A. Not a dollar; every dollar of it was paid in cash.

Commissioner ANDERSON. If that be so, explain the entry in your book which appears immediately after the memorandum reciting the subscription to the stock and directing that the treasurer allot to the parties in interest, pursuant to the resolution of October 25 last, 400 of the first-mortgage bonds of this company. Immediately after that we find this extract, of the same date, at page 132: The treasurer of the company is authorized to pay over to the parties in interest in the Osborn contract the proceeds and avails of said stock options, to be applied to the liquidation and payment of their indebtedness and outstanding obligations on construction account.

The WITNESS. That was on construction account. Not one dollar of it ever went to any stockholder or any party who was interested in stock.

Q. I ask whether the proceeds which resulted from the stock subscriptions were not immediately applied by the order of the company to the liquidation of the amounts due by the parties in interest on construction account?—A. Yes, sir; on construction account.

Q. So that these parties were the same, I understand you, who held the sixty-fourths before the modification of the Osborn contract—the same parties who subscribed for the $400,000 of the new stock?—A. Yes, sir; but I do not want it to appear upon the record that I sanction any idea that anything whatever was paid, excepting—so far as these moneys, that were paid in by the parties, they were paid for the actual construction of the road, and not to any obligations that the contractors might be under to parties who might have advanced money to them, or anything of that kind.

Q. I do not mean that. I mean that the parties who subscribed to this agreement jointly had agreed to pay in a certain proportionate amount of the construction cost of the road, each one subscribing and paying in so much, according to the interest that he took. Then subsequently an arrangement was made, there having been $600,000 advanced or incurred by those parties, that they should have 6,000 shares of stock, and that a subscription should be taken at par for the $400,000 remaining, and as an inducement to that subscription $400,000 in bonds were allotted, and then the treasurer was directed to apply the proceeds of the $400,000 obtained for the stock to the payment of amounts that were due from these same people by reason of their obligations to advance their proportionate shares on construction account. Is that correct?—A. You have got the words "amount due from these people" in there. The proceeds of the 4,000 shares of stock, like the proceeds of the 6,000 shares of stock, were applied to construction account, to building the road for the company—the property of the company.

AS TO SALE OF BONDS.

Q. Did you personally have anything to do with the sale of any of the bonds?—A. My own impression is that I did not.

Q. Who did conduct the sale of the bonds?—A. I think Mr. R. M. Pomeroy.

Q. Do you know through what house it was effected, or how the sale was effected?—A. I think that they were bought mostly by parties in interest, for they went down in value and have been sold as low, when we were in our troubles, as 20 cents on the dollar.

Q. You think they were bought largely by the parties in interest, that is, the parties who were interested in the sixty-fourths?—A. No; by the general stockholders.

Q. Do you know in what bank Mr. Pomeroy kept his account at this time, of the sales of those bonds?—A. He kept his account, I think, in a bank in Boston; what bank I do not know, but I think it was some leather bank. Those who are familiar with Boston can probably tell. I think he had two or three bank accounts in Boston.

NO BONDS DONATED OR DISTRIBUTED EXCEPT THE 400.

Q. Do I understand your statement to be, then, that to your knowledge no bonds were donated or distributed, except the 400?—A. No bonds to my knowledge, or that I have any idea of, were ever distributed or donated to any one, except the 400 bonds which were distributed in accordance with the agreement.

Q. Do I understand you also to mean that no bonds were distributed either through Mr. Osborn's contract or by some other means equivalent thereto, so as to be distributed among the parties interested in the construction of the road, as payment for construction?—A. There never was a bond, nor a dollar, nor anything of any value whatever, ever distributed under the Osborn contract. It was the same as though it was dead.

Q. Were there any bonds distributed for construction?—A. No, sir.

AND AS COMPENSATION FOR LOANS.

Q. Were there no bonds distributed as compensation for loans?—A. Yes, sir; there were.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Please tell us what you know of that class of bonds.

The WITNESS. There was a committee appointed, of the board of directors, to act upon this subject; where any of the parties made a loan to the company, say $25,000, in addition to the interest, they were allowed a bond. I do not remember what the amount was, but it was a liberal amount—$20,000 or $25,000—to the best of my recollection. It was in accordance with the custom which then prevailed with railroad companies.

Q. That was a loan for what period?—A. I should think it was for a loan of three or four months.

Q. And every time that loan would be made a bond would be given?—A. When that was renewed a bond would be given. Remember, gentlemen, it was hard times then. We never resumed specie payments until 1880, was it not?

Commissioner LITTLER. 1879.

Q. How many bonds found their way out of the company on this matter of construction as compensation for loans?—A. I do not know; there may have been—I only give you an estimate—fifty or seventy-five bonds possibly.

"EXISTING OBLIGATIONS."

Q. Were there not also bonds issued as compensation for claims?

The WITNESS. Compensation for claims?

Commissioner ANDERSON. In settlement of existing obligations.

The WITNESS. The words "existing obligations," which have become somewhat notorious in the Central Branch company, were first uttered to us by the parties who had control of this thing before the organization to which I belonged had anything to do with it, and we never could find out what the words "existing obligations" meant. We tried to. The words became a passing joke. It was said to become a test as to whether a man was tight or not, to ask him to say the words "existing obligations." If he could say them plainly, it was evident he was sober.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Your name appears on the books of the company as having received four bonds for existing obligations; you ought to know on what they were.

The WITNESS. Those are very unfortunate words for anybody to put opposite to me—"existing obligations." If that term has been used by Mr. Sother, and entered upon the books, and that appears so——

Mr. PERENNOUD. "Existing liabilities."

The WITNESS. Well, the words come from the Commission and not from the books. I dare say that was for loans.

Commissioner ANDERSON. No, the bonds issued to you for loans are separate.

The WITNESS. What is that?

COMPENSATION BONDS CHARGED TO WITNES.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Compensation bonds charged to you are entered separately. My only object in calling attention to it is that it might explain to you that there were bonds issued for "existing liabilities." You may tell us what they referred to. There are 45 to Jay Cooke & Co., 37 to Willis Gaylord, 4 to yourself, and 7 to Charles Gould.

The WITNESS. It is possible, if I saw this in the original book, if it was a book kept by Mr. Souther, that from some of the surroundings I might be able to explain it; but from this memorandum I am unable to give any explanation of it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That answer applies to page 72 of the same report heretofore shown you.

The WITNESS. No bond, or anything in connection with this road from any source, was ever issued to me gratuitously.

Q. Have you any recollection of the number and amount of the loans that you made to this company?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. Have you no recollection whatever as to the average amount or about the amount?—A. No, sir; it is a good many years ago, and those things were obtained a great deal by notes and indorsement at the bank.

Q. Have you any recollection of the amount of compensation bonds that were issued to you?—A. No, sir; I cannot tell you.

WITNESS'S INTEREST IN CONSTRUCTION.

Q. What was your interest under the Osborn contract, or in construction generally?—A. I think that I subscribed for eight sixty-fourths, one-eighth originally; but I would want the Commission to understand that so far as the Osborn contract is concerned, it is the same as though it never had seen light or never was in existence.

Q. Did you receive and pay the same share as the other associates, paying for the construction of the road and receiving whatever compensation was derived from the company for that construction?—A. So far as my knowledge goes, I did.

Then, if you can tell us how much you paid in and how much you received out, and we should multiply those two figures by eight, would not that give us a fair answer on the proposition we desire to establish, which is, what the road really cost to construct and what the parties in interest received out of it?—A. You will bear in mind that I have already stated that the construction contract was the same as though it never existed, and no element can ever be taken into account in calculating the cost of this road.

HOW MUCH WITNESS PAID, AND WHAT FOR.

Q. We will put it differently. We will merely ask you as to the cost of the bonds and stock to you. How much did you pay for what you got?—A. I paid $100,000 for 1,000 shares of stock; and I presume that under that agreement that was made I got forty bonds.

Commissioner LITTLER. As a bonus?

Commissioner ANDERSON. No; distribution and allotment.

The WITNESS. It was a distribution and allotment made at the time of giving up this contract. Those contracts were used in building all railroads, but we concluded we would abandon that thing entirely, and go on.

By Mr. JOHN F. DILLON:

Q. Do you mean that you paid $100,000 in cash for forty bonds and—how much stock?

The WITNESS. One hundred thousand dollars in stock.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Is that a statement of your entire transaction? Is that all you got?

The WITNESS. After this stock was out I think I bought some stock once in awhile, and I think I sold some stock.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am talking of what you got from the company?

The WITNESS. That is all.

Q. Do you say $40,000 bonds covers all the bonds you ever got from the company?—A. All, excepting the compensation bonds in the shape of commissions.

Q. And the four bonds paid for a liability which represented a valid liability, if you got those four bonds? There are four bonds charged to you for existing liabilities.—A. Yes, sir; I never received anything from the company excepting for full consideration.

AS TO MR. DAY'S INTEREST.

Q. Was Mr. Day similarly interested with yourself?—A. He became interested, I think, later on. I am not quite sure it was later on; not much later on, but somewhat later on. He had an interest in this contract, and in that shape he became interested. He paid in his amount. Finally that was abandoned and he received his stock for what he paid in.

Q. His statement of what he received appears to differ from yours as to the proportion of money, bonds, and stock. Is it not your recollection that you and Mr. Day received bonds in the same proportion according to the interest you each had in the company?—A. Those who were interested at the time and who had put in the $600,000 were all exactly the same. Whether Mr. Day became interested after that or before that I do not know. I cannot tell about that. If Mr. Day has made any statement that is different from what I state, he is laboring under a misapprehension.

Q. How familiar have you been with the operation of the road from the time it was completed down to the time it was sold through Mr. Ames?—A. I have very little familiarity.

Q. What is your general understanding as to its financial condition?—A. I know I used to ask Mr. Ames. Mr. Ames—I mean the present Governor Ames—always carried a little memorandum book in his pocket, where he had noted the earnings of the road; and once in a while he would show them to me, and I would express my approbation or my disapprobation, whatever it was, and it would soon pass out of my mind again.

Q. Was it not notorious among all of you, between 1870 and 1878, that the business of this corporation was very poor, and it was under financial embarrassment?—A. We were certainly very poor, and I think it must have been a notorious fact.

DEFAULT ON FIRST-MORTGAGE COUPONS.

Q. Were you not in default on your coupons of the first-mortgage bonds?—A. We were in default for, I think, three and one-half years or four years.

Q. Do you remember when you funded them? Was it not in 1879?—A. I think, upon reflection, it was; yes, sir.

Q. So that you were in default right down to 1879?—A. We must have been. I can recollect now.

Q. Who drew that funding mortgage?—A. That funding mortgage was drawn by Mr. Henry Day, I think.

Q. Did you have any of the first-mortgage bonds of the company at this time?—A. That I cannot recollect.

Q. You do not remember whether you put in any of your coupons or not?—A. That I do not remember.

Q. Did you get any of the income bonds?—A. Upon reflection, it appears to me I did get one for unpaid coupons, as it occurs to me now. It had my signature to it, and I gave it to my daughter as a memento. That comes back to me. I think that came to me.

THE FUNDING BOND.

Q. Do you know by whose advice it was that the maturity of the funding bond was made to occur before the maturity of the United States loan?—A. No, sir; I did not know that that was the fact.

Q. Do you know whether the coupons representing the obligation which was secured by that mortgage were canceled, or whether they were deposited with a trustee as an attendant security for the mortgage?—A. They were deposited with certain trustees, and the bonds were issued. One of those trustees, I think, was William C. Wetmore, but I do not remember the other. I think it was William C. Wetmore, and some other one with him.

Q. Do you know those coupons are claimed to be alive now as a protection to the mortgage?—A. Yes, sir; it was guarded against thoroughly.

Q. So that, on a foreclosure, the rights to be foreclosed would be as of the coupons themselves being a part of the mortgage, which antedates the United States loan?—A. Yes, sir. They are a part of the obligation that is covered by the first mortgage.

Commissioner ANDERSON. So that the claim, as we understand it, is, that those $600,000 or $700,000 income bonds take precedence of the United States claim?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; they take precedence of it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Mink, have you that mortgage?

Mr. MINK. No, sir; I have not.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I believe we have never had it. Do you know where that mortgage can be seen?

The WITNESS. Do you mean the funding mortgage?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes; have you a copy of it?

The WITNESS. Mr. Day had all to do with that, and Mr. Sother assisted him afterwards.

Q. Was it printed?—A. That I do not know.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. It was recorded, was it not?

Commissioner ANDERSON. It must have been recorded, I should judge. We will get a copy of it somewhere.

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF COMPANY BETWEEN APRIL AND NOVEMBER, 1879.

Q. Will you please explain, as far as you know of it, the financial condition of this company immediately after this income bond was made?—A. After this income bond was made, and everything funded and the bonds issued, the property was in the hands of our successors; but at the time of the sale to Mr. Gould——

Q. I want to draw your attention particularly to the interval between April, 1879, and the sale to Mr. Gould, which occurred in November, 1879. What, if anything, happened to your company during those six months, to explain the fact that an insolvent company which funded six years of its obligations in April was worth $250 a share six months afterwards?—A. At the time of the sale to Mr. Gould we were in debt, besides our funded debt, $150,000, of which amount $8,000 due to Mr. Day was a part. By authority I paid that $8,000, and I wanted the company to pay back that money to me. They owe it to me to-day, with interest. At that time I lost my wife and my father, and I neglected paying attention to it until about one or two years ago, when I wrote to the company. They ought to pay it to me. That showed the financial condition of things.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The financial condition of things had not improved, as we understand the force of your remarks, between April and November?

MR. GOULD PAYS $250 A SHARE.

The WITNESS. There was a great deal of spirit in the company. Mr. Gould had come up alongside of us, and was beginning to run tracks alongside of us. The men that were with us had some money. We determined we would run that race until we went into Denver, and it led to Mr. Gould buying the property. That is to say, for the majority of all this stock, which would be equivalent to four shares for every one share, he was to pay us $250.

Q. Then that bargain was the result of a vehement competitive rivalry in railroad construction, and not, in your judgment, the result of an estimated and careful appraisement of the resources and earning power of your railroad itself. Is that correct?—A. That I do not mean to say; probably no State in this Union has grown faster than Kansas has of late. It has grown with wonderful rapidity. Any far-seeing man who had patience to wait (and Gould is a far-seeing man) could see that it would not be long before that road would be in a good paying condition.

Q. Is it in a good paying condition now?—A. I presume it is.

Q. Do you know?—A. I own one share of stock, and they had not done me the favor of paying my dividends on it. I looked in one of those red books and I found they were paying 10 per cent. dividends.

HAS THE STOCK ANY INTRINSIC VALUE?

Q. I ask you this: If you take that company as an asset, with its earning power as you know it, on the one side, and charge on the other side the first-mortgage bonds of the company, the funded bonds of the company, the debt due the United States, and the value of the accrued interest to the United States, to date, is it your judgment that the stock of that company has any value at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. It has none?—A. I should say it had not.

Q. That being so, how does your explanation as to the development of the State of Kansas and the accruing wealth justify a price of $250 a share for that stock, subject to these very claims that I have mentioned, that payment having been made within six months after you had funded your defaulted interest?—A. Because I have always had great faith in my Government. The Government ought to deal with this company kindly and not deal with it in the rough and harsh manner with which it has dealt with other companies. In fact, the Government, in regard to this road, ought to cancel the indebtedness entirely, upon condition that for, say, forty or fifty years from the time of its starting, or it might be a shorter time than that, in lieu of their indebtedness the company should agree to render service to the United States Government in carrying the mails and rendering all service that can be done at 50 per cent. of cost of usual rates, or of the actual cost of carrying.

A TEST QUESTION.

Q. Let me test you. Is your faith in the Government so intense and great that you would to-day think it a possible transaction, or one which you would seriously consider for a moment, to pay to-day to the owners of this stock $250 a share, taking it as it stands? Would you not consider such a proposition out of all reason? Would you give $250 a share for this stock to-day, because of your faith in the Government?—A. I would not myself. But that is no criterion.

WHY MR. GOULD PAID $250 A SHARE.

Commissioner ANDERSON. What we want to understand is, why Mr. Gould was willing to give you $250 a share for this stock, so that we can fit it with the other acts that occurred in this comedy or tragedy, and come to some intelligent conclusion as to his motives.

The WITNESS. In the first place, to stop competition.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That is what I asked you before: Whether it was the result of the rivalry between the two roads that were building, or whether it was the result of an appraisement.

The WITNESS. I think, in the first place, he examined into the matter. He wanted me to go to him and give him a distinct account of the property, from one end to the other, and the condition of things, a subject I was not particularly familiar with; but I, with great care, finally reached what I considered to be accurate knowledge of everything. I had it on a paper. I went to him and read it to him, when he quietly said to me, "Mr. Nichols, you are substantially correct." I found out afterwards that he knew everything about that road, from one end to the other. There was a man—I should think, from the description, it was Joe Richardson—who had traveled around in his shirt sleeves; and they ordered him out from some of the round-houses, supposing him to be a tramp.

Q. At the time of this conversation, were you aware that a negotiation was pending or had made some progress, under which Mr. Gould contemplated a rival line to be formed of the Missouri Pacific, of your road, and its possible extension through the Loveland Pass, to Ogden?—A. No, sir; I never heard of that until this hour.

MR. GOULD AN EXTRAORDINARY MAN.

Q. How many interviews had you with Mr. Gould in regard to this company?—A. I regard Mr. Gould as one of the most extraordinary men I have ever met, and therefore my interview with him made an impression on me. Before the interview that I refer to I had never seen or known the man.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. What time was that?—A. That was at the time that I delivered to him a paper, a copy of which the company is in possession of.

Q. Do you mean the Commission? What company; the Railroad Company or what?—A. I mean Mr. Gould. I saw Mr. Gould and handed him some papers, the copies of which are in the bound volumes in the possession of the company, giving the indebtedness, and also reporting to him the condition of the road.

FIXING THE TIME OF THE INTERVIEW.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Was this at or about the time that the transaction occurred between Mr. Ames and Mr. Gould?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was a part of the same thing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you say that was the only interview you had with Mr. Gould relating to this railroad?—A. Prior to that—let me think one moment. The interview that I refer to occurred at No. 80 Broadway, and I think that I then and there was introduced to Mr. Gould for the first time. I never knew him by sight before that, and I watched and studied the man very carefully.

Q. Did you render him any service in relation to his negotiations for this road?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you render any service to the company in relation to this negotiation for which you made a charge?

The WITNESS. This negotiation?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes; between Mr. Ames and Mr. Gould.

The WITNESS. No, sir; never.

PAYMENT TO WITNESS.

Q. Did Mr. Gould pay you any money?—A. No, sir; excepting there was money paid, not by Gould but by the company, for what was due me on the books of the company, for money lent and for services, which had nothing to do with this negotiation.

Q. That had nothing to do with this negotiation?—A. No, sir.

Q. The payment, then, was a payment of an obligation existing before?—A. Yes, sir; I think embracing a certificate of indebtedness that was issued to me for money lent a long time before.

Q. Was it represented by a certificate which was delivered to you at the same time that a number of other certificates were issued to other parties to whom the company was indebted?

The WITNESS. Were there 21 certificates in all?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes; I believe so.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the certificate you refer to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Dated December 1, 1873, at page 182 of the minutes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. My question now is, did Mr. Gould pay you $25,000?

The WITNESS. For what?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will read it: "For attorney's fees, &c., as per claim submitted afterwards by J. Gould, $25,000."

The WITNESS. There was due me for balance of services, in my work at Washington, $20,000, and in fact a great deal more than that. There was also due me $5,000 for services in two suits that were brought against the company, which made the $25,000. Besides that, there was due me for services rendered in preparing the lease of the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific Railroad Company to the Central Branch I think about $2,500 which has never been paid; also due to Mr. Day $8,000, which I paid him and which has never been paid; and also $2,800 due to the secretary, which I paid him, and which has never been paid me.

Q. My question is whether Mr. Jay Gould paid you $25,000 for claims which you had or claimed to have against this company?—A. Mr. Ham gave me bonds for those $25,000, and my claim was assigned to Mr.—I do not know whom. I think it was assigned; I am not sure.

Q. What bonds did Mr. Ham give you?—A. I think they were Kansas Pacific bonds, consolidated; Kansas consols, they were called.

Q. Was this after the sale to Mr. Gould?—A. This was after Mr. Ames had sold to Mr. Gould.

Q. Was it a part of the understanding of the sale to Mr. Gould that you were to receive this money?—A. No, sir; it had nothing to do with it. This was a claim against the Central Branch Company.

AS TO THE CLAIM OF THE WITNESS.

Q. I understand that it was not a claim that the Central Branch was willing to pay before the transfer to Mr. Gould, was it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Had they offered to pay?—A. I will not say "willing to pay." They were unable to pay it. They were too poor to pay it.
Q. Were they willing to pay it?—A. I should have forced them to pay it.
Q. Had it been audited or passed in any shape or form?—A. I think it had been passed.
Q. Who passed it?—A. I cannot tell. It was admitted. I do not think there was anything in writing in regard to it, but it was approved by the company.
Q. Who do you say is willing to say for the company that this claim was approved?—A. I think it was approved in the minutes of the company.
Q. Can you say who approved of it—any officer of the company or any members connected with it?—A. That I cannot do. I do not believe there was any reference of it to any committee.

WAS IT CONTINGENT ON SUCCESS?

Q. Was not the $20,000 you have referred to, in regard to the Washington busines, entirely contingent upon your success there?—A. No, sir; not at all. There was something of that kind originally entered into with Mr. Pomeroy, but that was all done away with. It was found soon after Mr. Pomeroy went there that he was not the man to take it up.
Q. Who settled upon the $20,000 as being the amount?—A. I was to have a reasonable compensation, and it must have been approved by the principal directors then.
Q. Can you refer us to any witness whom we may call and ask this question?—A. I think Mr. Pomeroy was one.
Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Pomeroy is dead?
The WITNESS. Yes, sir.
Commissioner ANDERSON. We have a little preference for living persons. All the directors must have been cognizant of the fact?
The WITNESS. I think they all knew about my claim.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Was it ever formally presented to the board of directors or the auditing board of the company?—A. I do not think it was. It might have been. But those things were generally managed by Mr. Sother and Mr. Pomeroy.
Q. Was it ever discussed between the different officers of the company and yourself, formally or informally?—A. I think not. Not that I recollect of, at least.
Q. How did the company know that you had such a claim?—A. Mr. Pomeroy knew it well, and Mr. Sother knew it well, and the company knew it. They know that when a man is employed to deliver arguments, &c., they must pay.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Did it ever materialize into dollars in value, until after the Ames and Gould transaction? Of course I understand they had more money then, and could afford to be more liberal.—A. By the bye, I think, upon reflection, it was secured by and discussed at the time of the creation of the deed of trust, which was made to secure not only these certificates of indebtedness but also for legal services.

Q. That is the deed of trust of the lands, which is referred to in the minutes and which refers directly to the twenty-one certificates, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; I think in that you will find that it was given for several purposes: One to secure certain coupons; one to secure the certificates of indebtedness. I speak now from memory merely. Of course you will correct me if I am wrong; and then for legal services and some other things.

Q. I understand this $25,000 payment to be entirely distinct from the certificate of indebtedness. You have received them both, have you not?—A. Yes, sir; I received them both.

FURTHER INFORMATION ASKED AS TO THE "EXTRAORDINARY PURCHASE."

Q. Can you give us any more information as to the change that occurred between April, 1879, and November, 1879, and which will explain the extraordinary purchase made by Mr. Gould from Mr. Ames?—A. There was something that occurred to my mind a few minutes ago, but it passes my recollection just at this moment.

Q. Did the price strike you at the time you received it as something more than you had ever expected to get?—A. There was this remarkable feature about it, which we who were familiar with the thing, and who had worked along with the matter, knew. We knew that to have this property represented by $1,000,000 of stock was a most extraordinary thing. It showed the good faith and the perfect integrity with which we had acted, notwithstanding the action of the Departments towards us. There was a great deal of value thrown into that $1,000,000 of stock, because it controlled this road, and because of the rapid growth of Kansas; and anticipating future values is one thing, receiving values now in hand is another thing. I had supposed that that stock would become very valuable. It was important that our company should belong to the Union Pacific Railroad. I tried to negotiate, or entered somewhat into a negotiation, with Mr. Sidney Dillon. I did not see him personally, but wrote him a long letter on the subject. I have since attributed this purchase to the facts set forth in that letter. We enjoy most remarkable—I say we, although I have no interest in this matter now—but under that charter we enjoy remarkable privileges. The charter is of great value, for one thing. The rapid growth of Kansas is another consideration. The prevention of competition is another consideration. There are some other considerations.

VALUE OF THE CENTRAL BRANCH TO THE UNION PACIFIC.

Q. Please tell us in what possible respect the Union Pacific Central Branch is of any value to the Union Pacific as a tributary or a feeder, or what possible connection it has with it.—A. It has no connection at the present time. I mean by that, connection on the ground.

Q. You mean geographical connection?—A. It has no geographical connection. But the probabilities of connections are great; and if connections were made it would detract, of course, from the road below it, which is about 40 or 50 miles below, I think—the Kansas Pacific—which is now a part of the Union Pacific.

Q. Do you mean, if the road had remained independent and had prolonged itself at its own expense, so as to form a union with the Union Pacific, that it might have been a dangerous competitor to the Kansas Pacific?—A. Yes, sir; and in addition to that, although I cannot give you the particulars, I think Mr. Oakes Ames informed us that there were other parties that were negotiating and were talking about purchasing this road. If it had been purchased, it would have very materially damaged the Union Pacific.

Q. Have you stated all the reasons that you can which shed any light at all on the price that was paid by Mr. Gould to Mr. Ames?—A. I think I have.

Q. In regard to the values derived from these leased lines, how much of the stock in the consolidated company was held by the Central Branch Union Pacific?—A. Some portion of it, but I cannot tell what portion.

ADDITIONAL VALUE "THROWN IN."

Q. The only additional value that would be, as you express it, thrown into the 100 miles, would be derived from the ownership of that stock in the consolidated company, would it not?—A. Yes, sir, and so as to control that they had a lease of it.

Q. But as far as ownership was concerned it would only be represented by the stock, would it not?—A. Only represented by the stock.

Q. And if they did not own any of the stock, there would be nothing thrown into the 100 miles? Of course, if the consolidated company was owned by outsiders, there would be no additional value in selling the 100 miles, because they did not own any portion of the consolidated company. Is not that so?—A. If they did own 100 miles they would have owned a trunk line, and all the business that came in from the country beyond, which was growing rapidly and increasing in value, would have to go over the 100 miles of road. I have been there, and know something about it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am now speaking of the advantage you have referred to before, of value thrown in by reason of the ownership of a portion of this consolidated company. I want to get at what proportion of the whole stock of the consolidated company was held by the Central Branch.

The WITNESS. I cannot tell you, but the books will show that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Mink, can you show that; what is the stock of the consolidated company?

Mr. MINK. I cannot tell you, but it is in our annual report. The Central Branch stock is $1,000,000.

CENTRAL BRANCH OWNERSHIP OF ATCHISON, COLORADO AND PACIFIC STOCK.

The WITNESS. I think I can answer your question. You ask how much the Central Branch owned, of its own right, of the stock of the consolidated company, to wit, the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. You mean the company that owns the railroad lying beyond the 100 miles?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

The WITNESS. I think they were paid for transportation and material in stock, and a certain amount of stock was issued to them, so that they owned that. When they bought the majority of the Central Branch stock from Mr. Oliver Ames they also obtained enough stock of the consolidated company in addition to own and control a majority of that stock, so that they virtually owned and controlled not only the Central Branch, but also the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific extension, and also the Jewell County road.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Did that interest go in the purchase of the Central Branch Union Pacific stock?—A. It went without any further consideration. The stock delivered was not only——

Q. The stock of the 100 miles?—A. For instance, one share of stock went at $250. Not only was the one share of Central Branch delivered, but also a corresponding amount in value, if they had been capitalized at the same amount, of the other 300 miles.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It appears then, from the accounts of the company, that the Central Branch owns 7,857 shares of the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific Railroad. What I understand you to say is, that the sale of the stock of the Central Branch passed not only the Central Branch itself, but the interest of that company in these shares of the consolidated company.

The WITNESS. No, sir; not the sale of the Central Branch stock passed it, but it was delivered outside of it, and by separate certificates.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. To the Union Pacific Company?—A. To Mr. Gould, or whoever took it.

UNION PACIFIC OWNERSHIP OF SAME STOCK.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Do I understand your company has any stock, Mr. Mink?

Mr. MINK. Yes, sir; the Union Pacific Company owns some of the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific and the Central Branch owns a little more. I cannot tell the actual amount, but it appears in our annual report.

Commissioner ANDERSON. So that then the purchase of Central Branch stock passed both a certain amount of the consolidated company's stock by delivery and also a certain ownership by reason of the ownership of the Central Branch itself.

Mr. MINK. I do not know that it passed any by delivery. I cannot tell you how we acquired the $124,000 of stock that the Union Pacific Company own; but the purchase of the Central Branch stock did carry along with it some stock in the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific.

Commissioner ANDERSON. By reason of that stock being in the ownership of the Central Branch?

Mr. MINK. Yes, sir.

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF BRANCHES.

Q. Do you know anything about the financial condition of these branches which were consolidated; how much they were bonded for?—A. They were bonded for $16,000 a mile.

Q. Do you know whether their earnings are equal to their operating expenses and fixed charges?—A. I do not know it of my own knowledge, but I know that the interest is paid.

Q. Do you know that the interest is paid on the bonds of the branches?—A. On the bonds of the branches, yes, sir.

Q. Are you a holder of any of those bonds at present?—A. The Atchison, Colorado and Pacific and Jewell County? No, sir; I am not an owner of a bond.

INTEREST PAID BY MISSOURI PACIFIC.

Q. Do you know that the interest is paid from the earnings of the branches, or whether it is paid by the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company?—A. It must be paid by the Missouri Pacific. I am confident of that, because I have seen statements, I think, of their net earnings. I have seen those statements repeatedly, which show that there is sufficient to pay the interest on those bonds.

Q. Do you know whether it is sufficient or not, or whether the Missouri Pacific pays it as a part of the obligations of its lease?—A. If the statements that have been published are not correct, then it is a false and gross misrepresentation made by the Missouri Pacific road. I presume they are correct, for I never knew Mr. Gould to put his finger to anything that is not straight.

Q. Does the Missouri Pacific publish the accounts of the earnings of the branches separately from the earnings of the system?—A. I think not.

COST AND CHARACTER OF BRANCH CONSTRUCTIONS.

Q. Do you know anything about the actual cost of these branch roads?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do you know the character of the construction? Was there any steel rail?—A. That I do not know. Right in that connection I would like to state something that I had forgotten. I am informed and believe that the Central Branch track has been relaid with steel rails from one end to the other.

Q. On these branches do you know whether there was any cash subscriptions for any of this stock?—A. My impression is that there was, but they were built under construction contracts.

Q. What I want to know is whether those roads represent anything more, any greater expenditure, than the proceeds of their bonds, $16,000 a mile?—A. My impression is that the entire amount of money necessary for their construction was paid in cash by the parties who were interested in the contracts (in only one of which was I interested at all), and that the parties received the bonds, which were the return made for the moneys they had advanced, as a dividend under a construction company.

Q. It is fair to assume that the parties did not part with more than they got under those construction contracts, is it not?—A. I should think it might be.

Q. Is it not your judgment that those roads cost the amounts that they are bonded for and no more?—A. Yes, sir; I should say about that, because iron has been very cheap. At the time those roads were built iron was very cheap indeed, and Mr. Pomeroy looked after that a great deal, and he was a pretty sharp buyer.

LEASE OF THE BRANCHES TO THE CENTRAL BRANCH COMPANY.

Q. Do you know anything about the terms of the leases of these branches to the Central Branch?—A. Yes, sir; I drew that lease myself, and it provides that the lessor——

Q. The Central Branch?—A. The Central Branch should pay a certain amount of money.

Q. One thousand dollars a mile, was it not, per annum?—A. One thousand dollars per mile, which would cover the interest on the bonds, which amounts to $960 a mile, and which leaves a small amount for keeping up the organization; and then they pay, in addition, all taxes of every kind, and do all repairs of every kind, and make all improvements.

Q. How long was this lease to run?—A. I do not remember the length of that lease.

Q. Is not that an important factor in determining the value of these branches to the main road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you not remember that it was twenty-five years?—A. I do not remember that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Mink, how long is the lease?

Mr. MINK. I cannot tell you. I think it was about twenty-five years.

Q. Do you remember in what year the lease was made?—A. That lease must have been made in 1879, I think, to the best of my recollection.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Then it would expire in 1904?

The WITNESS. If it was twenty-five years.

EFFECT OF THE LEASE ON THE VALUE OF THE CENTRAL BRANCH.

Q. In what respect would that lease add so much of value to the Central Branch if it is subject to a readjustment of its terms in a few years?—A. During that period the Central Branch would control the business of the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific, and the Union Pacific owning a majority of the stock of the consolidated company, namely, the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific, would have both roads, one in one pocket and one in the other.

Q. Do you mean to say that the holder of a majority of stock could make inequitable or unjust terms, thereby favoring the corporation which he represented and desired to favor as against a minority; would not he be compelled to make just terms and a just rental?—A. I cannot conceive of any possible circumstances under which the stockholders of the Atchison, Colorado and Pacific would want to dissolve their connection with the Central Branch Union Pacific.

Q. Might they not demand such an increase of rental as would substantially give to them most of the benefits and leave very little to the Central Branch?—A. That might be; you cannot tell what might occur in the future.

GUARANTY OF BRANCH BONDS BY CENTRAL BRANCH COMPANY.

Q. Do you know to what amount the Central Branch has guaranteed the bonds of the branch roads?—A. They have guaranteed, my recollection is, the principal and interest. But I should want to refer to the bonds for greater certainty.

COUNTY AID TO BRANCHES.

Q. Do you know what county aid was extended to those branch roads?—A. No, sir. I heard at the time, but I cannot tell you anything about it.

Q. What company were you interested in?—A. It was the last company; the road was built under the last charter, at the further end. I do not remember the name. [After looking at a memorandum.] My recollection is that the name of the company in which I was interested, which was at the further end, the most westerly end, was the Atchison, Solomon Valley and Western Railroad.

Q. Did that company ever receive any county aid?—A. I think it did.

Q. Do you know how much?—A. I cannot tell you. They were obtained through the instrumentality of Mr. William F. Downs, who was then our manager.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Your superintendent?

The WITNESS. Superintendent. Mr. Downs is dead.

WITNESS'S INTEREST IN ATCHISON, SOLOMON VALLEY AND WESTERN ROAD.

Q. What was your interest in the construction of that road; what share?—A. We subscribed with a view of going to Denver.

Q. What proportion did you take?—A. I subscribed $250,000.

Q. What was the total subscription?—A. I do not know. I cannot tell. We were cut short by the arrangements made with Mr. Gould, and I paid in about $100,000, I should think. But I am not sure about the amount.

Q. Do you know what the total amount was for which your road was bonded?—A. $16,000 a mile.

Q. How many miles, do you recollect?—A. I cannot recollect now.

Q. What did you get for your $100,000?—A. If I paid in $100,000, I cannot tell you, I do not remember now, but I made a handsome profit on it.

RELATION OF COST TO EARNING CAPACITY OF BRANCHES.

Commissioner ANDERSON. What we want is to ascertain the relation between cost and earning capacity of these branches.

The WITNESS. I have no hesitation in stating anything I can to the Commission.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I want to know whether this particular branch that you were interested in cost as much as was represented by its bonded indebtedness, after deducting the county aids.

The WITNESS. I should think not. That is my impression.

Q. Is it your judgment that this same state of affairs applies to the other branches?—A. I should think there was more money made off the first road, that is eventually, although the parties ran a great deal of risk. On the first 20 or 30 miles that they built on the end of the Central Branch, I think more money was made by the parties who were then interested than was made by those of us who were interested in the farther end. I had no faith then in the thing. I was completely demoralized by this public clamor at Washington, and I was unfit to look at anything. Other parties went in and——

Commissioner ANDERSON (interposing). I think you went in pretty well yourself, and you saw a pretty good pile at the end of it.

The WITNESS. Just explain that.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I mean to say you stuck to it until you made a magnificent bargain with Mr. Gould.

The WITNESS. It would have been far better for me if I had taken that $100,000 and burnt it up than it has been. It broke up my business, for I went to Washington and devoted myself exclusively to this matter. I devoted more than six of the best years of my life to it, and it has enabled me (perhaps it is no credit) to know as much about these Pacific railroad laws, perhaps, as any other man to-day, with the exception, perhaps, of my worthy friend here.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I yield to you.

Q. Are you now a holder of any of the Central Branch bonds?—A. I am not personally. My family owns some.

Q. Some of the first-mortgage bonds?—A. The first-mortgage bonds.

Q. Of the same lot that were originally issued?—A. Of the first-mortgage bonds of the Central Branch, my daughter owns some. I have one child, a daughter.

EXPENSES AT WASHINGTON, $4,325.28.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We find some entries that appear to refer to you in the journal. I read one under date of September 10, 1868; "E. H. Nichols, credit amount paid per R. M. Pomeroy and self for congressional traveling and expenses at Washington, $4,325.28." Please look at that entry and state whether you recollect that expenditure?

The WITNESS. I believe that to be perfectly correct. I do not remember the details of it, but not one dollar of that or any other charge was ever improperly used.

Q. That amount of money was spent by you in Washington during that session, was it?—A. By Mr. Pomeroy and myself, as it appears here. That is, I have no doubt of its correctness. If this is taken from Mr. Sother's books, they were examined by myself and Mr. Pomeroy, and I have no doubt of its correctness.

Q. Do you remember that you were in Washington during that year of 1868?—A. I was in Washington. I went on to Washington at the close of the year 1866. I supposed that I might remain there, and so told my wife, that I might remain there a month or two in order to get matters adjusted. I remained there until April, 1873.

Q. Do you remember whether in 1868, when this statement was made up, representing this expenditure of money, a voucher was prepared?—A. No; I do not recollect anything about it.

Q. Do you remember whether it was the custom to pay you such sums without your giving a voucher therefor?—A. I think the whole thing was explained to the committee. There may have been a voucher or detailed statement of it prepared. I presume it was prepared by Mr. Pomeroy, for he attended to the money matters.

Q. Do you remember how long a period of time this payment covered?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember what the character of the expense was which was charged to this railroad company?

The WITNESS. What is the date of it?

Commissioner ANDERSON. September 10, 1868, for Congressional traveling and expenses at Washington.

A. I cannot tell you.

NATURE OF THOSE EXPENSES.

Q. Can you tell us, from recollection, what was the nature of your expenditures in Washington?

The WITNESS. At that time?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes.

A. Mr. Pomeroy employed a number of persons as counsel, whose names I have mentioned, and there was a great deal of printing going on. I cannot tell you.

Q. Do you mention these names in connection with this particular period, September, 1868?—A. No, sir; I cannot recollect about the dates.

Q. You do not mean that any portion of this was applied to the payment of counsel fees to some of these gentlemen you have referred to—Mr. Evarts and others—do you?—A. Not to the main counsel, for I employed them all myself; but to some of the others it may have been paid.

INTERVIEWING MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Q. Will you please name any person whom you believe to be covered by an entry made in September, 1868?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Were you yourself in the habit of interviewing members of Congress with reference to the interests of the company?—A. Yes, sir; in reference to this bill that we passed; I became acquainted, I think, with every member of the Senate.

Q. Was that applicable to the year 1868? At that time had the Kansas Pacific changed its route?—A. Oh, yes, sir. I think we did not come with our bill before the Senate until after Cox's decision. The three Pacific railroad acts are dated July 1, July 2, and July 3, one in 1862, one in 1864, and one in 1866. Cox's decision had not at that time been given. Cox's decision was dated the 27th of January, 1870, and this was September, 1868, you say.

Q. Can you give us any detail at all which can fit this item?—A. No, sir, I cannot. Will you please read the words preceding it?

Commissioner ANDERSON (reading): "Amount paid for R. M. Pomeroy and self for Congressional traveling and expenses at Washington, $4,325.28."

The WITNESS. I cannot recollect it.

Q. How would you explain this expression, "Congressional traveling"?—A. It is a common phrase—going on to Washington.

Q. Do you think "Congressional" is used as an adjective to qualify "traveling," or that there should be a comma between those words?—A. It is difficult for me to tell what other people mean. The word "Congressional," I can conceive, might be used by those who are not experienced, as pertaining to Washington.

Q. Can you shed no light on it at all?—A. I have a pretty clear recollection, and I should think that that was some of Mr. Pomeroy's work.

Q. You do not think you worded that sentence?—A. No, sir; I think likely that is Sother's sentence, or Sother's and Pomeroy's together.

NO PORTION OF EXPENSES USED TO INFLUENCE MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Q. Do you state, under oath, that no portion of this money was, to your knowledge, used for the purpose of influencing any member of Congress?—A. I do.

Q. In any way, shape, or form?—A. In any way, shape, or form.

SOME DINNERS GIVEN.

Q. Do you extend that so far as to include the giving of dinners?—A. No, sir; there were some dinners given.

Q. Some of that money may have been expended in that way?—A. That may be, but I think it was after that. I think there were two or three dinners given at the Arlington, but I was not present at any one of them. Some of the parties there thought it would be a good opportunity to get acquainted with members of Congress and for talking to them in regard to it. When I went there I did not know as much as I know now.

Q. Is there any other form of spreading the railroad gospel that you are acquainted with, that was in use at Washington when you were there, than giving dinners?

The WITNESS. What is that?

PURPOSES FOR WHICH MONEY WAS USED.

Q. Is there anything else that those moneys were used for, in forms that you would consider perfectly justifiable and not amounting to bribery, besides the giving of dinners?—A. No money was ever used for any purpose that I have any knowledge or recollection of, excepting for counsel fees, and for board of counsel and myself; and I think I did not even charge for my family when I was there; and there was also the printing. I should think the printing bills must have amounted to $10,000, for I have got boxes enough to indicate that. There were also stenographer's fees and traveling expenses.

Q. Are you quoting from any memorandum of figures, or merely from a memorandum made to refresh your mind?—A. No, sir. At your request I tried to think over this matter, and I made some memoranda which is at your service to examine.

FURTHER EXPENSES AT WASHINGTON, $7,140.

Q. I find a subsequent entry, "April 5, 1869, sundry expenses incurred by me in Washington to date, for traveling, board, printing, and sundry special expenses, $2,140; retaining fee, W. M. Evarts, $5,000; total $7,140." The item begins, "E. H. Nichols, credit." That appears to be credited to you in your account with the company. In regard to the $2,000, have you any further explanation to give as to that item than you have given already?—A. No, sir.

FOR SPECIAL SERVICES OF WITNESS, $20,000.

Q. I find under date of January 1, 1870, "Effingham H. Nichols, credit, special services rendered during construction of the road, $20,000." What was that credited to you for?—A. It was for services rendered during the construction of the road.

Q. Special service of what character?—A. As lawyer.

Q. Is there a bill of items covering that amount?—A. I think not. I think you will find it all in the minutes. I recollect something about that.

Q. Has this entry any connection with the subsequent adjustment that you have referred to, after the sale to Mr. Gould?—A. No, sir; nothing.

Q. Was this $20,000 paid to you by the company?—A. That is my recollection. I am under the impression that it was paid, but it is so many years ago I do not remember.

FOR DISBURSEMENTS AND SERVICES, $23,344.91.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Then I find the following entry, under date of July 15, 1870, "For disbursements and services between January 1 and July 12, 1870, promoting the passage of bills for the relief of the Central Branch U. P. R. R. Co., $23,344.91."

The WITNESS. That must have been money paid out by Pomeroy and myself.

Q. Was there any voucher prepared?—A. As I say, the particulars of it were all furnished at the time,

Q. Can you give us no information as to an item of this size, $23,000, embracing a period of only a few months?

The WITNESS. What year was that?

Commissioner ANDERSON. 1870. The first six months of 1870.

The WITNESS. It must have embraced counsel fees, and it must have embraced something to me on account—some fees to me, probably.

Commissioner ANDERSON. This is in addition to the item of $20,000 which we have just passed. It is a separate entry.

The WITNESS. Let me see. [After examining the statement.] All I can say is that I should think that we spent in counsel fees and in printing, and in these things which I have named, in Washington—I cannot speak with any definiteness—more than $75,000; perhaps over $100,000. Mr. Evarts argued the case three times; Mr. Benjamin R. Curtis gave us two different opinions and argued the case once; Mr. Hoar argued the case twice or three times.

Q. Were any of the employments that you have referred to prior to July, 1870?—A. I should think they must have been; certainly. Oh, yes, sir.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The application of this money, as stated in the entry, is for promoting passage of bills for the relief of the company?

The WITNESS. I am not the author of that language. I suppose that was put in there by Thomas M. Sother.

Commissioner ANDERSON. He must have obtained it from the vouchers or explanation given to him by yourself.

The WITNESS. I think those things were all caused to be entered in there by Mr. R. M. Pomeroy.

AMOUNT PAID GENERAL JAMES CRAIG, $500.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I find an entry under date of October 12, 1868, "by amount paid General James Craig, $500."

The WITNESS. Who is that charged to?

Commissioner ANDERSON. It is credited to you. "Expenses to Kansas and back, $263.24. Cash paid on account of Central Branch Railroad Company, $1,000;" and, 15th October, same amount again, $1,000. Will you see if you can explain those entries?

The WITNESS. I have no recollection about that, and I do not believe any such money was ever paid by me. I am sure it was not. But I think that had something to do with politics—Mr. Pomeroy's operations out there—but what, I do not know.

Q. Why should it be credited to you?—A. Because, I suppose, I was called upon to sign a check.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It would not be credited to you unless you signed your own check.

The WITNESS. Is it credited to me?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes, sir; that is a credit to you; and it means that you had stated to the company that you had paid General Craig $500 and wanted it back.

The WITNESS. I do not believe I paid General Craig any $500. I think, if that was paid, it was paid by Mr. Pomeroy.

Commissioner ANDERSON. You may have paid Mr. Pomeroy. He may have said he preferred to have it entered that way, and had it credited to you, and you paid it to him.

The WITNESS. It may have been something of that kind. I do not recollect about it.

Afternoon session.

EFFINGHAM H. NICHOLS, being further examined, testified as follows:

AS TO VALUE RECEIVED BY COMPANY FOR STOCK ISSUED.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Before resuming this question of legal expenses, I have examined the report made to us from the books of the company, and I would like to see whether I can get any more information from you as to the value received by the company from these stock issues. The entries on the books contain a statement of all the issues of stock, giving the number of shares issued to each person, the name of the person receiving the stock, the date of the issue, and the only cash which the books of the company show to have been received from this stock. The statement also includes the stock operations on the $400,000 subsequently issued and contains a statement of the exact amounts paid on these stock operations. I will hand you this statement, from which it would appear that the entire amount received by the company for both the original issues of stock and the amounts paid in on the stock options, was $386,700 [handing paper to witness]. That is from pages 84 and 85 of the auditor's report.

The WITNESS. Any statement which purports to come from the books of the company, and from which any conclusion can be drawn that a less amount than $1,000,000 was paid for the $1,000,000 stock, is false and untrue so far as the conclusion derived therefrom, with the exception, I think, of a balance due on the amounts of stock that were issued to R. M. Pomeroy of—I cannot recollect the amount—somewhere, I should say, from $2,000 to $5,000, or $6,000 or $7,000, that was not paid at the time that we delivered over the books.

Q. Do you consider the stock which you issued as compensation for loans, for instance, as stock which produced its par value in cash?—A. There was no stock ever issued for anything excepting cash.

Q. Was no stock ever issued as compensation for loans?—A. No, sir; every dollar was paid in, with the exception that I have named, which will appear upon the books in the pencil memorandum, made after a most careful and elaborate examination. I think it was made by Mr. Sother or by myself, and I think it is the only memorandum that I have ever made in any of the books.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The statement made by you is that 1,616 shares of this stock, in addition to another entry, to which I will call your attention in a moment, of 199 shares, were issued to you, and the only credit for value received by the company from you for that 1,600 shares of stock is $62,100

The WITNESS. Whatever those statements are, they are misleading. There is another book which was kept by Willis Gaylord; and the first payment—for instance, my proportion of it was something like $60,000—will appear in that book, and in the books then that followed it, which were kept by Mr. Sother. Whatever stock I held—at different times I held different amounts of stock, but whatever stock was issued by the company the company has received full value for, with the exception of what I referred to as to Mr. Pomeroy.

Q. How many shares of stock were issued to you on these stock options?—A. Whatever amount I paid in. For instance—this is the only answer I can give—if I had paid in $60,000, then 600 shares of stock were issued to me, and no more and no less in that proportion, and nothing else.

Q. How many shares of stock did you pass to Mr. Ames?—A. I owned at that time, I think, 901 shares, and my father's estate owned 100 shares; and I passed to Mr. Oliver Ames, as the books will show (for I have a copy of that book at my office, which I retained for my own satisfaction), 1,000 shares.

Q. Had you sold some of your stock between the time when you subscribed to the option and the time when you sold to Mr. Ames?—A. Yes, sir; I had sold, and I think I had bought. But I do not remember about that particularly.

Q. The entry against you is for 1,616 shares of stock. Are you prepared to state whether that is or is not the amount of stock that was issued to you on these stock options?—A. I do not think any such amount of stock was issued to me on any stock option. There could not have been in the nature of things.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We can only take the entries as we find them in the books, and that is the way we do find it there entered.

The WITNESS. There are other portions of the book which will explain that. I am confident there must be.

AMOUNT PAID FOR STOCK BY WITNESS.

Q. Can you tell us what money you paid to the Central Branch Company for the amount of this stock subscription?—A. I paid at the rate of $60 on every share of stock and afterwards $40.

Q. Do you know what amount of money you paid?—A. I cannot tell you. But it was at that rate, whatever the amount was that I had at that time.

Q. Would there be any difficulty in ascertaining from your account how much you paid in?—A. I should think an expert could easily ascertain.

Q. Have you not any account of transactions in that year which will show how much money you paid to the Central Branch? If you have, we could ascertain how many shares of stock you would be entitled to.—A. I do not believe I have, in any way. But I make this general statement, that I never received a share of stock but what was paid for in full.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The difficulty with us is that somebody else got it other than the Central Branch Company.

The WITNESS. The Central Branch Company got every dollar of it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The books show otherwise.

The WITNESS. Then the books have not been properly examined.

WHAT THE BOOKS SHOW.

Commissioner ANDERSON. But the consideration and advantages obtained by the company, as shown by this balance sheet, do not bear you out. They contain a statement of all the assets it received, and all the company has to show for it, and all the cash entered as coming from the stock subscribed for by you, is $62,100.

The WITNESS. I think you stated that for the whole capital stock all that they received was—how much?

Commissioner ANDERSON. $386,700.

OTHER BOOKS KEPT.

The WITNESS. That is explained upon this principle: That the money that was paid in upon the stock options is in another book entirely that was kept by Willis Gaylord, who was treasurer, not only of the company, but also of the Construction Company, and the $600,000 was paid in there. This amount, $386,000, that ought to have shown $400,000 for the stock, was issued to us at that time, we having already paid in, as appears by another set of books, $600,000; I mean $600,000 in round numbers. It was intended to be that. Then, as to the remaining stock that was issued, every dollar of that stock which I got I paid for; and so it was with every one else. There is an affidavit of mine in one of those books, which I know is true, otherwise I would not have sworn to it at the time. I will read it, and it may throw light upon this:

READING FROM AN AFFIDAVIT.

That a contract for the construction of the first 100 miles of the said railroad was made upon the 9th day of May, 1865.

That contract was made long before that, but some features of it were changed, and the date was altered.

That by mutual understanding and agreement, no material work was commenced under said contract until the month of July following.

That is to say, until the expiration of one year from the passage of the Pacific Railroad act of July 2, 1864.

That at the time of the making of said contract the entire capital stock of said company was subscribed, namely, $1,000,000; that during the summer and fall of the year 1865 nearly $480,000 thereof was paid into the treasury, and that on or about the month of July, 1866, the further amount of about $420,000 was paid into the treasury in cash; that since that time the residue of said capital stock, namely, $400,000, excepting about $26,800——

Does that make up the difference?

Commissioner ANDERSON. This is $386,700, which is $13,300 short.

The WITNESS:

That since that time the residue of said capital stock, namely, $400,000, excepting $26,800, has been paid into the treasury in cash; that said $26,800 is due and payable from the stockholders, who, by reason of sickness or some other cause, have not yet paid the same; and that no part of said amounts have ever been repaid to said stockholders, but that the whole amount, now amounting to upwards of $1,000,000, has been disbursed and expended, etc.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. How did you happen to make that affidavit?—A. To show our good faith before Congress, or at least before the Departments.

By Mr. JOHN F. DILLON:

Q. What is the date of it?—A. The 5th day of April, 1869.

WHAT THE BOOKS SHOW AS TO PAYMENTS MADE.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. The statement taken from the books contains not only the stock subscribed for on the stock option of $400,000, but all the prior subscriptions of Chalice, Brooks, Pomeroy, and others, and it is only by adding all those together that we obtain the figures $386,700. The payments that appear on the books to have been made on the stock options do not exceed $150,000. Can you explain, if there be any other book that contains evidence of the receipt of moneys belonging to this corporation, how it is possible to ascertain what benefit the corporation would be entitled to therefrom? From the books we have all the contracts and obligations appearing against the company as having been satisfied out of these assets that they have received, and there is no eviwhatever tending to show that you or any of these other gentlemen paid these other sums.—A. There is a book that we obtained from Gaylord, with whom we had trouble, which must be in the possession of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, which, while it is unsatisfactory to us, yet it must show a certain amount of money received and a certain amount of money paid to Osborn on account of construction of the road. As matter of fact, or at least I know so far as I myself am concerned, and so far as a great many other gentlemen are concerned that I am familiar with, they had paid in $600,000. That was paid in. The other was called stock option. Parties could take it if they chose. They took it and agreed to pay in the other $400,000, all of which was at this date, or had been at this date, paid in, with the exception of $30,000. I am very sure that when the books were handed over—I think Mr. Mink will find in Mr. Pomeroy's account a memorandum of something, with the dates, on account of the stock that was issued to him. I do not remember the amount, and I think it is written in pencil.

WITNESS PAID CASH FOR ALL HE GOT.

Q. To put the question directly to you, if you received 900 shares of stock on these stock options, do I understand you to say that you paid $90,000 in cash for it?—A. If I received 900 shares, I paid $90,000 for in cash. If I did.

Q. So that whatever stock you received you paid for in full?—A. Whatever stock I received I paid for in full.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. In cash?—A. In cash; in money.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The total amount which appears to have been received by this company for the stock options is $167,000, and no more.

The WITNESS. If you mean to state that that appears by the books——

Commissioner ANDERSON (interposing). I do.

THE ACCOUNTANT COULD NOT HAVE SEEN ALL THE BOOKS.

The WITNESS (continuing). I state in reply that there must be a mistake about that, and the accountant who went over it was not put in possession of the proper books from which to ascertain the result.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I would say, in explanation of what I have stated, that from the accountant's statement to me, it is not clear from the books exactly what was received on the stock options as distinguished from what was received from the other $600,000 of stock issued before; but that the books show that the total amount received from all sources, for the whole million dollars of stock, is $386,700; and that you state must be erroneous?

THE WITNESS CANNOT BE MISTAKEN THAT ONE MILLION DOLLARS WAS PAID IN, IN CASH.

The WITNESS. I state that that is necessarily erroneous, and cannot be otherwise. I will state further, that at the time the 6,000 shares were issued, the parties having paid in the money before at different periods as it was called for, interest was allowed on them up to the day of issue of the stock, and that interest and the price paid amounted to $600,000, for which 6,000 shares of stock were issued; and then the 4,000 shares were issued, and my recollection is that every dollar of it was paid for at par. I cannot be mistaken about it. It was paid in cash, every dollar of it.

Commissioner LITTLER. Mr. Mink, have you no book in your possession that shows these facts?

Mr. MINK. No, sir; everything was turned over to the accountants.

The WITNESS. I will inquire if you have Willis Gaylord's books?

Mr. MINK. I do not know them by that name. We have all the books that were turned over to us at the time of the purchase.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Perannoud says he has not seen that Willis Gaylord book.

The WITNESS. The only book that I ever got out of Willis Gaylord was one book which was I suppose delivered over. It was a very simple affair, containing the amount he paid out on one side, and the amount he received on the other. Whether he had written it up to date or not, I do not know. We had trouble with him. We had paid in the $600,000, that is, such sum as, with the interest, amounted to $600,000, up to the date of the issuing of this stock.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Did this trouble with Mr. Gaylord result in his refusing to surrender up a portion of the books which he kept?—A. It grew out of our trying to find out what the "existing obligations" were for.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Do you remember that 199 shares of this stock was subsequently issued to you after the sale to Mr. Gould?

The WITNESS. After the sale to Mr. Gould?

Commissioner ANDERSON. On the 29th of January, 1879; that was ten months before the sale to Gould?

CERTIFICATES OF INTEREST IN THE OSBORN CONTRACT.

The WITNESS. I can recall a circumstance of this kind: that I bought some certificates (upon which parties had paid) of interest in the Osborn contract, and I took them and paid up the difference and the stock was issued to me.

Q. Were those certificates taken as money at their face value?—A. They were taken at their face value.

Q. To what kind of a certificate do you refer?—A. I refer to a certificate—I can not recall it exactly, but I think the form of the certificate was that such a person was entitled to so much; or it was in the nature of an assignment of these parties who had assigned this Osborn construction contract. Parties who had taken interest in that transferred it from one person to another, and sold interests in that contract upon which payments had been made.

Q. By them?—A. By them.

Q. And then the certificates represented or stated the amount which they had advanced?—A. It stated the amount which they had advanced. That appeared upon the certificate, and the party receiving the certificate, of course, would have to pay up the difference if calls were made, if they were behind on them.

WHAT THEY ENTITLED THE HOLDER TO.

Q. Why should that certificate represent an amount in money which the Central Branch was bound to pay?—A. It had nothing to do with the Central Branch. The holder of that certificate was entitled to have 1 share issued to him for every $100 that he had paid on account of that certificate; and if I bought the certificate I was entitled, upon showing evidence that I was the assignee of that certificate, to receive from the company my certificate of stock for 1 share, which carried with it the option in the relation of 40 to 60. For instance, suppose it was for 100 shares; supposing there had been $6,000 paid, 1 was entitled to 60 shares, and I was entitled to the option of 40 shares more upon paying the $4,000 for it.

Q. Were you also entitled to the four bonds that would belong with the option?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you were entitled to come in as a subscriber to the 4,000 shares, being, under this certificate, entitled to be a holder under the 6,000 shares?—A. I stood in the shoes of the man who originally subscribed.

Q. Is that your recollection of the manner in which you obtained this 100 shares of stock?—A. I had no distinct recollection about any specific number of shares. I never acquired any certificate or any stock without paying its full face.

Q. You do not mean necessarily in money, do you?—A. Necessarily in money; yes, sir.

Q. In this case do you say that the consideration you paid was by delivery of this certificate to the company, which entitled you to stock?—A. Yes, sir; the man who had held that certificate paid every dollar on it, and I paid the balance.

AS TO THE CONSIDERATION PAID TO THE COMPANY WHEN ISSUING STOCK.

Q. I am only asking what consideration was paid to the company at the time of the issuing of this stock? I understand the 199 shares——A. (Interposing.) I paid to them the balance that had not been already paid at par. For instance, of the $19,900 sixty per cent. of this had been already paid in cash and the balance I paid in cash.

Q. To whom did you deliver the certificates that you held?—A. That I cannot tell.

THE PROBABLE WHEREABOUTS OF THE CERTIFICATES.

Q. The regular form would have been to deliver them to the treasurer of the company, would it not?—A. I should not be surprised if these certificates were somewhere about the office.

Q. About whose office?—A. About my office at the present time. The only reason for that belief is this, that I once owned the property where I am now sitting, and my office was here, as was also the office of the treasurer of the company. The office of the company in the city of New York was here, I think—just about here. I sold this property to Mr. Astor and we moved from here to No. 20 Nassau street. The clerk that I had then, my chief clerk, died suddenly a year and a half since. A great many papers were destroyed, but I think a paper like that may possibly be in some of the safes. I bought the safe from the company and all the papers that were really valuable were delivered by Mr. Sother to our successors, but it may possibly be that those papers may be in my office. If so, I will hunt for them and send them to you, although they ought to be kept carefully as muniments of the title of the interest in that construction company.

Q. The certificate that you refer to is evidently a voucher to the company for the issuing of the stock; that is so, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; it is evidently a voucher.

Q. If you have it, will you kindly produce it?—A. I will deliver it if I can find it. Those papers are all together, I think. I think that those things were examined and were all put in one envelope together. They ought to be in the possession of our successors.

Q. In exercising the option on the certificate, do you say that you took it up and paid at par for the balance of the stock which you were entitled to receive?—A. Yes, sir.

PRICE OF THE STOCK IN JANUARY, 1879.

Q. Can you explain why, in January, 1879, when the stock of this company could be bought in the market for a trifle, you would do that?—A. That is hearsay—selling in the market for a trifle.

Commissioner ANDERSON. No; it has been sworn to.

The WITNESS. I think I had been on to Boston and there went out and dined with Mr. Oliver Ames and Mr. R. M. Pomeroy. I remember that while at dinner Mr. Ames wanted to buy 100 shares of stock of me. I agreed to sell it to him at 120 and I was surprised; I did not know what it meant. It began to go through my mind that there was something up.

Q. Mr. Ames's testimony is that as early as January, 1879, the stock was selling for a mere trifle. It was before your income mortgage had been made. That is the date of the issue of 199 shares to you. Can you explain why, at that time, you would have been willing to pay par for any portion of this stock of this company?—A. I cannot tell now what that refers to. Have you the books here?

Commissioner ANDERSON. No; these are only extracts.

The WITNESS. I think the books would explain where I got that from. I mean the stock books.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It does not appear from the books that the company received any consideration whatever for these 199 shares of stock.

Mr. PERENNOUD. The stock books merely show the issuance to you of the 199 shares, and that is all.

The WITNESS. I beg leave to say that the books of the company must show it and do show it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We will have them brought on here and exhibit them to you.

The WITNESS. Mr. Pomeroy was too sharp a man, in looking after things, not to have seen that.

HOW MUCH MONEY CENTRAL BRANCH RECEIVED FOR FIRST-MORTGAGE BONDS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. In regard to the mortgages, you have stated that $400,000 of the $1,600,000 were distributed as inducements to stock subscriptions?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. You have also stated that a number of them were paid out in settlement of prior liabilities, and a number of them were paid out as compensation for loans. Can you state, with any degree of approximation, how much the Central Branch received in money for the $1,600,000 of first-mortgage bonds?—A. I cannot tell you. The books will show.

Q. It appears from the books that the whole amount received from this issue was $567,612.14. Have you anything to say in regard to the accuracy of that figure?—A. I will state this: That about 400 were retained by Willis Gaylord, and they never came into our hands; that 100 were given to Mr. Wheeler, the Englishman, in settlement with him; and that 400 were distributed with the stock options. That made 900, leaving 750. I should think that at least 50 of those were given for commissions upon loans. That would leave $600,000. What was the amount received for them?

Mr. NORRIS. $567,000.

The WITNESS. I am astonished at that statement, because they produced more than I should suppose. It only goes to show the good faith of the parties who subscribed and took these bonds, and I am surprised they should have got that amount for them.

Q. Did you yourself subscribe for bonds?—A. I think that I did, but what I paid for them I do not remember.

Q. Do you remember whether you paid par for them?—A. No, sir; I should think not. I am not positive that I did take any.

BOND-PURCHASES IN NAME OF WITNESS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We find on the 24th of April, 1866, this entry: "E. H. Nichols, 25 bonds for $17,500."

The WITNESS. I think very likely that various clients of mine wanted to obtain bonds, and they were offered for that price and I bought them for them. I paid the money. It is so long since that I cannot recollect, but I think that is the explanation.

Commissioner ANDERSON. On June 5, the same year, we find this entry: "E. H. Nichols, four bonds, $2,800."

The WITNESS. That is at 70; yes, sir. That goes to corroborate it. I have a faint impression that we offered the bonds at one time at 70 or 75.

Commissioner ANDERSON. On October 1, 1866, we find an entry of twenty-eight bonds for $19,600, also at 70 cents on the dollar.

The WITNESS. I think I was the medium for paying for them, but I do not think I ever bought so many of them for myself.

Commissioner ANDERSON. On October 31 and November 1, we find two entries: "E. H. Nichols, 16 bonds, $11,200," and "4 bonds, $2,800," all at 70.

The WITNESS. I think the probability is that most of those bonds were ordered from Boston by Mr. Pomeroy, and the money was sent to me, and Mr. Sother made an entry of the transaction, and delivered to me the bonds and received from me the money. But I do not think those purchases were made by me for my own interest in any way.

Q. Do you make the same answer as to all the purchases that have been made through you, of bonds?—A. Yes, sir. I cannot make any other. Do you see the name R. M. Pomeroy down there often?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Oh, yes; Mr. Pomeroy's name appears here.

The WITNESS. Then he was in town, and he would take care of himself.

AN EXPLANATION.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I would like you to explain a little more definitely what is the meaning of the entry that the stock subscriptions were directed to be applied by the treasurer to the liquidation of the amounts due by the parties in interest on the construction account.

The WITNESS. I mean that there were moneys due for material. That must have been so. It could bear no other possible construction. Moneys were due for material and for labor on the road. This book of Mr. Willis Gaylord's is a very large book, bound in red.

Q. Is Mr. Willis Gaylord living?—A. I do not know whether he is or not.

Q. Where does he live?—A. He lived in Brooklyn. I should think he was alive. He is a brother of the first wife of Senator Samuel C. Pomeroy, and he married the daughter of some man that formerly kept an iron foundery in Brooklyn.

Q. Do you know who his connections are in New York—his lawyer or any one else—so that we could ascertain about him?—A. No, sir; I do not. You may find the name Willis Gaylord in the directory.

THE TREDWELL SUIT.

Q. There have been a number of litigations arising out of these matters, have there not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you please enumerate the prominent litigations?—A. There was a suit brought by one Samuel Lennox Tredwell, which was brought against every stockholder and the company, alleging that he was entitled to a division of the assets under the Osborn contract. That case came to trial, and we satisfied the court and jury that that contract was never performed; that it was abandoned, and the road was built by the company.

Q. Who was Mr. Tredwell's counsel?—A. A prominent judge here who died up at Tarrytown or Yonkers. If I heard the name I could tell.

Commissioner ANDERSON. It was not Judge Barnard?

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Was it Beach?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. Beach was his counsel.

Q. Who was the counsel for the company?—A. Messrs. Sterling & Walden. Mr. Sterling is living in Massachusetts, but Mr. Walden is the man who attended to it.

Q. Which Mr. Walden?—A. He is around in Liberty street, in the building in the rear of the Mutual Life. I was also counsel.

Q. Was that case carried up on appeal?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you a copy of the record of the proofs taken?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Has Mr. Walden?—A. Mr. Walden may have. I think it likely he has. It was taken down by the court stenographer. I should think it could be found.

Q. What year was it tried in?—A. It was a great many years ago.

Q. Before the transfer to Mr. Gould?—A. Oh, yes, sir; it was somewhere, I should think, between 1872 and 1877.

THE CHALICE SUIT.

Q. What other suits were tried?—A. There was a man—I have already given his name once here——

Commissioner ANDERSON. Chalice?

The WITNESS. A man by the name of Chalice, who brought a suit. I forget the particulars of it. I think it was a suit for stock which he alleged was agreed to be given and delivered to him, to the best of my recollection, for services that he rendered in doing a variety of things, and among other things in obtaining for the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company an assignment from the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad Company, which then had its offices in Boston, to the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company.

Q. Was that suit tried?—A. That suit was tried before a referee, and the testimony of Mr. Chalice was given, stating that at such a day he was at Boston, &c. We afterwards found, by an investigation of certain books that lay at that time in the cellar of the Astor House, that Mr. Chalice was in this city at that time. We explained the matter to him and he retracted what he had stated.

Q. Who were the counsel in that case?—A. Our counsel was Mr. Walden again, and Mr. John K. Porter. The counsel on the other side I cannot tell.

Q. Who was the referee?—A. I think the present Judge Ingraham, but I am not positive about that. It was before he was judge.

Q. Were these suits tried in New York?—A. Yes, sir; in the city of New York.

Q. Would Mr. Walden have a copy of that record and of the evidence?—A. I should think he might have it. I do not know. I cannot tell.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The suit was by Chalice against the company, as I understand it.

The WITNESS. Chalice against the company. That is my recollection of it.

Q. Mr. Willis Gaylord also brought a suit, did he not?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Was there not a settlement with him?—A. That was referred to a committee, and whether there was a settlement made or not I do not know. There was a settlement made with this Mr. Chalice.

Q. Was not the amount $20,000?

The WITNESS. Was that in bonds or what?

Mr. NORRIS. It was ten bonds and $10,000.

WILLIAM OSBORN'S SUIT.

Q. Did not Mr. Osborn bring a suit?—A. No, sir; not to my recollection. At the time we threw up this contract entirely, we bought out his interest in it and had it canceled. I do not remember when.

Q. Have you no recollection of a suit brought by Mr. Osborn and Mr. Charles Gould in 1878?

The WITNESS. Do you say William Osborn?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes; Mr. William Osborn and Mr. Charles Gould.

The WITNESS. I do not believe that any such suit was ever brought. I think that Charles Gould was dead, and that he died of heart disease abroad many years ago.

Commissioner ANDERSON. There is at page 249, on April 11, 1878, a reference in the minutes to a suit begun by William Osborn and Charles Gould for the payment of interest on the mortgage bonds of the company.

The WITNESS. I have no recollection about that. Yes, I do recollect now, something about a suit. This Mr. Osborn was not willing to have his bonds funded, and he brought suit, and I think we had to settle with him.

Q. Is he living now?—A. I do not know. If so, he is at a place called Watertown in this State, or at least he was there once. I do not know where he is now. His suit was a perfectly legitimate and proper suit.

AS TO THE LANDS OF THE CENTRAL BRANCH COMPANY.

Q. Can you give us any information in regard to the disposition made of the lands of this company?—A. I cannot tell you. The records were all kept in the land office out at Atchison, and I know nothing about them.

Q. Who were the trustees?—A. I refer now, by that, to the sale of lands, of which record was kept out there. Mr. Pomeroy, I think, was made trustee in one deed of trust, which had for its object, among other things, to secure $75,000 which we borrowed of the Freedman's Savings Bank, and some other things. Those claims were all paid up in cash by Mr. Pomeroy.

Q. What were the Kickapoo lands?—A. The Kickapoo tribe of Indians had a reservation in Kansas, out on our road about 20 miles, and there was some treaty made with them long before I knew anything about it—it is a matter of public record in the proceedings of Congress—under which we became entitled to purchase some lands. Those lands were sold, and were a part of the lands that were owned by the company.

WHAT THE BOOKS SHOW AS TO THE RECEIPTS FROM LANDS.

Q. How do you explain that the books of the company do not show any receipts from the proceeds of these lands? Do you know whether they were embraced in the contract for construction?—A. I should say that they did show. Those books, however, were never under my observation, for they were kept in the land office at Atchison.

Q. The accountant informs me that I am in error; that they do show some proceeds; but that the accounts are not so kept that any accurate conclusion can be reached. Have you no personal knowledge of your own of how much of these lands there were?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or of what they were sold for, or what became of the proceeds?—A. No, sir. I will add this. That at the time——

Q. Do you know whether or not the Congressional lands were included in the contract for construction? We find the following entry in relation to the matter—it is at page 147, under date of November 15, 1870:

The secretary reported that no deed has, as yet, been executed by the company conveying to the parties in interest the Congressional lands included in their contract.

Resolved, That the president be instructed to execute a deed of said lands to the contractor or his assigns.

But on a subsequent date, the 22d of April, 1873, there is a rescinding of that resolution.—A. Yes, sir; we gradually went out of that whole thing appertaining to the construction company. That thing was wiped out, so that the result was as though no such contract had ever been made.

AS TO THE TRANSFER OF THE LANDS TO THE UNION PACIFIC.

I want to say that at the time we transferred everything to our successors there were some lands held in trust by Mr. Pomeroy, and the question came up as to how they should be transferred. I remember distinctly we had a meeting at Mr. Gould's office. I had prepared myself to give an opinion as to how they should be transferred. Mr. Day also had a way of doing it. I was called upon to state to Mr. Gould how it should be done. I stated it. Mr. Day was called upon. The result was that the transfer was made in accordance with my plan, namely, to transfer them direct to Sidney Dillon; and he holds them to-day in trust, for all I know.

Q. Do you know how extensive the contract was that was transferred?—A. No, sir.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Mink, do those lands appear in your returns, or have you knowledge of them?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I will say that my recollection is that when we came into possession of the Central Branch it appeared that Mr. Pomeroy held the title to a portion or to all of the residue of the land grant to which we would succeed. I mean to which the Central Branch Company would succeed, and the Union Pacific, as its owner, the owner of its stock, in interest. We had considerable discussion with Mr. Pomeroy in regard to the manner of transferring those lands. I think some discussion was also had with him in regard to certain amounts of moneys which he claimed should be paid as a condition precedent to our getting the title out of him, the details of which I have forgotten. Finally, however, Mr. Pomeroy transferred the lands which stood in his name as trustee, and Mr. Sidney Dillon was made a trustee in his stead as the president of the Union Pacific Company. My further recollection is (although I have no professional relation to these matters, except as I was called upon to prepare some legal instrument), that the Central Branch Company sold the residue of those lands in bulk some six or seven years ago to some outside parties for $2 or $3 an acre—the most they could get for them—and that Mr. Sidney Dillon transferred them, having the title. I think you will find that is the case.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Who has Mr. Dillon's account relating to these lands?

MR. SIDNEY DILLON ACTED AS TRUSTEE.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. They would appear on the company's books. Mr. Sidney Dillon acted simply as trustee.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Mr. Mink, you say they appear on your books?

Mr. MINK. Yes, sir; they appear on the company's books.

Commissioner ANDERSON. So that your books will show the disposition of these lands that came from the Central Branch, the amount realized, and the disposition of the proceeds?

Mr. MINK. I think they do. The sales were made in Atchison, and all the details are there. Since 1884, when the accounts were sent to Boston, we had regular monthly returns from the commissioner. Everything is on file there for the last two or three years.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Have you any knowledge of the amount of the tract that Mr. Sidney Dillon held?

Mr. MINK. No, sir.

Commissioner ANDERSON. To whom do you refer us for that information?

Mr. MINK. I think I might be able to find something about it on the files of the company at Boston. I have never looked for it.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I have no doubt you will find the contract, because I recollect writing that contract, or supervising it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Our object is to verify the asset and see that the proper party has got such benefit as may come from it.

Mr. MINK. I will try and find it. The only thing I have ever looked for is the report of Mr. Pomeroy that you asked for some weeks ago. I was not able to find that.

A STRUGGLE TO GET THE TITLE FROM POMEROY.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. We had quite a struggle to get the title out of Pomeroy; not because he did not recognize the trust, but as to certain claims he had which he thought ought to be satisfied before he parted with the title.

Commissioner ANDERSON. He claimed, did he not, that there were certain indebtednesses of the company that were entitled to be paid before he parted with the title to the land?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Yes, sir; and if he parted with it he might be incurring some liability.

Mr. NORRIS. It appears from the minutes of September 16, 1880, that Mr. Pomeroy resigned as trustee, and at the time of his resignation presented a complete statement of his trust. Have you that statement?

Mr. MINK. Did he present that, or did he agree to present it?

Mr. NORRIS. The extract that I made from the minute books was, "R. M. Pomeroy resigns as trustee of the land and premises, and presents a statement of what has been done under his trust."

Mr. MINK. My recollection of the proceeding is that Mr. Pomeroy agreed to present a paper, but I never could find it on the files of the company.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. He did not say he did it in writing.

Q. We find the following entry in the minute book, at page 200, under date of March 9, 1875: "Examination made of every voucher for stock issued, bonds sold or allotted, &c., by Henry Belden and Secretary Thomas M. Sother." Do you remember that examination?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know Henry Belden?—A. No, sir; I do not recollect any such man. That was twelve years ago. I think there was a very rigid examination at the time that Mr. Greenleaf came into the concern.

Q. By whom?—A. Belden might have been a clerk of Greenleaf & Norris.

A REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION AS TO EXPENDITURES.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I will ask you a general question. We find on the books of this company a number of vouchers for payments made to you, which are entitled "for services," "for traveling expenses," and "for moneys expended at Washington." They commence in 1866 and, exclusive of the $25,000 which appears to have been paid after the sale to Mr. Gould, coming down to 1878, they exceed $200,000.

The WITNESS. Charged to me?

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes. There are different amounts charged by you to the company and credited to you in their accounts with you, as representing moneys expended by you. Have you any definite explanation to give as to these large expenditures?

The WITNESS. In the first place, I must object to that statement of $200,000.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We will modify the question, then; I put it in that form for the purpose of saving time, but I know you are entitled to have each item called over.

The WITNESS. There is no charge for anything but what was expended by me, excepting with this qualification: that the "boss," so to speak, of the Central Branch Company was Mr. R. M. Pomeroy, who was the business man; and when money was wanted he sometimes asked me to sign a check, which would be prepared; that is, when I was treasurer, and at other times when Mr. Sother was treasurer. I presume that things were entered as being charged by me—that is, they went in under my name—of many of which I knew nothing about the details. Many of these amounts were made up probably by Mr. Pomeroy, and, by direction of Mr. Sother or Mr. Pomeroy, were charged by Mr. Sother to me.

Commissioner ANDERSON. These are all payments made to you, as far as the books show. They indicate that over $200,000 of money was paid by this company to you, or credited to you in their account.

The WITNESS. I can not understand how any such amount can be charged to me.

Commissioner ANDERSON. They are credited to you. It would appear that you rendered accounts for services rendered, traveling expenses, moneys expended at Washington and elsewhere, and that the amount of those accounts so rendered footed up this large sum.

The WITNESS. I will make this general answer, that so far as the books are concerned I believe the books are perfectly correct, with this exception, that in charging some things to me, there were expenditures, or might have been expenditures, which I knew nothing about, where I gave the money to Mr. Pomeroy.

Q. And they would use your name?—A. They would use my name.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The amount as verified is $131,773.

The WITNESS. That is a different thing. I was rather astonished at the figure $200,000, for I did not understand it. I do not know how in the world we ever got along with paying the counsel we did and doing what we did with the small amount we paid out. The counsel I dealt with were leading counsel. Many of the others were employed by Mr. Pomeroy.

HOW THE MONEY WAS EXPENDED.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Please state in general terms to what purposes this $131,000 (as far as you can trace it in your recollection) was applied.

The WITNESS. As I have already stated, and I have made a memorandum, it was expended, so far as I know and can recall, for counsel fees and for printing, for parlors, for services, for traveling expenses, for stenographers, and dinners, &c. Put dinners in, though I never was present at any of the dinners.

NOTHING GIVEN TO CONGRESSMEN.

Q. In the whole course of your dealings, has any portion of the company's money or stock or anything of value belonging to it been given to any member of Congress or promised to any member of Congress?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you say no such use of its property was made, to your knowledge, for the purpose of influencing legislation in any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who had charge of the vouchers while you were treasurer?—A. Mr. Sother.

Q. Was he not under you?—A. Yes, sir; he was acting treasurer. I was the counsel of the company, and of course was away a great deal. I suppose the reason of my being elected treasurer was that I might, while in Washington, obtain and receipt for the bonds that were issued by the Government.

AS TO VOUCHERS.

Q. How can you explain the fact that no vouchers were to be found covering that period of time?—A. I am confident that so far as vouchers are concerned, whatever they were, they were in the charge and custody of Mr. Sother.

Q. Did you not from time to time see them as he filed them away?—A. I am a great hand for generalities. I look at things in a general sort of way and I make up my mind that such and such a thing is correct. But Mr. Pomeroy was very severe in his examination of the books.

Q. Are you positive that none of those vouchers are in your possession now?—A. There are several boxes of papers, which I presume are my own papers, gathered up promiscuously in the hurry of moving. We were obliged to leave this building on a certain day at 12 o'clock, and in the course of an hour or two. Those boxes are piled up in my room. I have wanted somebody to overhaul them and put them in order for myself. I have never had an opportunity yet.

Q. Will you either allow an examination to be made or make it yourself, to see whether the vouchers belonging to the Central Branch are to be found among the papers?

The WITNESS. How much time will you give me?

Commissioner ANDERSON. We will provide a clerk to do it under your directions, if you prefer.

The WITNESS. I am going to be very busy for the remainder of this week; I could not give any attention to it.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Then we will take next week.

The WITNESS. Very well.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Where is your office now?

The WITNESS. At No. 20 Nassau street.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, the Union Pacific Company would like to have a man there, and if there are any documents or papers that ought to be among its archives, we would like to take them and put them in its possession.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Of course you can have some one there. Those papers ought to be preserved.

PRICE OF FIRST-MORTGAGE BONDS.

Q. When was it that those bonds sold as low as 20 cents on the dollar?—A. I cannot tell you, but I understand that Mr. Day bought a number at 20 cents on the dollar.

Q. Do you mean first-mortgage bonds?—A. First-mortgage bonds; I never bought any at that figure.

Q. What was the lowest figure at which you purchased them?—A. I do not remember purchasing any. I was counsel for the company and attended to my business.

AS TO FAILURE OF COMPANY TO GET FULL LAND-GRANT.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Do you desire to say anything further in relation to the failure of these companies to get the full amount of their land grant?—A. As far as the 100 miles went, we got all that were left. They had been taken up for school purposes and were embraced in the Indian reserves. The result was, according to my general recollection, that we got about one-twelfth of what we would have had if it was not for these reservations.

Q. How many acres were you entitled to per mile under the land grant?—A. This was so long ago that I have forgotten.

Commissioner ANDERSON. They got 222,000 acres.

The WITNESS. I think we were entitled to about 12,500 acres every mile, and if that is all we got it is a great deal less.

Q. Did you claim a land grant on all your extension?—A. We claimed a land grant on the extension of our road to a connection with the Union Pacific at the 100th meridian.

Q. How far was that?—A. That was about 190 miles.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Beyond the western terminus of your road?—A. Yes, sir. And those lands we are entitled to to-day. The law had been executed; the President had signed the map; he was functus officio.

CLAIM THAT THE COMPANY WAS ENTITLED TO THE LANDS, EVEN THOUGH ROAD NOT BUILT.

Commissioner ANDERSON. But the road is not built.

The WITNESS. But it is like the man in prison. "You can't put him in prison, but still he is there."

Commissioner ANDERSON. Your road is not built.

The WITNESS. We filed a map as we were entitled to by law, a finished map, and asked to have the lands withdrawn.

Commissioner ANDERSON. You would only be entitled to have patents issued as 20 or 40 miles were completed.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. But we were entitled to have the lands withdrawn.

Commissioner ANDERSON. But you were only entitled to have the patents issue as the road was built.

The WITNESS. We were entitled to the lands.

Commissioner LITTLER. You claim that under the act of Congress you were entitled to have the President of the United States set apart all the public lands within a certain distance on either side of the road until you made your selection.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; but since that they have taken them and set them apart for another company, the St. Joseph and Western, I think.

Q. You do not mean to say, do you, that you got a valid title to the land by filing a map?—A. I mean to say the law says that "there shall be, and are hereby granted," and that would seem to vest the title.

Q. As soon as you filed a map?—A. Yes, sir; that is my recollection of the law.

Q. Even though you never built the road?—A. No.

THE LAW SAYS LANDS "ARE HEREBY GRANTED."

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Do you mean to say that you were entitled to have those lands withdrawn from entry for the time being, and until the road was constructed, or until such lapse of time as should operate to revert the lands to the Government again?—A. I mean to say that the law says that they shall be and they are hereby granted. Then it goes on say, afterwards, in some part of the law, I think, that these patents shall issue as the road is built.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I would like to get that matter out. I see there is a little obscurity.

Commissioner ANDERSON. You may get it out.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I have always been of the opinion that there was a great wrong to the Central Branch in this business. It is perfectly clear in my mind.

Commissioner LITTLER. Proceed and get it out.

WRONG DONE TO CENTRAL BRANCH.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The scheme of this Pacific system was, that the main line and all the branches were to be connected. The words "unite and connect" are used in connection with each branch, and, in connection with those branches, was what was then termed the Atchison Branch, which became the Central Branch. The Leavenworth, Lawrence, Pawnee and Western was authorized to connect—that became the Kansas Pacific—and to build the said railroad through Kansas, between the mouth of the Kansas River and the aforesaid point, on the one hundredth meridian. "That the several roads from Missouri and Iowa, herein authorized to connect with the same, can make connection within the limits prescribed in this act." Now, the limits prescribed within this act for the connection of the Central Branch Union Pacific were 100 miles. I find, Mr. Nichols, in the argument which you made before the Secretary of the Interior, this statement: "In calculating distance at that time it was found that the meridian of Fort Riley was 87½ miles west of Atchison in a direct line; but you generally lose from 12 to 15 per cent. in the actual progress, in a given direction, in the construction of a road, and it was therefore supposed that these 100 miles would bring the Central Branch to the meridian of Fort Riley." That was, as you understood it, the distance in a straight line?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JOHN F. DILLON:

Q. So that if the Kansas Pacific had been built according to the original scheme of running to Fort Riley, and then up the Republican Valley to the one hundredth meridian, these 100 miles subsidized would have connected you with the Kansas Pacific. Is that your understanding?—A. That is so. As to the location, however, of that Kansas road, it was provided that the locating of it should be determined by the President. That was filed and approved.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The Commission will find, on reference to this act, that the company had the right to make the location as far west as Fort Riley, but that the location from Fort Riley to the point on the one hundredth meridian was to be under the control of the President of the United States.

The WITNESS. The map was to be approved.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The location of the road and the map?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about the filing of the map of location of its route by the Kansas Pacific road up the Republican Valley to the one hundredth meridian?—A. It was filed, and it was determined before we entered into these things, and before the Smoky Hill road was built.

Q. Then, after the Kansas Pacific road had elected, as you claim, to go up the Republican Valley to the one hundredth meridian, and filed a map for that purpose, you of the Central Branch went on and made your contracts with reference to that fact. You adopted a line accordingly, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

EFFECT OF THE ACT OF 1866.

Q. What was the effect, when the act of 1866 was passed, on the route of the Kansas Pacific and on your company?—A. The effect upon our company was none whatever. In the first place, our company was not named, and, so far as any counsel that we have ever consulted has ever contended, there was nothing in the act whatever, even by implication, depriving the Central Branch of any of its rights. That could only be done either by a direct reference in that law to us or by an implication.

Q. As I understand you, the Central Branch located its line all the way from Atchison to a connection with the Union Pacific at the one hundredth meridian?—A. We did.

Q. And the President of the United States approved the map?—A. Approved the map.

Q. He approved the map of location?—A. We had filed our first map of 100 miles, supposing that made the plan of the Pacific Railroad all complete. It is spoken of as "the plan and the route." They are all referred to in the law that the tracks should be uniform, and various other things, all applying to one continuous road from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean. After our 100 miles were completed we filed our map——

MAP OF EXTENDED LINE FILED.

Q. You filed your map of extended line from the 100 miles to the one hundredth meridian?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To connect with the Union Pacific road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that map was approved?—A. That map was approved by the President.

Q. Was not the result of the Kansas Pacific change of location that it went out West, and went nowhere near your road?—A. It went upon an independent line.

Q. That left your 100 miles running out as a "plug" into the country?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it not go into an unsettled region at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

CLAIM OF RIGHT TO EXTEND ROAD UNDER ACT OF 1886.

Q. The claim you make is, as I understand it, that under the sixteenth section of the act of 1864, the provision was that if any road which was a part of the system should, when it got to the end of its line, find that another road was not building to complete the system, it might go on with the work and be entitled to the bonds and the lands which would have come to the road which it was originally contemplated should build the road?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is not the grant a grant in presenti of so many sections of land on each side of the road when it is definitely located?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make a definite location to the one hundredth meridian?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that map was approved, and, therefore, under the language of the act, as you construe it, you became entitled, in advance of building, to the legal title to the lands on the whole route, subject to being defeated if you did not build the road?—A. Yes, sir.

Commissioner ANDERSON. We understand all that, only I do not concur in the view expressed as to the application of the sixteenth section.

MR. DILLON'S VIEWS.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The claim, as I understand it, and as the counsel for the Union Pacific, the equity I wish to press on this Commission is that, according to Mr. Nichols's view, and according to the opinions of Judge Hoar and Judge Curtis, it stands on a legal basis, that, irrespective of any legislation, they were entitled to extend this road to a connection with the Union Pacific at the one hundredth meridian, and to draw their lands and their bonds. If it is not a legal claim, as he puts it, then the company has this strong equity, that they were induced to commence the construction of this road on a scheme that the 100 miles would connect them with the rest of the system, and after they had entered upon it Congress changed the route of the Kansas Pacific and left their road a "plug."

Commissioner ANDERSON. I concede the force of the last proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Union Pacific declined to extend the relations of a connecting road with the Kansas Pacific when they wanted to go up there. That is the same system, and the same principle is applicable.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. I do not think so at all, for this reason: that although the Union Pacific might not prorate with the Central Branch, if they had made connection, it is obvious to anybody that that railroad, connected with the Union Pacific system, would be worth vastly more than it would as a road running out into an unbroken prairie, as it did for fifteen years.

Commissioner LITTLER. Do you claim that this road was extended on the strength of the opinion of counsel such as Mr. Nichols has mentioned, that the promoters of the extension would receive the land grant and also the Government bond grant?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. No, I do not suppose that any such claim can be maintained. This claim that was made before the Department was made away back in 1872 and 1873. When they failed to get recognition they had to remain in abeyance until 1877 or 1878, when they commenced the extension; and I do not suppose that extension, under a different corporate organization, has any claim whatever to any of these lands.

EFFECT ON CENTRAL BRANCH OF CHANGE OF LOCATION OF KANSAS CENTRAL.

Commissioner ANDERSON. The only question is, whether the change of the location of the Kansas Pacific inflicted an unexpected injury on the value of the Central Branch, and whether that raises an equity which ought to be reported.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. That is the view in which I press it on the Commission.

WAS STOCK PAID FOR IN FULL, IN CASH?

Q. I want to understand whether you wish to go on the record clearly and positively as making the statement that so far as your own stock is concerned, and so far as your personal knowledge extends as to the stock of any other persons, it was paid for in full to the company, in cash, at par?—A. Yes, sir; in full at par.

DID PROCEEDS OF FIRST-MORTGAGE BONDS AND GOVERNMENT SUBSIDY PAY FOR CONSTRUCTION?

Q. What recollection have you as to whether the proceeds of the first-mortgage bonds, and the proceeds of the Government subsidy, yielded enough in money to pay for the actual construction of the road?—A. My recollection is that it fell far short.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. But have you not told us that you do not know what the road did cost to construct?—A. I say my judgment is that it must have fallen far short, from the nature of the case.

Q. How can you have any judgment if you do not know what the cost of the road was to construct?—A. I have this judgment from what I know of railroad building now, that it must have cost, I should say, three times as much to build as it would now.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That is a mere guess or estimate. It is not based on any knowledge derived from the books.

The WITNESS. It is based upon what knowledge I have of railroad building, so far as the books are concerned, and from this knowledge, also, that more money was borrowed and more money used.

WITNESS SAYS NO BONDS WERE MISAPPLIED BY DIRECTORS.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That proposition, that more money was used (without intending it offensively), would still be consistent with the theory that the proceeds of the bonds and stock had been misapplied by the directors, and were not put into the construction of the road.

The WITNESS. There were no bonds ever misapplied by the board of directors, that is, by us.

Commissioner ANDERSON. That is, to your knowledge.

The WITNESS. Well, it could not have been done without my knowledge.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I can only repeat that the books show that the proceeds of the stock and bonds were about $2,500,000.

The WITNESS. To which I reply that there must be other books which ought to be in the possession of our successors, if they were delivered to them. I think I can produce a receipt given to Mr. Sothers.

WHAT WAS RECEIVED BY CENTRAL BRANCH COMPANY ON SALES OF STOCK.

By Mr. JOHN F. DILLON:

Q. It was stated, in the course of your examination this afternoon, that the books, so far as they had come into the possession of this Commission or had been examined by them, showed that the company had only received of the proceeds of the 10,000 shares of stock the sum of between $300,000 and $400,000. If the books do so show, or the portion of them that the Commission has examined, what have you to say, based on your own knowledge, as to the accuracy or the correctness of that statement?—A. I mean to say, from what I can gather, that the present officers seem to have control of only those books which came into existence under our administration. There was an administration before that of Mr. Gaylord, and it appears, from what I can gather, that they are not in possession of Mr. Gaylord's books.

Q. The point of my inquiry is, not what the brush-heap of a lot of books or book accounts could show, but from your personal knowledge, whether more than three or four hundred thousand dollars were actually received by the company on account of the sales or dispositions of its capital stock?—A. I cannot state what moneys were paid into Willis Gaylord's hands, but I have not a shadow of a doubt in my mind but what every share of stock was paid for in cash.

Q. The whole amount?—A. The whole amount, $1,000,000, except a balance which I have mentioned.

Q. Do you know of anybody getting a share of stock without full payment at par?—A. No, sir; never.

NO STOCK SOLD FOR LESS THAN PAR.

Q. Did you ever understand, in your connection with the company, at any time or from any source, that any of its stock was disposed of at less than par?—A. Never.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. You made some statement here this morning in respect to what, in your judgment, would be the proper adjustment of the debtor and creditor relations of this company and the Government in regard to the subsidy advanced to the company, and I would like to have you state your views on that subject briefly.

The WITNESS. Do you mean as to the roads generally?

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. No; as to the Central Branch. How should the Government, in your judgment, treat this matter of the indebtedness?

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Before stating that, have you any interest in this property now, directly or indirectly?—A. I have one share of stock, I think.

Commissioner LITTLER. Now you may proceed.

SUGGESTION AS TO PLAN OF SETTLEMENT.

The WITNESS. I will express my views, which will embrace this company especially and also the other companies. In regard to this company, in view of the position in which we were left by the Government, after everything was approved, I think a settlement, and a very generous settlement, should be made. As I have stated, I have no interest in it, and it does not make any difference whatever to me. I think that the claim of the Government against this company ought to be wiped out on condition that for a certain number of years the carrying of the mails and all service rendered to the Government should be made at cost of, say, 50 per cent. of the ordinary charges. In regard to the companies in general——

Q. Before passing that, if they have such equities as you describe, why do you insist on their carrying the mails for fifty years at half cost?—A. As a compensation for wiping out the present indebtedness.

Q. If they have equities which entitle them to wipe out the present indebtedness why entail that burden on them?—A. It is a fact that they did receive $1,600,000, and while they claim that we justly owe that to them, we say to them in reply, "Here, when we entered into this bargain," because Howard, of the Senate, always spoke of this as a bargain, and you will find, if you go back to 1860, that both the political parties of this country, in their platforms and at their conventions, declared the construction of the Pacific railroads to be an absolute necessity. And there is also evidence to show that there is much probability that we would have a western republic, as well as the one we have, if it had not been for the Pacific railroads. The condition of things that existed at the time these Pacific railroad acts were passed it is very difficult for us to recall at the present time. We were in a plight, and in a condition where it was absolutely necessary that these laws should be passed. These laws were passed in the nature of a proposition to the capitalists of the country. They accepted that proposition and that contract upon the faith that Congress would carry out these laws. Now, it is obvious to any man, and it is declared by writers, that the Government is in the same position in respect to its contract as would be the case of a contract between two individuals.

THE EQUITIES THAT EXIST.

And what are the equities that exist in the settlement of this matter, so far as the companies generally are concerned? In the first place, what is the object of this law? It was, among other things, to furnish facilities, and that the Government might have the use of the same, for carrying mails and for other purposes. What are the facts? I will give you one statistic which may be of some interest. It occurred in the argument which I made before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of the United States. At the date of January 1, 1871, the interest which had then been paid upon the bonds issued to all the companies amounted to $8,815,345.49. The interest that was repaid by transportation, etc., was $2,460,818.94, one-fourth of it. Now, when this act was passed, it was expected and it was intended, and it was a part of the basis upon which these capitalists agreed to enter into this contract, that all the Government transportation should be done by these roads.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. Why did they not say so in the law? We can only go by the law.—A. It is implied in the law.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I beg pardon. The law only says that the transportation should be made at usual rates.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. He is right about it, because no living man was sanguine enough to suppose that in the life-time of this debt this country would be penetrated with roads, and that there would be rival roads.

THIS COMMISSION BOUND BY THE LAW.

Commissioner ANDERSON. What I am saying is that there seems to be very little use to present statements to this Commission and ask us to construe debates in Congress, or to construe what the newspapers said at the time, when we are bound by the laws.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. The Commission law says that you shall consider the cost of transportation before and after these roads were constructed.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Yes; but that does not bear on the proposition that the Government was bound to give enough transportation to pay its cost.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. No, not a legal obligation. No one, as I said, was sanguine enough to believe that there would be five roads to the Pacific Ocean.

Commissioner ANDERSON. Right on that point, to show how utterly it fails to be supported by the facts, I wish to say that on the same day that the act was passed under which the Central and Union Pacific roads were really constructed, in July, 1864, the whole land grant given to the Northern Pacific was also passed. So that the construction of that road was certainly expected.

Mr. JOHN F. DILLON. But what was the distance? It was 200 miles away.

Commissioner ANDERSON. I am only meeting your position that there was no transcontinental road anticipated.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Central turned around and built the Southern Pacific, another through road.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS SENT BY WAY OF THE ISTHMUS.

The WITNESS. If they had given them the through business, instead of sending it around by the way of the Isthmus, which they did for the purpose of showing a small expenditure in the Departments, the result would have been not only that the interest, but a large amount of the principal, would have been paid. The Government has saved immense amounts of money, and I say that that fair dealing which ought to exist between two honest men who want to deal fairly with each other should be extended to this company. The Government can well afford to wipe out all the interest for the benefit acquired, and inasmuch as the companies are helpless, and I do not see, for myself, how they are going to pay this debt, my idea would be that they should pay the principal, which should be secured by payments from year to year until it was wiped out. The country never has had a better friend than this Pacific Railroad. Nothing has ever been done in this country in the way of constructing roads that has resulted in so much benefit as the construction of these roads.

TO WHOM BENEFIT OF CANCELLATION WOULD INURE.

By Commissioner ANDERSON:

Q. To whom do you consider the benefits would inure if the Government should cancel the whole or any part of these obligations? Would they not inure simply to the present stockholders of these companies? Are not those the only persons who would get any benefit?—A. No, sir. So far as stockholders are concerned, to be sure they would derive a benefit from it.

Q. What did the present stockholders of these roads, except in the case of the Central Pacific, have to do with the construction of these roads?—A. They are their successors—that is all—in interest.

Commissioner ANDERSON. They bought their stock in the market?

EFFECT OF THE CANADIAN PACIFIC AND THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

The WITNESS. They are their successors in interest, so far as that goes. The Government ought to be a great exemplar of justice, and these companies ought to be dealt with lightly and generously. Take the Canada road. There it stands, with no interstate commerce bill to bother it, and it goes on and gets this business. It is going to rob these roads of their business by the oppressive action of the Government. Shylock, when he demanded his pound of flesh, complied with the contract. The Government, I think, ought to look upon this as a business transaction, and try to make it so that they can effect a settlement. It is desirable to make a settlement, and I think it ought to be made; but the Government should consider also the benefits that have been derived.

By Commissioner LITTLER:

Q. Can you suggest any legislation on the part of Congress which would prevent the Canadian Pacific from taking from the American roads the commerce which it now takes?—A. That is entirely a new subject, and I could not now make any suggestion.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you anything further to say?—A. I do not know of anything at present. I will say that I do not know what the province of the resolution is that you are acting under.

Commissioner LITTLER. It is an act of Congress.

The WITNESS. I know it is an act of Congress. You ought to recommend something that would be generous and proper so far as these roads are concerned, for they all had a hard time of it. Poor Oakes Ames, who was slaughtered in this thing, lost every dollar; and so far as any charge of improper action against him was concerned, there never was an act of Congress, from the time he became interested in this road until his death, or as long as he had any connection with it, that was attempted to be passed, excepting one to get the office of the Union Pacific Railroad Company out of this city and away from disreputable judges, and to put it in Boston. And every man who ever took part in any action adverse to Mr. Oakes Ames, I believe, has recalled and regretted his action.

The following statement was subsequently received from Mr. Effingham H. Nichols:

AS TO REVERDY JOHNSON.

Since my examination of the 25th instant I have become satisfied that while the Hon. Reverdy Johnson, after leaving the U. S. Senate, rendered us what aid he could, yet it must have been done through kindness and his conviction that we were entitled to relief, and not strictly as our counsel, as I cannot remember of any retainer having been paid him.

(2) I also recall the fact that other persons than counsel were employed either by, or at the instance of, Mr. R. M. Pomeroy, for the purpose of explaining to members of Congress, or of committees, the nature of our claims for relief and for calling attention to the various printed circulars which counsel had prepared.

THE TREASURER'S BOOK FOUND.

(3) The "treasurer's book kept by Mr. Willis Gaylord" has been found and delivered to Mr. Perrenoud on promise that he would deliver it to the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

MEMORANDA SHOWING CASH PAID FOR STOCK AND SHOWING DISPOSITION OF BONDS.

(4) I have also found a private memorandum book prepared by Mr. Bather (for my protection) which I have shown to Mr. Perrenoud (one of the accountants of the Commission), which shows that every share of the capital stock of the Central Branch Company issued was paid for in cash at par, and also shows what disposition was made of every one of the first-mortgage bonds of said company, numbered from 1 to 1,600, showing that the said first-mortgage bonds were disposed of as follows, viz:

	Bonds.
In settlement with Mr. Wheeler	50
To parties prior to us for what they called "existing obligations"	290
Settlement of Chalice suit	10
To trustees of mortgage	10
In payment of freights	56
In compensation for loans	95
Allotted with stock, including twenty-one belonging to the company	407
Sold for cash	682
Making the total number	1,600

These memoranda go to confirm my general recollection as given my testimony.

Of course, as to minute details and figures, numbers, &c., relating matters that occurred many years since, memory can not always relied upon. The memorandum book to which I have referred nothing but what is shown by the books of the company—only the fa are collated which show results. I also find in my office several bu dles of papers which appear for the most part to relate to the Cent Branch Railroad Company, all which, of course, ought to be in possess of our successors.

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD—SUGGESTIONS OF SETTLEMENT.

A COMMUNICATION FROM MR. C. P. HUNTINGTON.

The following communication was received from Mr. C. P. Huntington:

[Office Central Pacific Railroad Co., No. 23 Broad Street. C. P. Huntington, Vice-President.]

NEW YORK, October 11, 1887.

To the PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION:

GENTLEMEN: I submit for your consideration the following suggestions concerning the principles of an adjustment between the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the United States:

I propose that there be an understanding between the company and the Government as to the amount which the company will be indebted at the maturity of the bonds.

The act of March 3, 1887, creating this Commission, requires a report on the following facts:

(1) The average cost per annum of Government transportation in the region now traversed by the Pacific railroads between the year 1860 and the completion of said roads.

(2) The average cost per annum since such completion.

(3) What additional facilities have been furnished to the Government and the people by said roads.

(4) What discount the Pacific railroad and its several branches were forced to make in disposing of the bonds granted by the Government to obtain gold coin, which was the currency of the country through which the greater part of said roads passed.

(5) The comparative cost of construction of said roads as compared with what they would have cost with the prices of labor and commodities prevailing five years preceding or five years subsequent to the completion of said roads.

(6) Whether or not the Pacific railroad was completed in less time than was allowed by law, and if so, how much less time, and if the United States was benefited thereby.

(7) If the United States, since the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies accepted the terms proposed by Congress for the construction of the Pacific railroads, has granted aid in land for building competing and parallel roads to said Pacific railroads, and if so, how many such roads, and to what extent such competing lines have impaired the earning capacity of the Pacific railroads.

(8) What sums the Pacific railroads and their branches can severally pay annually on account of their indebtedness to the United States without imposing such burdens upon the people, and particularly upon the localities through which the roads pass, as to retard the development of the country.

The information which the Commissioners may furnish to the Government on these points committed to their inquiry and the Government's action thereon will have a controlling influence on the amount of such indebtedness and the proposition for its settlement; for it is not to be supposed that Congress required to be informed on these various subjects unless it intended to use the knowledge required in determining the nature of the settlement between the United States and the companies.

As at present advised, and hoping that the Government will deal equitably with the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and having regard to the present and supposed future earnings of the company, and recognizing at this time that the through business does not leave any, or very little, net earnings, and that the amount to be paid must come from the local traffic; that such business is light, the country traversed by the road is poor, and no very large amount can be drawn from that source, I think the best proposition I can suggest in the interest of the Government is that the amount, when ascertained, be capitalized by equating the interest so as to get it all into one fixed sum, then dividing it into two hundred equal payments, one part to be paid each six months; the interest on the principal sum being reckoned at the same rate at which Government bonds could be placed in settlement of its indebtedness. But, as I have said before, any proposition made at this time, or until the amount of indebtedness is ascertained, must be purely speculative.

I cannot forbear calling attention to the difference in position, both of the United States and the company, with respect to this indebtedness in view of the unsatisfactory operation of the Thurman bill, and what the position would have been if the company had been permitted to carry out its own purposes of creating a sinking fund for its protection.

As far back as 1876, in conjunction with the president of the Union Pacific Railway, I called the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury to the fact that the company would not be able to respond to the Government's claim at the time of its maturity, and I proposed on behalf of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to establish and maintain a sinking fund, which, if it had been permitted, would have left both debtor and creditor in a much more favorable position than either of them are to-day.

If a contract of settlement on the basis above referred to could be made between the company and the Government, and we could have any reasonable assurance that the Government would adhere to the contract on its part, I would recommend its acceptance by the company.

Yours, respectfully,

C. P. HUNTINGTON,
Vice-President.

UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY—POINTS FOR CONSIDERATION.

A COMMUNICATION FROM MR. CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

The following communication was received from Mr. Charles Francis Adams:

UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
Boston, October 15, 1887.

Messrs. ROBERT E. PATTISON, E. ELLERY ANDERSON, and DAVID T. LITTLER, United States Pacific Railroad Investigating Commission, New York City:

GENTLEMEN: While on the part of this company I do not propose to burden you with any formal closing argument or summary of facts bearing upon the voluminous record which has resulted from your investigation, I yet desire to submit in writing a few brief points for your consideration.

Having carefully watched the evidence presented to your board, it seems to me that certain points stand prominently out as the only points which really call for explanation, or upon which it might be desirable for the company to present argument. All of these were particularized in the law creating the Commission. They are, briefly, the following:

(1) The matter of the consolidation in 1880 of the Union Pacific and the Kansas Pacific.

(2) The purchase of certain branch or auxiliary lines by the Union Pacific.

(3) The construction of branch lines.

(4) The arbitrary traffic allowances, or "constructive mileage," made by the Union Pacific to those branch lines.

(5) The Pacific mail "subsidy," so called.

(6) Rebates paid to individuals or private companies doing business with the Union Pacific.

(7) The use of the company's funds for the purpose of influencing legislation.

(8) The individual interest of directors or officials of the company in corporations or firms doing business with the Union Pacific.

(9) The interest of the company in outside business enterprises, such as coal mines, stock-yards, &c.

(10) The payment of a large sum in dividends between the years 1873 and 1884.

Upon points other than the above I am not aware that anything which would call for particular notice has been elicited by your investigation. I will therefore take up these several points seriatim, presenting, as briefly as I can, the argument of the company in its behalf as respects each.

(1) The consolidation of the Kansas Pacific with the Union Pacific took place at a time (1880) when I personally had no connection whatever with either company, whether as a director, as an official, or as a stockholder. I had been a Government director during one year before this consolidation was under discussion, to wit, during the year 1878. I became a member of the company's board of direction in the year 1883, after the consolidation was a consummated fact. Personally, therefore, I had no connection with it, and was in no way responsible for it. As respects the action in that matter of any individual directors interested in the securities of the one company or of the other, I do not find it necessary to say anything. Such action was their private affair, subject to well-established principles of law, and calls for no defense or explanation from me.

One point only I have to make: No unprejudiced person at all acquainted with the railroad situation in that region will deny that the consolidation of the Kansas Pacific with the Union Pacific has actually resulted not only to the benefit of both companies, but even more to the benefit of the country through which the two roads run. The consolidation, therefore, justified itself in the result. Meanwhile, I have further to point out that the Union Pacific made no greater sacrifice, gave no larger consideration for the Kansas Pacific as a part of the new consolidated company, than a responsible outside and competing corporation, to wit, the Missouri Pacific, then stood willing and was anxious to give.

It cannot be fairly argued that the director of one railroad company, who is likewise interested in the stock of another railroad company of which he is also a director, is called upon to sell to the first company his interest in the securities of the second company for a less price than some one else is willing to give. He is merely called upon not to take advantage of his position as a director to get for his property more than it will bring in the outside market.

I submit that it is proved in the evidence contained in your record that, at the time the consolidation of the Kansas Pacific with the Union Pacific was effected, other and equally responsible parties were willing to give for the Kansas Pacific or its securities as much or more than the Union Pacific allowed. The Union Pacific was therefore protected in the transaction, and the results have entirely justified it.

(2) In the matter of the purchase of certain other and auxiliary lines by the Union Pacific, while mistakes of judgment may have been made, there has been no evidence elicited during your examination (which has been of the most thorough character) tending to show that any purchase was ever effected with a view to the individual benefit of persons connected with the Union Pacific, either as officials or as directors. In the case of the Denver, South Park and Pacific, the purchase subsequently proved to be unfortunate. Nevertheless, the evidence is that after the purchase was made another party, to wit, the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company, stood ready to pay the Union Pacific a bonus of $500,000 for its bargain. The Union Pacific management, after careful consideration, declined to accept this bonus and part with its purchase. This, as now appears, was an error of judgment; but the facts as they existed at the time justified the purchase, inasmuch as large dividends were then being earned by the Denver, South Park and Pacific, and paid to its stockholders. It could not be foreseen that the earnings of the company would diminish more than one half within the next two years. Such a result was, indeed, most improbable.

I have made a careful personal inquiry as to the fact whether the offer of $500,000 bonus for the control of the Denver, South Park and Pacific was made to the Union Pacific in good faith and by responsible parties. I am satisfied that it was so made, and that it was a bona fide offer. If further evidence on this point is necessary I stand ready to produce it.

As respects certain other purchased lines, of which the Nevada Central is the most striking instance, the record shows merely that these lines were purchased under circumstances which at the time seemed to justify their purchase, although subsequent events may have failed to justify it. The directors of the Union Pacific are not infallible, must are they prophets. In the course of events they have been compelled to exercise business judgment. In exercising that judgment they necessarily at times fell into error. Meanwhile, I submit with the utmost confidence, the record fails to show any case in which corrupt motives entered into the purchase of any of the lines referred to, or that any official or director of the company was, in a secret way, the recipient of money paid on account of such purchase.

(3) As respects the expediency of constructing branch lines and developing the original Pacific roads into systems, which should at once supply the regions through which those roads were built with needed railroad facilities and bring traffic to the mother lines, as respects the expediency of pursuing this policy, further argument seems unnecessary. No one in the slightest degree acquainted with the economics of railroad management, or with the material or social condition of the Pacific roads and the regions they traverse, has appeared to dispute it. There has been much criticism of the course pursued by the company, and many loose charges have been made by those whose opinions in the practical affairs of life carry weight with no one; but all the evidence entitled to authority is on the other side. In their last annual report, for instance, the Government directors, after careful personal examination, expressed themselves on this point in the following emphatic language:

> Like all other great railroads of the West, the Union Pacific must in future look almost entirely to the development of its local business for its principal revenue It must occupy and develop promptly the territory naturally tributary to its trunk line, or this taken possession of by rival lines, and be left without business enough to support its main stems.

But the proposition would seem to be so plain that it is a waste of time and space to argue it further.

As respects the method pursued in the construction of branch lines composing the so-called Union Pacific system there is no evidence whatever that the directors or officials of the company have in any way profited through such construction to the injury or prejudice of the Union Pacific. On the contrary, I do not believe that an equally clear record in this respect could be shown by a majority of other railroad companies in the country. Certainly no instance of jobbery has been revealed in the course of your investigation. For years, and especially since the consolidation of 1880, it has been the practice to construct these lines in such a way that all the securities representing them would be turned into the treasury of the Union Pacific in payment of the actual cost of such construction. That contractors and others have made a profit through that construction is most probable. It is the business of contractors to make a profit out of their contracts. That they made an illegitimate profit in the case of these branches nowhere appears; much less that any portion of such illegitimate profit, if any was made, found its way into the hands of those responsible for the management of the Union Pacific.

(4) As respects constructive mileage to branch lines, I submit that the course pursued by the Union Pacific has, in the course of this investigation, been shown to be the usual and legitimate course pursued in such cases, and that as such it was in 1882 distinctly approved of record by the representatives of the Government upon the board of direction. (See report of Government Directors for the year 1882, page 193; Executive Document No. 69, first session Forty-ninth Congress.) It has been suggested that, in the case of the Union Pacific, the same persons acted for both parties concerned—for the main line, and for the branch line; that their action consequently was open to suspicion. But it also appears that the action of these persons was reviewed with care by the officers who most properly should review it, to wit, the Government directors. Thus, the Government itself, through its accredited agents, looked into the matter and approved the action taken. What more could be required? If the action of the Government's own representatives will not justify the company's board of direction in a matter of this sort, as against any subsequent claim of the Government, what will justify it? What course is open for the company to pursue? Are we to understand that the formal action of the Government's own agents, within the direct line of their duties, is not binding on the Government?

It does not seem necessary to add anything further on this head. The written communication submitted to you by Vice-President Potter and the evidence of Government Director Alexander seem to be conclusive on the general principle involved.

(5) As respects the Pacific Mail "subsidy," so called, I have to call your attention to page 8 of the annual report of the directors of the company to the stockholders for the year ending December 31, 1885. It is there shown that this so-called subsidy business had been for years discussed, and was inquired into by a committee of the United States Senate, of which Mr. Bayard, the present Secretary of State, Mr. Lamar, the present Secretary of the Interior, and also Mr. Thurman, were members. After careful investigation, this committee reported that the matter called for no action or further consideration, and their report was accepted by the Senate. I submit that the course of this committee justified the action of the company, and the company had a right thereafter to go on in the course theretofore pursued. If this is not so, the question again arises, What possible action on the part of the Government can be considered as indicating its policy and binding upon it?

But this so-called "subsidy" has been grossly misrepresented in the public prints and on the floor of Congress. It was simply one feature in a railroad "pool," at a time when railroad pools were in common use and had not been prohibited by law. By means of it, as has been fully explained in the pages of the report above referred to, about 10 per cent of a common business was allotted to one of the transportation companies interested. This was not a large or unusual proportion of the "pool" traffic to be allotted to one member of a pool, certainly not an unduly large proportion. For obvious reasons, explained in the report referred to, this allotment of traffic was commuted into a cash payment. While the pool, which was rendered possible by this payment, was in operation, the rates on transcontinental business were sustained. Of those rates the Government received its full proportion. The Government, therefore, was one of the largest recipients of the benefits of this pool. The proceeds of it now represent a considerable portion of the sinking fund which has accumulated under the Thurman act. Immediately on the termination of the pool the value of the transcontinental traffic, so far as the Union Pacific was concerned, was greatly reduced. The payments made to the Government were correspondingly reduced. The Government, in other words, was a partner in this pool—a knowing partner, an unobjecting partner, a partner who derived advantage from it; and this, I submit, clearly appears in the columns of the Congressional Record, as above referred to, and in the reports of the Government directors.

(6) As respects rebates paid private companies or individuals doing business with the Union Pacific, I have to say that the company makes no denial of such payments. The payment of rebates was, until the of the interstate commerce act, a regular and recognized part system under which the railroads of the United States were op- The directors of this company—as they conceived it was their to do—operated the road intrusted to them in such a way as to money both for the company and for the Government; and in to do this it was necessary to operate the Union Pacific as roads ing with the Union Pacific were operated. In this respect it no difference whether the directors of the Union Pacific regarded ilroad methods in common use as good or as bad. They did not hold positions as economical theorists or as general railroad reformers. were there as business men in charge of one particular railroad, t in charge to make money out of that road for those they repre- If the Union Pacific has refused to do competitive business way in which other companies did competitive business, the public made by it would have been met by the secret rates of competing and the stockholders of the Union Pacific and the Government have suffered accordingly. is nowhere appears. In the case of the Omaha and Grant Smelt- Company, to which heavy rebates were paid, the record shows that prominent directors of the Union Pacific were stockholders. This dmits of a perfect explanation; and the course of the directors in tion, if examined, will be found to be wholly justifiable. The Omaha Grant Smelter has been for years the largest shipper and the most erative patron of the Union Pacific. In the early days it was a tion where this smelter would be located. It could be located either the line of the Union Pacific or elsewhere. It was located at ha. It began its operations with insufficient capital. More money ecessary to enable it to do business upon a scale which would be table in competition with other smelters. Feeling that the Union fic would be a large beneficiary by this proposed increase of busi- those who had the affairs of the Omaha and Grant Smelter in go came to the East and solicited increased capital from those in- ted in the stock of the Union Pacific. Not without difficulty they ed two of the directors of the company, wholly with the view of rding the interests of the Union Pacific, to advance the capital ed, and those gentlemen accordingly became interested in the stock e Omaha and Grant Smelter. But, while so interesting themselves, took special pains to guard the interests of the company of which were directors, as will be seen from the following extract from a r written by one of them, under date of November 21, 1881, to J. nnett, then auditor of the company at Omaha, the official who with the Omaha and Grant Smelter on behalf the Union Pacific.

was especially understood, at the time of making this arrangement with Mr. and his associates, that the Union Pacific Company should not, on account of ther, make any more favorable terms with the Smelting Company than they heretofore, either in credit on freight bills or rates of freight, and I shall rely on personally to see that they get no increased favors over and above what they heretofore had.

e course pursued by the directors in question in this matter is, fore, fully justified, unless the position is taken that the directors railroad company are in no case to assist any industry upon the line of such railroad which it is claimed will be conducive to its interest. In this respect the directors of the Union Pacific to-day are, as they always have been, between two fires. On the one side, parties interested in local development along all the lines operated by the company are in the habit of coming to the directors with their projects, correctly arguing that, unless those interested in the Union Pacific will evince their confidence in such projects by putting their capital into them, others cannot be expected so to do. In fact, when such parties call upon other capitalists and promoters of enterprises in regard to these projects, they are uniformly met by the inquiry whether those interested in the Union Pacific, who have the best means of information, believe in the projects sufficiently to invest their own money in them. If the answer is "No," that is apt to be the end of the application. The directors, therefore, are under constant pressure to take interests in these enterprises. If they do not do so, they are charged with selfishness, with lack of enterprise, and with a desire to get everything out of the country without putting anything back into it.

If, on the other hand, they do, as in the case of the Omaha and Grant Smelter, lend such enterprises a helping hand, and evince their confidence in them by advancing money, they are, in case such enterprises prove remunerative, charged with having drawn illicit profits from a connection with companies doing business with the Union Pacific. Whichever course they pursue, they fail to give satisfaction, and are severely criticised.

This can be said, I believe, of the directors of no other railroad company in the country.

(7) As respects the use of the company's funds for the purpose of influencing legislation, I deem it unnecessary to say anything. Extensive as the investigation has been, your record contains no trace of any such improper use of money. On this vital point the company comes out from the fire unscathed. If anything to the contrary is to be found in the evidence, I would ask to have it pointed out. No document, no voucher, no witness that the Commission has called for and likely to throw light on this charge, has failed to be presented or to appear.

That the company has in the course of its history, and even during recent years, spent large amounts on its legislative business is apparent. The vouchers for such payments have been produced, as also the officials through whose hands the money passed. This money was spent on the legislative business of the company, just as equal or much larger sums were spent upon the legal business of the company. The one requires no less unremitting attention than the other. The Union Pacific operates railroads in seven States and Territories, and measures nearly affecting its interests are continually pending before Congress. The company cannot suffer default before legislatures or before Congress, any more than it can suffer default in the courts. Wherever, as in the case of the Union Pacific, vast interests are at stake, whether in the courts or before legislative bodies, they must be carefully looked after. To thus look after them necessarily costs money, and a great deal of money. But there is no more ground to assume that the money thus spent in legislative work is spent in corrupting legislators than there is that money spent in prosecuting or defending cases in court is spent in corrupting judges and jurors.

(8) The matter of the alleged interest of directors and officials in outside companies I have already sufficiently discussed. Nothing submit, appears in your record under this heading which either does not admit of satisfactory explanation or of a perfect defense.

(9) As respects the interest of the company in outside business enterprises, such as coal mines, stock-yards, etc., it must be borne in mind that the position of the Union Pacific has been peculiar. It was originally supposed that the transcontinental road would run through what was practically a desert. It was constructed to do Pacific business alone. The region through which it ran was devoid of inhabitants, and of course had no accumulated capital. Under these circumstances, the very necessities of the company compelled it, in its earlier days, to enter into these outside business enterprises. It had to mine coal, for instance, for its own use, inasmuch as there were no coal mines, except such as it might open, on the line of its road. Moreover, there were certain branches of business, elsewhere left to private enterprise, which could not be so left to it in this country, for the reason that neither men nor money were in the country. For example, for thousands of miles there were no hotels. The company, therefore, had to build hotels, if only to accommodate its own employés; and accordingly it was forced to go, to a certain extent, into the hotel business. So also as respects stock-yards. A stock-yard is simply a depot for the receipt and handling of cattle for shipment; just as a freight station or a passenger depot are buildings for the receipt and accommodation of freight and passengers seeking transportation. The company had to establish stock-yards, for the reason that no one else was prepared to establish them, any more than other persons were prepared to establish hotels. In many cases these stock-yards had to be permanently operated by the railroad company, for the obvious reason that the business transacted was confined to short periods of the year, and no one else would undertake to do it. I submit that in no case has your investigation shown any abuse connected with these stock-yards. Charges have been made against the company at Council Bluffs, and at other points; but all of these admit of ready and obvious explanation; and the difficulty in these cases seems to have arisen from the fact that the company did not own and operate the yards itself to the exclusion of all private enterprise.

The company also operated a rolling-mill at Laramie, for the reason that it was necessary to re-roll its old iron, and the cost of transportation, if the old iron was sent to be rolled at a mill operated by private parties, would amount to nearly as much as the iron was worth. Old iron must be handled upon the spot if it is to be handled economically.

But the policy of the company during recent years has been to withdraw, as rapidly as possible, from all connection with outside enterprises, and to confine itself to its legitimate business of a common carrier. This has been well understood, and is apparent from almost innumerable letters in the correspondence between the Eastern office and the local office at Omaha. Meanwhile, such a change of policy as this can be brought about gradually, if it is brought about without detriment, both public and private. The company has already disposed of its coal interests in Colorado, and for several years it has had under consideration the expediency of disposing of its coal interests in other Territories. This matter has recently been investigated by the present board of Government directors, one member of which—Mr. Hanna—has long practical experience as a coal miner. Mr. Hanna has expressed his opinion, in writing, that the time has not yet come when it would be safe for the Union Pacific to give up coal mining and to turn that business over exclusively to private parties.

(10) The payment of a large sum in dividends, between the years 1873 and 1884, is alleged as an offense; and it has been argued that the more recent financial difficulties of the company are due to such payments.

So far as the dividends in question were concerned, this matter at least has been fully discussed, and finally passed upon by the highest tribunal in the country, to wit, the Congress of the United States. Payment of dividends on the capital stock of the company began in the year 1873. In 1878 the "Thurman act" was passed. The passage of this act was due to the payment of dividends. Congress therein practically covered the whole ground, disposing of the dividend question, as is apparent from the debates. It assumed the position that, if dividends were to be paid to the stockholders, provision must likewise be made for the creditors of the company. What that provision should be was distinctly prescribed in the act, and partook of the nature of a preferred charge. The matter of future dividends was then provided for, and it was enacted that it should be a penal offense on the part of the directors to pay, or on the part of the stockholders to receive, any dividends, unless provision for the creditors of the company, as prescribed in the act, had first been made. Furthermore, in the course of debate the ground was explicitly taken by Senator Thurman, the father of the bill, that it was not desirable the payment of dividends to the stockholders should be discontinued. "It is," he said, "for the interest not only of the companies, but of the country and the public, that the stockholders should receive some reasonable dividends; because where roads pay dividends they are always better managed then where they pay none." (Congressional Record, March 12, 1878.) The payment of dividends was, therefore, not only recognized as proper by Congress, but the payment of them, where the earnings would justify it, and provision for the debts of the company had been made, was actually encouraged.

This took place in 1878. Dividends under the "Thurman act" were paid by the company to its stockholders during the succeeding six years. The payment of dividends stopped in April, 1884, because the earnings ceased to justify their payment. Meanwhile, from the year 1878 down to the present time, whether dividends were paid to stockholders or not, every dollar provided by the "Thurman act" to be set aside for the satisfaction of the creditors of the company has been set aside. It is alleged by no one that the company is in default as respects these payments.

This matter, therefore, has been fully discussed, passed upon by Congress, decided, and the company has lived up to the decision. It is res adjudicata.

Moreover, it is incorrect to assume that any financial difficulties of the company subsequent to the year 1883 were due to the payment of dividends prior to that time. This is apparent from the returns as published in the annual reports.

As evidence of this I have to refer to the table of earnings of the company since 1880, to be found on page 99 of the annual report of the directors for the year 1886. It will there be seen that the gross earnings of the Union Pacific attained their maximum in the year 1881, when they exceeded $24,000,000. In the year 1885 they had fallen to $17,500,000—a decrease of nearly $7,000,000, or more than one-half of the largest net earnings of any year in the company's history, those net earnings never having quite reached the sum of $12,000,000. It is to this falling off of gross earnings, and consequently of net earnings, that the more recent financial difficulties of the company were due. The falling off again, was due to the construction of competing lines to the Pacific coast. The value of the so-called transcontinental business was $3,703,656.79 in 1881, while five years later, in 1886, it was only $1,334,249.47,—a falling off of 64 per cent. Other through competitive traffic in Colorado, Utah, and Montana fell off in like ratio at the same time and for the same reason. That it should so fall off was impossible for the directors to foresee. Such a reduction was most improbable—almost without precedent. Meanwhile, from the date of the consolidation in 1880 to April, 1884, when dividends were stopped, the net income of the company amounted, after the payment of all fixed charges, to nearly $24,000,000, of which sum $15,600,000 were disbursed in the form of dividends, leaving an amount of $8,250,000 belonging to the stockholders, and fairly applicable to dividends, which was turned into the business, and is now represented in the company's property. The dividends paid were not unduly large, and their payment by no other company would ever have attracted notice or been alleged as an offense.

I deem it unnecessary to offer any more extended argument or closing defense of the Union Pacific. I have merely to add that, never in the history of corporations has there been an investigation equal in magnitude, thoroughness, or cost to that which your Commission has just completed. In the desire to make the investigation final, and put a stop to future idle and scandalous talk, it may not improperly be said that your Commission has neglected no effort to bring all parties before you who had aught to say against the Pacific railroads. The Union Pacific has interposed no objection to the evidence thus adduced. Regardless of the fact whether such evidence was legally admissible or no, we have patiently and silently submitted to the production, among more pertinent matter, of a vast amount of scandal, tittle-tattle, gossip, unfounded allegations of prejudiced parties, newspaper rumors, all dragged into court to make out some sort of a case upon which an indictment might be framed. We submit that no such case has been made out. We further submit that no such case can be made out.

It would be futile to pretend that where a corporation has for over twenty years been concerned in such a multiplicity of transactions as the Union Pacific has been concerned in, some sort of a popular case could not, with sufficient expenditure of industry, ingenuity, and money, be worked up against it. The men who have handled the interests of the company since Congress itself in 1873, and again in 1878, passed upon all matters involved in the management of the company's affairs up to those dates, have been no more and no less than human. That they have committed errors is not for a moment denied. It is, however, confidently maintained that this investigation shows that they have handled the affairs of the corporation merely in the way in which the affairs of other corporations of a similar character have been handled; that they have had recourse to no unusual or corrupt practices, and that all errors into which they have fallen, injurious to the interests of the company, have been errors of judgment, and not errors of intent.

I remain, &c.,

CHARLES F. ADAMS,
President.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

IN THE MATTER OF THE

Application of the United States Pacific Railway Commission to compel Leland Stanford to answer certain interrogatories to him propounded by said Commission.

[Petition.]

Circuit court of the United States for the northern district of California.
In the matter of the United States Pacific Railway Commission.

The petition of Robert E. Pattison, E. Ellery Anderson, and David T. Littler, Commissioners appointed under an act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of railroads which have received aid from the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1887, respectfully shows:

I.

That the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California was duly organized and incorporated under the laws of the State of California on or about the 27th day of June, 1861.

That on December 13, 1862, the Western Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated under an act of the legislature of the State of California.

That on the 22d day of August, 1870, the said Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, and the said Western Pacific Railroad Company, together with certain other railroad companies, were duly and legally consolidated, and that the companies so consolidated became, and thereafter were known as, the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

That on the 1st day of July, 1862, the Congress of the United States enacted a law entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes."

That by the ninth section of said act it was, among other things, provided that the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of California, was thereby authorized to construct a railroad and telegraph line from the Pacific coast, at or near San Francisco or the navigable waters of the Sacramento River, to the eastern boundary of California, upon the terms and conditions stated in the said act, and that thereafter authority was given to the said corporation to extend the line of its railroad to a junc-with the Union Pacific Railroad Company, at or near Ogden, in the ritory of Utah.

II.

That under the provisions of the act of July 1, 1862, above referred , and of another act of Congress passed July 2, 1864, entitled "An act amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad d telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, d other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," the said Central Pacific ilroad Company received aid from the Government of the United tes in bonds, and that the terms and conditions upon which such was extended to the said company are set forth in detail in the said ts, to which acts reference is hereby made for greater certainty.

III.

That on the 7th day of October, 1832, the Central Pacific Railroad mpany duly accepted the conditions of the said acts of Congress, and sequently filed their acceptance thereof in the Department of the terior, and that they thereby became subject to the jurisdiction of ngress and the laws of the United States; that all of the bonds pro- ded by the said acts have been duly delivered by the United States to said Central Pacific Railroad Company, and that the said company received the entire benefit thereof; that all other privileges, advan- es, and gifts of land by the said acts provided have also been re- ived by the said company in so far as it has become entitled to re- ve the same.

IV.

Your petitioners further show that by the terms of the said act of ngress first above recited, approved March 3, 1887, it was provided at the President of the United States should appoint three Commis- ners for the purposes of the said act; that the persons appointed on said Commission should have power to examine all books, papers, d methods of the companies in the said act named, and that the said mmissioners were charged with the duty of examining into the work- g and financial management of all the railroads that have received aid m the Government in bonds, and also to inquire and report whether id companies, or either of them, or their officers or agents, have paid y money or other valuable consideration, or done any other act or ing for the purposes in the said act stated, to which for greater cer- inty reference is hereby made.

V.

Your petitioners further show that in the month of April, 1887, the President of the United States did appoint your petitioners Commis- sioners under the said act, and that said Commissioners have duly quali- ied, and are now engaged in discharging the duties imposed upon them by the said act.

VI.

Your petitioners further show that it was, by the last-mentioned act, further provided "that the Commissioners hereby created, or either of them, shall have power to require the attendance and testimony of wit- nesses, and the production of all books, contracts, agreements, and docu- ments relating to the matter under investigation, and to administer oaths; and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section;" and that "any of the circuit or district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, issue an order requiring any such person to appear before said Commissioners, or either of them, as the case may be, and produce books and papers, if so ordered, and give evidence touching the matter in question."

VII.

Your petitioners further show that on the 10th day of August, 188[illegible], a regular session of the Commission was held at the Palace Hotel, in the city of San Francisco, for the purpose of investigating the books, accounts, and methods, and other matters referred to said Commission by the said act, of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

That Leland Stanford was and, from about the year 1863 to the present time, has been and still is the president of the said company; that as such president he has taken a large part in the management of the said corporation, has been active in all its business, and has been personally familiar with its financial affairs.

That on the said 10th day of August, 1887, the said Leland Stanford was present before the said Commission as a witness duly sworn; that in the course of the examination of the said Stanford a number of vouchers purporting to represent the expenditures of moneys belonging to the said corporation, which vouchers had been produced by the company and were duly authenticated, were produced and verified; that a copy of all the said vouchers is hereunto annexed, marked "Schedule A," which schedule is made a part of this petition.

That it appears from said vouchers that between the 9th day of November, in the year 1870, and the 21st day of December, in the year 1880, various large sums of money, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $733,725.68, had been expended by the said Leland Stanford and had been by him charged to the said company, and by the acts of the said company had been re-imbursed to the said Leland Stanford.

That the persons to whom the said moneys had been paid and the objects to which the same had been applied do not appear upon the face of the said vouchers, except that the said objects are stated in general terms to have been for general expense account for legal services, and also except that in a few instances the initials of persons to whom the moneys purport to have been paid are given.

Your petitioners further show that in the course of the said examination, voucher No. 2569½, being one of the vouchers hereto annexed, was shown to the witness and the following interrogatory was thereupon propounded to him:

"Q. Was any part of the $171,000, the sum named in this bill that I handed to you (and that you now have), paid for the purpose of influencing legislation?"

The witness thereupon declined to answer the said interrogatory.

That in the course of the examination of the said Stanford it appeared that the amount contained in the said voucher was ascertained by one William E. Brown, under the directions of the said Leland Stanford, and that the result was arrived at by examining the individual checks of the said Stanford and selecting therefrom those which the said Stanford desired to charge to the said Central Pacific Railroad Company and containing the aggregate of the said checks.

That it further appeared that the said Stanford had destroyed the said checks and the stub-books from which the same were taken, and the pass-books relating to the bank account on which the said checks had been drawn.

That it also appeared from the evidence of the said Leland Stanford that in the month of December, 1875, the legislature of California was in session at the city of Sacramento; that it was the custom and practice of the said Stanford to attend at the sessions of the legislature for the purpose of protecting the interests of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and that on such occasions he was accompanied by one or more attorneys or agents, for the purpose of assisting him before the legislature.

That the following interrogatory was propounded to the said witness:

"Q. Please name the lawyers who were in the habit of attending the legislature with you?"

That the witness thereupon declined to answer the said interrogatory.

That thereupon all of the said vouchers following voucher No. 2569½ were in succession presented to the witness and he was asked whether any part of the moneys described in the said vouchers was expended through any agent or individual for the purpose of influencing legislation, and that the said Stanford, as to each of the said vouchers, declined to answer the said interrogatory.

That subsequently the following interrogatory was propounded to the said Stanford in relation to the said vouchers:

"Q. Did you ever give any portion of the moneys covered by these vouchers to Mr. S. T. Gage for the purpose of using the same in connection with measures pending in the legislature?"

That the witness declined to answer the said interrogatory.

That thereupon the following interrogatory was propounded to the said witness:

"Q. Did you ever give any money that was thus expended without requiring any detailed account of the manner in which the same should be expended, to Mr. S. T. Gage?"

That the witness declined to answer the said interrogatory.

That thereupon the following interrogatory was propounded to the said witness:

"Q. Did you ever pay any money to W. B. Carr for the purpose of being used with reference to legislative matters pending in the California legislature?"

That the witness declined to answer the said interrogatory.

That thereupon the following interrogatory was propounded to the said witness:

"Q. I ask you the same question with regard to W. W. Stow."

That the witness declined to answer the said interrogatory.

That thereupon the following interrogatory was propounded to the said witness:

"Q. I ask you the same question as to R. B. Mitchell."

That the witness declined to answer the said interrogatory.

That thereupon the following interrogatory was propounded to the said witness:

"Q. I ask you the same question as to W. M. Stewart?"

That the witness declined to answer the said interrogatory.

That thereupon the following interrogatory was propounded to the said witness:

"Q. The same question as to S. W. Kellogg?"

That the witness declined to answer the said interrogatory.

That thereupon the following interrogatory was propounded to the said witness:

"Q. I ask you the same question as to Lyman Trumbull?"

That the witness declined to answer the said interrogatory.

That thereupon the following interrogatory was propounded to the said witness:

"Q. I ask you the same question as to John P. Jones?"

That the witness declined to answer the said interrogatory.

VIII.

That a copy of the evidence of the said Leland Stanford relating to the matters above referred to and containing his refusals to answer the several interrogatories above stated is hereunto annexed, marked "Schedule B," and is made a part of this petition.

Your petitioners further show that they are informed and believe that the matters sought to be disclosed by the interrogatories addressed to the said Leland Stanford relate to the subject-matter of their inquiry, and that in order to enable them to properly discharge the duties imposed upon them by the said acts of Congress the witness should be required to answer the same.

Therefore these petitioners pray this honorable court to issue an order requiring the said Leland Stanford to show cause, at a time and place to be specified in the said order, why he should not be required to appear before the said Commissioners and answer the said interrogatories.

ANSWER OF LELAND STANFORD.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

IN THE MATTER OF THE

United States Pacific Railway Commission.

To the Honorable the Justices of said Circuit Court:

Leland Stanford, named in the petition filed in this honorable court in the above entitled matter named, comes and makes answer to said petition in the manner following, that is to say:

The Central Pacific Railroad Company was duly incorporated under the laws of the State of California, on or about the 27th of June, 1861, and when it has continued to be and still is a corporation duly organized and acting under the laws of the State of California. In 1870 the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California consolidated with the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and thereafter became and still is known as the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

On the 1st of July, 1862, the Congress of the United States passed an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes."

On October 7, 1862, the company accepted the conditions of this act in conformity with its requirements.

On July 2, 1864, Congress passed an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,'" approved July 1, 1862. Of the provisions of these acts of Congress the company availed itself, and has received the bonds provided for in said acts, and in part received the other subsidies therein provided for. With the aid thus furnished and the aid furnished by various subsidies under the laws of the State of California and the means and resources of the promoters and stockholders of that company, it constructed the Central Pacific Railroad from the city of Sacramento, in the State of California, to Promontory Point, in the Territory of Utah—the Central Pacific Railroad Company constructing the road from Sacramento to Promontory Point, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company constructing that extending from Sacramento to the City of San José. Since its construction I have been and still am president of the Central Pacific Railroad Company. As such I have taken a very active part in the construction of its road and the management of its affairs, and in the earlier road and the management of its affairs; and in the earlier part of the history of the company I was its financial agent and representative upon this coast.

During the course of the construction of its road the company was compelled to borrow money largely, and incur large expenditures of an extremely varied and general character.

In its incipiency the enterprise was regarded as of doubtful success. The project was considered as visionary; its practicability was questioned; the liability, under the laws of this State, of the stockholders for their proportion of the debts and liabilities of the company contracted or incurred while stockholders, created distrust and deterred the public from taking an interest in the enterprise or extending it financial aid. These causes rendered the company, as such, unable in its corporate capacity to borrow money or secure the necessary funds with which to carry forward the construction of its road. Time was material, delay was disastrous. Public and private interests alike imperiously demanded a speedy completion of the road. Under the circumstances no alternative remained to myself and associates but upon our individual responsibility, as best as we might, to raise the necessary funds to enable the company to prosecute the work of construction of the road. Upon its success we staked our fortunes, assumed the responsibilities, and borrowed upon our individual credit these necessary funds.

At that time its office and principal place of business under its original articles of incorporation was in the city of Sacramento, while in those days, as at present, the city of San Francisco was the principal money center of the Pacific Coast, and the place where I was compelled to transact most of the business on behalf of the company in the way of raising and disbursing moneys on its account. In so doing I was practically compelled to pursue the course described in my evidence, a copy of which is annexed to the present application, in transacting the business of the company, and from time to time I made up my accounts and furnished vouchers to it as therein described.

In this way I have taken part in transacting the business of the company for a period extending over twenty-five years, and in point of value aggregating upwards of four hundred millions of dollars. As the business took place I was cognizant of it, but, owing to its multiplicity and the pressure of matters more important than mere detail, as well as the lapse of time, I am now no longer able to recall many of the matters with which I was once personally so familiar.

In May, 1887, shortly after the organization of the Commission, I received a circular from the Commissioners, calling upon me for information touching the matter specified in the act of Congress creating it.

This embraced all the matters contemplated and provided for in the act. How extensive and detailed is the information thus asked for an inspection of the act of Congress alone can tell. Comprehensive and sweeping as are its requirements, immediately upon the receipt of the circular I in good faith diligently endeavored to comply with them. Agreeable to the request thus made, I gave the necessary instructions to the officers and employés of the company to secure all available information thus called for, and called to my assistance all the aid at my command to fully, completely, and categorically answer the various interrogatories propounded to me. These answers I have submitted to the Commission. Some time after the receipt of this circular I was favored with the presence of accountants and experts of the Commission, at whose request they called upon me for the purpose of investigating the books of the company and its affairs.

I promptly placed at their command all the books and all information at my disposal. Since then these gentlemen, with the assistance of the various officers and employés of the company, have been diligently in collecting all the data and information they desired in respect to the subject of the circular. Since the arrival of the Commission in San Francisco I have waited upon them; the principal officers and employés of the Central Pacific Railroad Company have waited upon them; and every person in the employ of the company whose presence was desired, or who could furnish them information in respect to the subjects of their investigation, have promptly and cheerfully done so.

In the original act of July 1, 1862, section 20, it was provided—

That the corporation hereby created and the roads connected therewith under the provisions of this act shall make to the Secretary of the Treasury an annual report, therein shall be set forth, first, the names of the stockholders and their places of residence, so far as the same can be ascertained; second, the names and residence of the directors, and all other officers of the company; third, the amount of stock, and the amount thereof actually paid in; fourth, a description of the lines of road surveyed, and of the lines thereof fixed upon for the construction of the road, and the cost of such surveys; fifth, the amount received from passengers upon the road; sixth, the amount received from freight thereon; seventh, a statement of the expense of said road and its fixtures; eighth, a statement of the indebtedness of said company, setting forth the various kinds therefor; which report shall be sworn to by the president of the said company, and shall be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury on or before the first day of July in each year.

The requirements of this provision of the law have been fully complied with from the time of its enactment, thus early bringing to the attention of the Government in the mode prescribed knowledge of all matters thus referred to.

Compliance with the provisions of this section of the statute compelling the company, in 1863, to report to the Government the names of its stockholders, their place of residence, the names of its directors and of all its other officers, the amount of its stock subscribed, of the amount actually paid in, a description of the line of its road surveyed, as well as of the lines fixed for its construction, of the cost of such surveys, the amount received from passengers and freight, a statement of the expenses of the road, its fixtures, and a statement of the indebtedness of the company, setting forth the various kinds thereof. Coeval, therefore, with the creation with its indebtedness, the company was required to furnish the Government with a statement of it; and coeval with the, time of the requirement did the company furnish such statement and, I believe, has ever since continued to do so.

As repeatedly declared by the highest court in the land, the relations created by the act of Congress between this company and the Government was that of a debtor and creditor. And the sole and only power to modify or change the relation thus created is expressed in the provisions of section 18, declaring that—

Whenever it appears that the net earnings of the entire road and telegraph, including the amount allowed for the services rendered for the United States, after deducting all expenditures, including the repairs and furnishing and running and managing the said road, shall exceed ten per cent. upon its cost, exclusive of the five per centum to be paid to the United States, Congress may reduce the rates of fares thereon, and, if unreasonable in amount, may fix and establish the same by law. And to better accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line and keep the same in working order, and secure to the Government at all times (but particularly in time of war) the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may, at any time, having due regard to the rights of said companies namely herein, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The repeal of this act of Congress would not do away with the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Its existence does not depend upon the act of Congress. It owes its existence to the laws of the State of California and to those laws alone. While to the provisions of the act of Congress are due the bounties therein provided for, the company does not owe its existence to that act, but to the laws of the State of California. However the repeal of the act of Congress may affect these bounties, it can in no wise affect the existence of this company.

It will moreover be observed that this reserved power is qualified with the attendant obligation on the part of the Government to only exercise it "having due regard for the rights of said companies." In the exercise of this reserved power, on the 19th of June, 1878, Congress passed an act to create an Auditor of Railroad Accounts, and for other purposes (Statutes of 1878–'79, page 169). The designation of this office was changed by the act of March 3, 1881, to "United States Commissioner of Railroads." The change has only been in title; the power and duties of the office remain the same. The first Auditor of Railroad Accounts appointed under the act of 1878 visited the office of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, in San Francisco, in 1879, and made a thorough examination of the accounts, books, and vouchers of the company from the date of its organization down to the date of his examination. He was given every facility for his examination.

Upon his report the account between the company and the Government was then settled and adjusted. Like examinations have actually been made, and the accounts between the Government and the company adjusted accordingly, the last one being on December 31, 1886. In these various ways was the Government kept fully informed, in the mode prescribed by Congress, of the condition of the affairs of the company as they stood up to the 31st of December, 1886. The affairs of the company, running from the 1st day of July, 1862, to the 31st of December, 1886, were thus annually made public to the country before the road of the Central Pacific Railroad Company had assumed any tangible shape. Its condition was reported to the United States Secretary of the Treasury. To him was annually reported the amount received from passengers and freight over the road. To him was reported "a statement of the indebtedness of the company, setting forth the various kind thereof." As the road was constructed and the indebtedness therefor created, it had to be reported to the Secretary of the Treasury, and it was so reported annually. Congress and the country were thus annually advised of the progress of the enterprise and of the mode and manner in which it was conducted. The work was not done in secret; its magnitude forbade; the interests of the parties forbade; the interests of the public forbade. The solemn declaration of Congress that "the better to accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and the keeping the same in order," fully attest the character of the enterprise, and at once demonstrate how futile have been the efforts to conceal or disguise aught concerning the mode or manner in which it was carried forward. The mode and manner in which it was carried on was not disguised from the public; but the public in this State, and the public throughout the United States, at the time well knew how the work was carried on.

The embarrassments and the difficulties attendant upon the construction of the road deterred capital and banished all grounds for cupidity. While risks had to be incurred, liabilities assumed, the prospective profit and success were contingent and doubtful, and few were hardy enough to embark in the enterprise. While myself and my associates did not at the time hesitate to take the risk and stake our fortunes on the success or failure of the enterprise, and while we do not feel that we are on that account alone entitled to justly complain of any fair and candid or even official examination of the mode and manner in which the affairs of the company have been carried on and the interests of the public been treated, yet we feel that where we have complied with all of the requirements of the law, where we have annually reported to the United States Secretary of the Treasury, as required under the act of 1862, where we have submitted the affairs of the company to the investigation of all the officials charged with the investigation of the same, and where we have complied with every requirement of the law, oppressively as it has sometimes borne upon the company, and where the properly-authorized officers of the Government have accepted and received the reports of the company, fully showing the condition of its affairs as required by law, up to the 31st of December, 1886, it is hardly in keeping with the solemn compact made between the company and Congress, under the act of July, 1862, that no addition to, alteration in, or amendment to that act should be made without having due regard for the rights of the company, on the 3d of March, 1887, to pass the act of Congress authorizing the present investigation, under which we are called upon to go over now and investigate transactions reported to the Government over a quarter of a century ago, and long since settled and closed.

It may be true that there is no statute of limitations to run against the Government of the United States in any suit or proceeding at law or in equity; but assuredly where parties have carried on their dealings agreeably to the provisions of the several acts of Congress for over twenty-five years, openly and publicly, under the official responsibility, and subject to the scrutiny of the public press, it is not too much to ask that after such lapse of time some clear, imperious public necessity shall demand a disregard of all the principles and rules governing men in the ordinary business relations of life, and require the existence of some overruling necessity to call upon and justify the overhauling of all such dealings. Clearly this can not be the "due regard for the rights of the company" referred to in the act of 1862.

"With due regard for the rights of the company" such investigation cannot be had. "With due regard for the rights of the company" its duties, alike to the Government and its stockholders, cannot be disregarded. "With due regard for the rights of the company" its confidential relations and private business affairs cannot be made the subject of public investigation.

Notwithstanding having in these various modes, from the time of the passage of the original act of July 1, 1862, down to December 31, 1886, placed the Government in full possession of the true condition of the affairs of the company, yet upon the arrival of the Commission in this city, as already stated, I and the various officers of the company have promptly and cheerfully afforded to the Commission every facility for a full, complete, and most thorough investigation of all matters the examination of which the Commission could properly be chargeable with. This examination has not only extended to the affairs of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, but it has extended to a searching investigation of the affairs of all the consolidated and allied companies connected with that corporation. Their affairs have been examined into, not only by the experts of the Commission, but the Commissioners themselves, and all their business relations have been exposed to the public and the prying curiosity of rival business competitors. Despite all the information thus promptly and cheerfully extended to the Commission it insists upon an investigation of matters with which the Government has and can have no possible concern. The Government, as already stated, is but a creditor of the company. Its interest is in its per centum of the net earnings of the company. What disposition may have been made of its assets in the past, or what disposition may have been made of such portion of its assets or earnings as the Government has not and never had any interest in, is a matter with which the Government can have no possible concern.

In the answer submitted to the Commission on behalf of the company I have already stated, and now state, that in determining the amount of the net earnings of the company for the purpose of ascertaining what would be coming to the Government, amounts in respect to which satisfactory and detailed vouchers are not furnished shall be regarded as if the money represented by such vouchers were on hand, and the account with the Government settled as if such moneys remained unexpended. And I here make the same statement, in view of which I am wholly unable to discover how the Government can be concerned in any of the other earnings or funds of the company, or to which it has not and can have no possible legal or equitable claim. As to all moneys and funds of the company upon which the Government has not and can have no legal or equitable claim it occupies the position and stands clothed with all the legal rights and powers of any other debtor in the management, conduct, and disposition of this property, and is entitled to the like protection under the law.

It is in regard to this class of property the Commission insists upon answers to questions insistence upon which can have no possible effect upon any of the just relations between this company and the Government, and can only tend to cast doubt and suspicion upon parties whose names may be mentioned in the course of such investigation. As the subjects in respect to which these questions are propounded are of an exclusive private character and in no ways affecting the interests of the Government, neither the company nor its officers feel called upon to answer them.

To this course I feel the more constrained as the gentlemen of the Commission have distinctly and repeatedly avowed in the course of their examination that they did not regard themselves bound in such examination by the ordinary rules of evidence; that they would receive hearsay and ex parte statements, surmises, suspicions, and all character of information that might be called to their attention. And during the course of my examination before the Commission it has more than once transpired that I was examined upon charges made in pleadings and proceedings instituted against the company based upon suspicion and surmise, and in many cases without actual foundation. Questions have been propounded, and a line of examination pursued, manifestly prompted by disaffected and hostile parties, whose aim was more the pursuit of personal enmity of a private character than the interests of the public at large or the ends of justice. To answer any of the objectionable questions propounded necessarily gives rise to the implication that all persons whose names may be mentioned in the questions to which answers are declined are guilty of the acts, commission of which is implied in the bare asking of the question.

In my testimony given to the Commissioners I have said in substance, and now repeat, that I have never corrupted or attempted to corrupt any member of the legislature, or any member of Congress, or any public official, nor have I authorized any agent to do so.

In regard to the vouchers referred to on the present application, I have already submitted my explanation to the Commission, and I have already stated to them, as I have hereinbefore stated, that they shall be allowed in any wise to injuriously affect the interests of the Government. Yet I do not in this connection deem it proper to admit the implication of the Commission of any thing improper upon my part, because of the form or character of the vouchers, or the failure to explain the same. All the claims covered by those vouchers have received not only the approval of the board of directors of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, but likewise the approval of the stockholders of the company. All parties who could in any wise legally or equitably be affected by the disbursements embraced in those vouchers were fully satisfied therewith, and have ratified and approved of the same. In addition to which I may be permitted to say that in the conduct and management of a business of the magnitude of that of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the various corporations consolidated and allied therewith, it is impossible not from time to time to have to do business involving disbursements which every dictate of business prudence will not admit of being made public. Arrangements of a private character, names of parties not publicly known, and the disclosure of which could only result in defeating the ends in view and exposing the persons so named to suspicion or obloquy, would forbid making the same public either upon the archives of the company or before a public commission. We find this course of policy not only sanctioned by ordinary experience in business life, but we find that the Government of these United States and the government of the State of California, as well as the government of the city and county of San Francisco, severally allow to their chief magistrates moneys the investment of which is committed exclusively to their judgment and discretion, and for which detailed vouchers are never required.

I regret that the Commission have deemed it their duty to propound questions involving criminality on my part and on the part of the persons whose names have been mentioned by the Commission in such questions, answers to which for the reasons already stated I have felt constrained to decline to make.

I had supposed that every American citizen was protected by law from such questions. Be that as it may, acting not merely on my own behalf, but in behalf of those whose interests as stockholders of the Central Pacific Railroad are committed to my charge, I feel bound to decline to answer them unless the court shall otherwise direct. All citizens of these United States are entitled to the equal protection of the laws, and no person can be deprived of life, liberty, and property without due process of law.

I feel that I am entitled not only personally to the benefit of these constitutional guarantees, but that all my fellow citizens whose interests I, through this company, represent are likewise entitled to their benefit. I do not feel personally at liberty to decline to assure to them and to their interests committed to my charge the benefit of the protection secured to them by these great fundamental principles of our Constitution and laws, and, therefore, I respectfully submit that under their protection I am not required to answer the questions propounded, nor should the court make the order prayed for in the petition herein.

BRIEF FOR THE U. S. PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION.

No. ——. IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

IN THE MATTER OF THE United States Pacific Railway Commission's application to compel Leland Stanford to answer.

Points and authorities. John T. Carey, United States attorney, and Henry C. McPike, assistant United States attorney, counsel for petitioners.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

The petitioners are the Commissioners appointed under an act of Congress passed March 3, 1887, authorizing the investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of railroads which have received aid from the United States, and for other purposes.

The Central Pacific Railroad is a corporation included with those designated by the act.

The Commissioners, in the discharge of the duties imposed by the act, have been for some time past engaged at the city of San Francisco in examining the officers of the company and its books and accounts. During the examination of Leland Stanford, who since 1863 has been the president of the road, a number of vouchers were produced bearing his signature and containing no other designation of the purposes to which the moneys covered by the vouchers had been applied than the statement that they were for "expense accounts" or "legal expense accounts."

The act, among other things, directs the Commissioners to inquire "what amounts of money or other valuable consideration, such as stocks, bonds, passes, etc., have been expended or paid out by said companies, whether for lawful or unlawful purpose, and for which sufficient and detailed vouchers have not been given," and further, "to inquire and report whether said companies, or either of them, or their officers or agents, have paid any money or other valuable consideration or done any other act or thing for the purpose of influencing legislation."

In pursuance of this direction contained in the act, the Commissioners addressed to the said Leland Stanford the following question:

Q. "Was any part of the $171,000, the sum named in this bill that I handed to you (and that you now have), paid for the purpose of influencing legislation?"

The witness declined to answer the question, not, however, alleging as a reason for such refusal that the answer might tend to criminate him, but asserting that the question was one to which the Commission had no legal right to demand an answer. The question was repeated as to various vouchers, and in different forms, for the purpose of avoiding any question as to its being sufficiently specific; but as the company's counsel have expressly declared that they did not desire the court to pass on any mere question of form or regularity, we shall assume that the question above quoted presents the whole matter to the court on its merits.

The question thus presented, while of the utmost gravity and importance, is entirely free from any complications or uncertainty as to the facts involved. The petitioners respectfully insist that they were entitled to an answer to the question above propounded. Their right to an answer depends on the two following propositions:

I.

That Congress had the power to direct the investigation, and to direct it in a manner set forth in the act.

II.

That the question above propounded relates to the subject of the investigation.

POINT 1.—Congress had the power to investigate "books, accounts, and methods of railroads which have received aid from the United States."

In this connection it will be observed that the act of March 3, 1887, is not applied to any corporation by name, but extends to all corporations which have received aid from the United States. It can not, therefore, be claimed that its provisions are directed against any particular corporation.

The proposition stated in this point, in our judgment, will be conceded by every one, including the counsel for the Central Pacific Railroad. Its application to the case under consideration has been disguised and obscured by reference to matters which really have no connection with the question. It is alleged and urged that when the United States lent its credit to the Central Pacific Railroad it abdicated its sovereignty and stepped down into the ranks of its own subjects by creating between it and the corporation above named the relation of debtor and creditor. That as creditor it has no right to demand that what are claimed to be equivalent to proceedings supplementary to execution shall be exercised on its behalf, not only before judgment but before the maturity of its claim. This argument simply tenders a false issue to the court. The objects intended to be attained by the act have no relation to the enforcement of the debt due to the United States, and the investigations directed are not in the nature of proceedings for a recovery of the claim or a discovery of assets.

The attempt, therefore, to apply the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States as laid down in the United States against the Union Pacific Railway Company (98 U. S., 569), can not be successfully maintained. That suit was brought under an act of Congress passed March 3, 1873, directing the Attorney-General to cause a suit in equity to be instituted in the name of the United States against the Union Pacific Railroad Company and against a number of persons described in the act who were alleged to be wrongfully in possession of property of the said company either by reason of unpaid subscriptions for the stock or tion of the receipt of moneys of the company to which they were not entitled, for the purpose of compelling the payment for such stock and the collection and payment of such moneys, and the restitution of such property or its value either to the said railroad company or to the United States, whichever shall in equity be held entitled thereto. (See case above cited, p. 571.)

It will be readily perceived that the sole object of this suit was to enforce by peculiar remedies the alleged rights of the United States as creditor against the defendants as debtors or against persons who could be properly held accountable in that suit for property or money; and the decision of the court is placed entirely on this ground. The United States is treated as an ordinary creditor, whose debt is not due and who seeks by extraordinary proceedings in equity to sequestrate the assets and choses in action of its debtor. The court, however, expressly recognized the existence of the relation of sovereign and subject between the United States and the company, and declared that those relations were in nowise affected or impaired by the existence of the relation of creditor and debtor. At page 616 the court says:

> In its sovereign or legislative relation to the company the United States has power, the extent of which it is unnecessary to define in this case. The two sections of the act, under one of which this suit was instituted, are instances of an exercise of these powers and they affect the interest of the company in important particulars. Congress might have also directed the Attorney-General, either as part of these proceedings or as an independent one, to ask the court to declare the franchise of the company forfeited. It might have ordered a bill to inquire if the company is involved, and if so, wind up its affairs and distribute its assets. In short, there are many modes in which the legislature could have called into operation all the judicial powers known to the law.

This same distinction is still more emphatically recognized in the Sinking Fund Case (99 U. S., p. 710), the clearest statement of this dual relation being found in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Field at page 751:

> The relation of the General Government to the Pacific companies is twofold: That of sovereign in its own territory and that of contractor. As sovereign its power extends to the enforcement of such acts and regulations by the companies as will insure to the management of their roads and conduct of their officers in its territory, the safety, convenience, and comfort of the public.

In the same case, at page 720, Chief-Justice Waite, after having explained the existence of the reserved right of amendment, cites with approbation the law as laid down by Mr. Justice Clifford in Miller v. The State (15 Wall., p. 498):

> It may safely be affirmed that the reserved power may be exercised and to almost any extent to carry into effect the original purposes of the grant or to secure the due administration of its affairs, so as to protect the rights of stockholders and of creditors, and for the proper distribution of its assets.

The same justice again cites that proposition from Holyoke Company v. Lyman, 15 Wallace, 519; the declaration that the same right of amendment may be exercised "to protect the rights of the public and of the corporators or to promote the due administration of the affairs of the corporation." He also cites with approbation the declaration of Mr. Justice Field in Tomlinson v. Jessop, 15 Wallace, 459, that "the reservation affects the entire relation between the State and the corporation and places under legislative control all rights, privileges, and immunities derived by its charter directly from the State."

A vast proportion of the affairs of modern society are carried on through the instrumentalities of corporations. As common carriers they move substantially all the passengers and freight which the requirements of commerce demand. The highways, railways, canals, and water-ways are all substantially operated and controlled by these great corporations. A very large proportion of the manufacturing industries and a proportion of our agricultural enterprises are carried on in the same way. These corporate powers, judiciously exercised, have been among the most powerful agents for the great development of modern civilization, and have largely promoted the wealth, welfare, and comfort of all classes of our society. But they have also proved to be, in the hands of the unscrupulous, powerful engines of oppression and instruments by which the cupidity and the avarice of men have been enabled to gratify unlawful ends. The accumulation of power and wealth in corporations, unless firmly controlled and regulated by efficient and constant supervision, is a menace to the liberties of the people. It seems, therefore, impossible to deny the proposition that all legislatures through whose actions these corporations have been called into being shall have the absolute and unlimited right to control them, and to regulate them, and, when they deem it necessary, to investigate their methods, the management of their affairs, their books and accounts, and to examine their officers.

We submit that a close examination of the act under which these Commissioners have been appointed will satisfy the court that it is not intended under that act to institute any proceedings for the purpose of protecting or advancing the interests of the United States as a creditor. No power whatever is given to the Commissioners to judicially determine as between the United States and the companies any question or right whatever. They cannot determine or adjudge the amount due to the United States from either of the companies referred to in the act. The Commissioners are required to inform themselves as to a vast variety of matters of fact, and are directed to report their conclusions to the President, and through him to Congress. The general purpose of their report is to enable Congress to ascertain "whether the interests of the United States require any extension of time for performance of the obligation to the United States of said companies, or any of them," and the Commissioners are also directed "to submit a scheme for such extension which shall secure to the United States full payment of all debts due them from said companies, with a reasonable rate of interest, in such time as the Commissioners shall propose, having due regard to the financial ability of said companies, and the proper conduct of their business, in such a manner as shall afford efficient service to the public."

We challenge the counsel for the company to cite from the act a single sentence or word which looks to any proceedings whatever which can in any way judicially determine any obligation of these companies, any right of the United States, or in any manner, however remote, affect their relations to each other as debtor and creditor. It is impossible, on the other hand, to read the act carefully without being convinced that the object of Congress was to obtain through this Commission such information as it was entitled in the exercise of its sovereign powers to receive from corporations which it had aided by its grant of powers and franchises, by the loan of its credit, and by its munificent donation of public lands.

POINT 2.—The method of conducting the investigation as provided in the act is entirely within the scope of the powers of Congress.

The act provides that the President of the United States shall appoint three Commissioners, and to these Commissioners power was given to conduct the investigation. No serious question is made as to the right of Congress to adopt this method of obtaining needed information. It could hardly be obtained through the intervention of any committee of Congress. The information called for by the act is so varied and so extensive that it will evidently require the constant and uninterrupted attention of the persons to whom these duties were confided for the entire period allowed by the act itself. Moreover, this method of informing Congress has been so constantly pursued, both by the national and the several State legislatures on so many occasions and for such a variety of purposes, that we shall assume its propriety to be conceded.

POINT 3. The jurisdiction of Congress as to the Central Pacific Railroads is as complete and extensive as it is over all other roads aided by the United States.

This point was expressly decided in the Sinking-Fund Case (99 U. S., p. 710). An attempt was made in that case to distinguish between the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Union Pacific Railroad Company as to the applicability of the Thurman act; but the court held that the Central Pacific Railroad Company, after having accepted all the conditions that were attached to the grants, including the reservation of power to amend, could not assert that Congress had not full jurisdiction over its affairs.

We therefore submit that the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, apply with full force to the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

POINT 4.—The power given to the Commissioners to require the attendance of witnesses, the production of books and papers, and to invoke the aid of the courts of the United States was a valid exercise of the powers of Congress.

This point contains the real question now under consideration. Counsel for the company allege and urge that, while conceding the right of Congress to investigate, and to appoint the Commission, the exercise of these rights can not in any way affect or impair the reciprocal and corresponding rights of the company and its officers to decline to answer. They allege, in short, that Congress had no power, in the methods prescribed for this investigation, to compel the company or its officers to make answer against their will to questions propounded to them. They deny that Congress has power to require the courts of the United States to enforce answers to such questions by their process.

They cite in this connection the case of Kilbourn v. Thompson (103 U. S., p. 168.) We submit that the case cited has no application whatever. The question involved was simply whether the House of Representatives possessed the general power over all citizens of the United States to punish for an alleged contempt. The decision of the court was that no such power existed. No question was presented as to the right of an officer or commissioner engaged in conducting a lawful investigation to apply to a court of competent jurisdiction for an order or process in aid of the lawful purposes prosecuted by such commissioner; nor was there in that case any application to any judicial officer for the enforcement of the right. The House declared by resolution that the trustee of the firm of Jay Cook & Co. had recently made a settlement of the interest of the estate of Jay Cooke & Co. to the disadvantage and loss, as it is alleged, of the numerous creditors of said estate, including the Government of the United States, and also declared that the courts were powerless, by reason of said settlement, to afford adequate redress to the said creditors (including, of course, the Government of the United States), and thereupon it appointed a special committee with power to send for persons and papers. The plaintiff, Kilbourn, was subpœnaed to appear before the committee, and afterwards before the bar of the House. He declined to answer certain questions, and thereupon the Speaker, by his own warrant, committed the plaintiff to jail.

The only question involved in that case was whether the House was vested with power to commit the plaintiff, Kilbourn. In the case at bar, Congress has passed an act directing a lawful investigation. The investigation is to be conducted by commissioners. These commissioners are authorized to subpœna witnesses, and in the event of a refusal to answer to present their petition to this court, setting forth all the facts. They submit themselves entirely to the jurisdiction and power of this court, both as to the sufficiency of the power of Congress and as to the question whether the interrogatory propounded by them is a proper question to be asked of the witness, under the act from which they derive their power, and they ask this court, if it shall decide in the affirmative, to adjudge that the witness should answer, and, in the event of a continued refusal, to enforce such answer by its process.

It is clear, therefore, that the decision cited has no bearing on the question. Moreover, none of the considerations above referred to arising out of the relations between the sovereign and the corporations which it creates apply to the Kilbourn case. The investigation was ordered simply upon the allegation that the United States was the creditor of Jay Cooke & Co. The House directed an investigation into and scrutiny of the affairs of that company without the suggestion of any public object which was to be promoted or served.

The functions exercised by Congress in administering the affairs of a community so vast, representing such varied and different interests, as exist in the United States of America, require for their intelligent application full and detailed information with reference to all matters which may become the subject of Congressional investigation. Without this information Congress is worse than powerless. Its enactments will fail of their effect, and in many cases will intensify and increase the very abuses or wrongs which they were intended to abate or rectify.

We find, from an examination of the statutes of the various States of the Union, that the methods directed by this act, or methods substantially equivalent, have been pursued in relation to a vast variety of subjects.

National banks are corporations created by acts of Congress, to which to a limited extent the credit of the United States has been loaned. By section 5240 of the United States Revised Statutes provision is made for the appointment of bank examiners with full power to examine the books and papers of national banks and to subpœna and examine their officers and agents on oath. Could it possibly be claimed that this power was beyond the scope of Congress? Would any court hesitate to require a bank officer declining to answer a question propounded by an examiner, adjudged to be within the scope of his lawful inquiry, to make such answer, and, in the event of the refusal, to enforce obedience by use of its process?

Railroad commissioners appointed for the purpose of supervising the operation of railroads are, in every State where the office exists, authorized to subpœna witnesses and examine them. In the State of California this right is secured to the railroad commissioners by a provision of the constitution itself. (Article 12, section 22, Constitution of California, 1879.)

In all States the public schools are open to the complete and close scrutiny of inspectors appointed under acts of the legislature, and their powers of inspection and of examination are extended to private schools participating in the public funds.

In the State of California the eighteenth article of the Political Code provides for the appointment of a board of examiners of all claims made against the State. By section 658 the chairman is authorized to issue subpœnas and compel the attendance of witnesses before the board in the same manner that any court in this State may.

By section 1986 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California, subdivision 3, it is provided that witnesses may be required to attend before various officers named in that section or "before any officer or officers empowered by the laws of the United States to take testimony."

Inspectors of registrations are everywhere authorized by law to administer oaths to electors applying to be entered on their registers, and to examine the applicant or his witnesses.

Registers of land entries are authorized by law, in the case of conflicting claims, to examine the claimants and their witnesses.

Officers of the United States appointed for the purpose of obtaining the information and statistics required for the purposes of the census are authorized to put various questions to all persons examined by them, and by section 2191 of the United States Revised Statutes, a refusal to answer either of the inquiries authorized by law subjects the person refusing to a penalty of $30.

Insurance departments everywhere appoint inspectors or officers charged with the duty of examining the condition of the insurance companies, and are likewise authorized to examine books, papers, and officers for the purpose of investigating the affairs of the respective companies and reporting thereon.

Can it be doubted that in a case held to be within the limits of lawful inquiry an officer charged with the duty of making such inquiry would be entitled, on presentation of the facts to any court of competent jurisdiction, to obtain an order directing the witness to answer and to the enforcement of such order by appropriate process?

In England, and in all the States of this Union, grand juries are charged with a number of public duties, in the discharge of which they inquire into the condition of prisons, hospitals, reformatories, asylums, and other quasi-public institutions. They are always authorized by law to examine witnesses. By reference to the statutes of the various States it will be found that in the discharge of these useful duties they are everywhere assisted and aided by the right to apply to competent tribunals for the enforcement of the attendance of witnesses and for process compelling answers to their inquiries.

We cite on this subject from the charge delivered to the grand jury by Mr. Justice Field in this district on the 22d of August, 1872. (2d Sawyer, p. 671.)

> By a statute of the State, grand jurors of the State courts possess very great inquisitorial powers. They are required to inquire into the official misconduct of public officers of every description in their county, and are entitled to the examination of all its public records. They are bound by their oath to inquire into and presentment make of all public offenses against the law of the State committed or triable in their county of which they have or can obtain legal evidence. In order to ascertain whether or not there has been any official misconduct in any public officer they have, under the statute, authority to inspect all his books and records and subject him to a searching examination.

Additional instances might be cited of the exercise of this power, which may be said to be absolutely essential to the efficient discharge of the endless number of duties in which the public has an interest. But we submit that enough has been stated to convince the court that when the inquiry ordered is lawful, and the officer entrusted with its execution has asked a question which relates to the subject of investigation, he is entitled to the aid of the court in enforcing an answer to his question.

We cite on this subject the case of The Commonwealth v. The Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank (21 Pick., 542). By chapter 14 of the laws of Massachusetts, 1838, the governor was directed to appoint commissioners. It was provided that they should visit the banks, have free access to their vaults, books, and papers, and should make all such inquiries as might be necessary to ascertain their condition; that they might summon and examine the officers and agents of the banks in relation to the transactions and condition of the banks; and that an officer or agent who should refuse, without justifiable cause, to appear and testify when thereto required should be subject to fine and imprisonment. It was further provided by the said act that if upon examination of any bank the commissioners should be of opinion that it was insolvent, or that its condition was such as to render its further progress hazardous to the public, the commissioners might apply to a justice of the supreme court to issue an injunction to restrain such corporation, in whole or in part, from further proceeding with its business until a hearing of the corporation could be had, and that the justice should forthwith issue such process, and after a full hearing of the corporation upon the matters aforesaid might dissolve or modify the injunction or make it perpetual.

The power exercised by the legislature of Massachusetts in the case cited very far exceeds the limits which have been observed by Congress in the act of March 3, 1887. In the former act the commissioners appointed by the governor were armed with all the powers and authority which have been delegated to the present Commissioners under the United States statute; but the Massachusetts act made it the absolute duty of the court to issue a temporary injunction upon the report of the commissioners. The authority of the Commissioners under the act of March 3, 1887, is simply limited to propounding their questions; beyond that they of their own motion have no power whatever. The refusal of the witness to answer simply brings the entire proceedings before this court, and it has competent power to grant or refuse the relief prayed for by the Commissioners.

In the Massachusetts case above cited the authority of the legislature to appoint the commissioners, through the governor, to invest them with power to investigate, and to require a judicial officer to issue a temporary injunction on their report, was sustained by the court, Chief-Justice Shaw rendering the opinion. All the questions presented to this court in the case at bar were discussed in the case cited.

(1) The objects which the legislature had in view in the adoption of the measures.

(2) The means which they had adopted for accomplishing those objects.

(3) Whether in the ends proposed or in the means prescribed the legislature had transcended the powers vested in it by the Constitution or had exceeded the just limits of legislative authority.

In all these particulars the action of the legislature was sustained.

In no State have the divisions of the great departments of the government between the judiciary, the executive, and the legislative been more closely observed than in Massachusetts. Its courts have always been tenacious of their jurisdiction. And we submit that we may safely accept the decision cited as affording firm foundation for the proposition that Congress has in no manner exceeded the just limits of its power in authorizing these Commissioners to conduct this investigation and to propound the question before the court. We may also safely conclude, if the report of such Commissioners was a sufficient ground for obtaining a temporary injunction as a matter of right, that the report of the present Commissioners to this court is a sufficient ground for asking the issuance of the process of this court, if it be satisfied that the witness should have answered the question propounded to him.

POINT 5.—The question addressed to Leland Stanford relates to the matter under investigation and is within the scope of the powers of Congress.

The counsel representing the company and the witness have declined to take the objection that the question is of a criminating character. We therefore omit any discussion of this point, or of the question whether the immunity against the use of such answer in any criminal proceeding is sufficient to entitle the Commission to an answer to the question.

Some question was made as to whether, as matter of fact, the moneys covered by Mr. Stanford's vouchers had been included in the account rendered to the Government for the purpose of ascertaining the net earnings of the company. The Commissioners do not desire a decision based on this question, and therefore concede, for the purposes of this motion, that the amounts in question have not been charged as against the United States, to the end that this matter may be disposed of entirely on its merits.

That the question above propounded relates to the investigation is self-evident, for the act, in substantially the exact words of the question, directs the Commissioners to propound it.

The only question then remaining is whether this particular question is within the scope of the powers of Congress. It will not be disputed that the right to question can not extend beyond the right to investigate. The right to investigate is as to the management and the administration of the affairs of the company. Questions which have no relation to such matters, which should be prompted by idle curiosity or suggested by the desire to inflict suffering or disgrace on persons connected with the corporation solely for the purpose of gratifying a malignant feeling against them, would certainly not be within the scope of a legitimate investigation. We concede that the court has full and complete control of this question, and the right to determine absolutely whether the question relates to the investigation and is within the scope of the powers of Congress. But we submit that an interference with the rights of Congress in this direction should only be resorted to when it is made perfectly clear that the question asked is entirely beyond the scope of legitimate inquiry.

The gentleman to whom the question was propounded has been the manager of this corporation from its inception. He has controlled its affairs. He has at all times been familiar with its finances; and yet it appears from the uncontradicted averments of the petition that between the years 1870 and 1880 he has personally disbursed the sum of $733,-[illegible], which to an individual would be a large fortune, and offers no explanation of such disbursements except that they were for "expense account." Is it a sufficient answer that the amounts covered by these vouchers have not been charged to the United States in its private account with this corporation as its creditor?

It is not because of its relation as creditor that the question is put. This corporation has been endowed with great powers and with a munificent public donation. The administration of its affairs is a matter of public interest to all our citizens. If it be true that its officers have, as asserted, made a practice of corrupting legislatures, of poisoning the administration of justice, and have so prostituted the trust positions which have been confided to them for the purpose of promoting their personal advantages as stockholders of this company, surely the people from whom its franchises proceeded have a right to be informed as to the facts which have occurred. The right to ask its officers whether the rates charged by the corporation have been exorbitant is conceded. The right to inquire whether their train service has been efficient, whether proper safeguards for the public have been provided, is conceded. And yet dereliction in these matters would inflict on the community but a trivial injury as compared with that which must result if they have used the funds of the company for the purpose of corrupting the law of the land.

It seems to us too clear for argument that the question propounded to Leland Stanford is entirely within the scope of a proper investigation, that it relates directly to the subject matter, and that he should be required, by the order of this court, to answer these and other questions of similar import.

POINT 6.—The prayer of the petitioners should be granted, and an order should be entered directing the said Leland Stanford to appear before them, at a time and place to be specified, to make full answers to the questions stated in the petition, and to give evidence touching the said subject of inquiry.

And now a few comments upon some of the authorities referred to by counsel for the respondent.

Gordon v. United States (117 U. S., p. 698), does not come within the issues of the matter before the court. Careful reading will show that the statute (act of March 3, 1863, entitled "An act to amend an act to establish a court for the investigation of claims against the United States"), which was made the subject of the decision, was held not to be constitutional so far as it applied to the jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court, for the reason solely that the province of the Supreme Court under the Constitution, being purely judicial, it could act upon nothing which would not permit it to enforce its judgment by its own process. That the statute in question conferred no other power upon it than to advise the Secretary of the Treasury upon a certain matter, and then leave it for him to say whether he would act upon the opinion of the court or not.

But even in the opinion of Taney, C. J., at page 699, will be found dictum which strengthens the position of the petitioners in the case at bar, for there, says the Chief Justice: "Congress may undoubtedly establish tribunals with special powers to examine testimony and decide, in the first instance, upon the validity and justice of any claim * * * against the United States, subject to the supervision and control of Congress or a head of any of the Executive Departments."

The learned Chief Justice undoubtedly used the words "examine testimony" in the light of taking testimony, and if they have the power to take testimony, as an incident of the power they have the right to enforce the giving of the testimony. Then how are they to enforce the giving of the evidence? By punishing a refusal to testify? The Supreme Court, in Kilbourn v. Thompson, holds that they cannot punish for contempt, and a fortiori one of their agents, to wit, a commission, cannot; then what power can? The answer is, the only power in the land—the courts of the country.

The case United States v. Ferreira (13 How., U. S., 40) was based entirely upon the principles laid down in Gordon v. United States (117 U. S., 698), and involved similar questions throughout.

The treaty and acts of Congress under investigation in that case and that of United States v. Yale Todd, found in a note at page 52, the question considered was whether Congress could constitute a court of justice a commissioner to act in an advisory capacity to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Gibson v. Templeton (62 Texas, 556) was a suit brought in court which the Supreme Court held the constitution of the State did not give the courts power to determine. That under the constitution of Texas "a proceeding to contest an election is not a 'suit, complaint, or plea' within the meaning of the constitution," and that although "the legislature prescribes who shall be made parties to such a proceeding, yet when the subject-matter is such as can not be litigated, the making of parties does not make the proceeding a suit," and further that the "contest of an election, being an extra-judicial question, must be regulated by the political authority of the State." Considered apart from the constitution of Texas, such a question could have no more bearing upon the matter at bar than the Sermon on the Mount.

But were the same question before the courts of the State of California would it not be considered a judicial question purely?

Vide contest of elections in Codes of California.

Van Slyke v. Templean County Farmers' Mutual Life Insurance Company (39 Wisc., 390).—The decided question was that "the constitution of the State having vested all judicial jurisdiction in courts and justices of the peace, and provided for the election of judges of all courts, the legislature can confer no judicial jurisdiction on other officers or persons, excepting power not exceeding that of a circuit judge at chambers, on court commissioners."

Cohn v. Hoff (3 Brevard, S. C., 501) holds that when the State constitution points out and prescribes how a judge should be elected, the legislature can not prescribe a different mode or manner, and confer on the governor power of appointment of a judge when constitution requires that he be elected.

The dictum in the opinion pointing out the distinction between the powers of the judiciary under our system of government and that of the English judiciary, no one disputes.

United States v. Ritchie (17 How., 524) decided that the act of Congress, passed March 3, 1851, making provision for the appointment of a board of commissioners to settle private land claims in California was constitutional, and, further, that the board was not a court under the constitution, invested with judicial powers.

Section 7 of the act provided "That the secretary of the board shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, on the application of the law agent or district attorney of the United States, * * * to issue writs of subpœna commanding the attendance of a witness or witnesses before the board or any commissioner."

The statute being by the Supreme Court in the case last cited supra expressly held constitutional, and at the same time held not to vest judicial powers upon the board, now, under the doctrine of the case of Kilbourn v. Thompson (103 U. S.), could the board enforce the attendance of witnesses before it? As the statute does not point out the mode in that case, we say it would be accomplished in a constitutional way by applying to a court of the United States for compulsory process, as a necessary incident to the grant of power to administer oaths and take testimony.

And if the above statute had contained the language of the statute of March 3, 1887, upon the subject of applying to the courts of the United States for compulsory process, could any reasonable person doubt the power of the court applied to to compel the attendance of the witness and compel him to purge himself if contumacious? And in the absence of provisions of the nature of those contained in the last act cited, the board of land commissioners, had the statutes of California contained provisions similar to those found in section 1986 of the code of civil procedure of California, might have found adequate aid in enforcing witnesses to testify by applying to a State court.

Section 1986, Code of Civil Procedure, sub. 3, reads:

> The subpœna is issued to require attendance before * * any officer or officers empowered by the laws of the United States to take testimony; it may be issued by any judge or justice of the peace in places within their respective jurisdiction; with like power to enforce attendance, and, upon certificate of contumacy to said court, to punish contempt of their process.

Yet, says the respondent, the land commission of California could take only such evidence as a party summoned before it might, as a matter of grace, permit.

Would not such a doctrine, if urged and upheld in the early days of California, have virtually rendered this great commission absolutely powerless to accomplish the ends for which it was created?

The Supreme Court of the United States and district court of California have time and time again laid down the doctrine that the functions of the California land commission were essentially political, and not judicial, in their nature.

Yet, who then, or now, even, excepting the respondent here, would invoke the heresy that the powers of the commission, created by solemn act of Congress, and which the highest judicial power in the land has pronounced constitutional, could be haltered, obstructed—yes, virtually rendered nugatory by a witness who claims the right to give what evidence he may please to give, to withhold what he may please to withhold?

The whole argument of the company's counsel is based on a fallacy. They assert that the demand that process issue to compel a witness to answer is an encroachment on the functions of the judiciary; the fact is, that while the three great departments of Government are distinct, they are bound together by the closest ties of mutual interest and mutual duty. Each must and should aid the other. No department, no executive, no commissioner, invades the functions of the judiciary when he asks that it issue its process to compel obedience to law. In all cases the simple question is whether the act, the examination, the hearing of the claim, or the investigation, is authorized by law. In this way only can the functions of the bank examiner, the inspector of insurance, the commissioners of claims, the census officers, the grand juries, and all other officials who are charged with administrative duties, but who possess no judicial powers whatever—in this way alone can these duties be efficiently discharged.

Ex parte Vallandigham (1 Wall., 243) decided that the appellate powers of the Supreme Court as granted by the Constitution are limited and regulated by the acts of Congress, and must be exercised subject to the exceptions and regulations made by Congress, and that the above case did not come within that category; and, further, that a proceeding by court-martial "is not in law or equity within the meaning of those terms as used in the third article of the Constitution."[7351]

Burgoyne v. Board of Supervisors (5 Cal., 19) adds its voice to the threadbare theme that each of the three cardinal branches of our republican form of government, executive, legislative, judicial, is independone (1) of the others—no one can exercise the functions of the others.

People v. Sanderson (30 Cal., 160) decides that the duties of trustee of the State library properly fall within the sphere of the executive department, and that a chief-justice of the State, while such, is prohibited by the State constitution from exercising the functions and duties of trustee of the State library.

There is not the slightest shadow of a claim on the part of the petitioners at bar that the act of Congress in question (March 3, 1887) confers upon the commissioners, petitioners herein, a single judicial function. They can determine nothing, any more than could the California land commission, ubi supra. No right can be changed, created, or enforced. In fine, their functions are plainly defined, and do not encroach in the slightest degree upon any department of the United States Government, nor relate to any other than the one to which they clearly belong.

Smith v. Strother (68 Cal.).—In this case the distinction between what is a legislative and what a judicial act is clearly pointed out, and the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Thornton, finds authority for its conclusions in the language of Mr. Justice Field in the Sinking Fund case reported in 99 U. S., from which we have already quite extensively quoted, as an authority for the position of the petitioners in the matter now before the court.

By the act of the legislature of March 21, 1885, it was attempted to confer upon the supreme court legislative functions, which attempt we are quite willing to join with counsel for respondent here in condemning.

We insist, again, that whatever powers the statute of Congress of March 3, 1887, confers upon the circuit and district courts of the United States, for the purpose of enabling the purpose and intent of the whole act to be carried out, are purely judicial in their nature.

The authority conferred is to "hear and determine" in the first instance; and in the second that of "enforcing its determination, by its own process," in the very fullness and plentitude of its power in that behalf.

United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company (11 Blatch., 385).—The case, we respectfully submit, is not authority upon any legitimate inquiry arising in the case at bar.

There is no attempt here by the United States "to convert to itself the property of another, by its own declaration or its own authority;" nor any to obtain "redress for alleged fraudulent acts on the part of the directors and managers of the * * * railroad company, in breach of their duty to the shareholders."

In re Ziebold (33 Fed. Rep., 791).—The case is a false analogy to the one at bar. It grew out of an attempt by the legislature of Kansas to confer upon a county attorney authority to summon witnesses to testify before him with power to punish for contempt in case of refusal to appear.

The court, per Foster, J., held that the authority vested in the county attorney "on the mere unsworn statement of any person, and without any case pending before him, * * * to set this judicial machinery in motion, with no restriction as to whom he shall summon before him to testify, and no limitation but his own good-will as to the scope of his investigation, fortified by a power to exact answers to any questions he sees proper to ask, almost despotic in its severity," * * * is an "attempt to unite the judicial with the executive branch of civil government; and when the law-making power and the power which declares and applies, as well as that which executes and administers the law, are united and invested in one person or body, it becomes a despotism and not a constitutional government."

Is the Pacific Railroad Commission endowed with any of these judicial attributes? Are they empowered, under the act of March 3, 1887, to summon witnesses before them, "and visit upon them severe penalties" should they refuse to come or to testify, with "no limitation but their own good-will as to the scope of their investigation?" It would baffle the ingenuity of the learned counsel for respondent to find any such power in the statute.

So long as a witness summoned before the Commission proves willing to attend and give answer there is, of course, no need of compulsion; but when he proves contumacious and some compulsion is necessary, does the act empower the Commission to become the judges as to whether or not the question asked the witness is relevant to the matters under investigation as defined in the statute, and adjudging it so, to visit penalties upon him? Clearly not. The statute vests no such power or authority in the Commissioners. It defines and limits the scope of their investigation, and whether or not they keep themselves within these limitations is purely a judicial question which Congress has deferentially left to the judiciary to determine.

When, in the judgment of the Commissioners, a question is pertinent to the matter under investigation, and a witness denies it, it is made the duty of the judicial branch of the Government, upon a proper application, to look into the statute to find authority in the Commissioners to propound the question, and also to apply those other tests whereby its relevancy and competency may be determined. And when, after due deliberation upon the law and the facts, the court determines either one way or the other, it pronounces a judgment—1st, upon the statute; 2d, upon the scope of the inquiry or investigation; 3d, and from the two former, the relevancy and competency of the question propounded; and, whichever way its judgment goes, obedience must follow; if the court finds the inquiry a legitimate one, properly instituted by competent authority, and the question relevant, the witness must reply. If the judgment of the court should be otherwise, the Commissioners are equally bound to refrain from asking it; and in no conceivable sense does the court thus acting become ancillary to or act in an advisory capacity to the Commissioners.

The primary right of the Commissioners to ask a question is a right defined by the statute, but to be determined by the judiciary, and once determined, from it the corresponding duty of the witness flows as naturally as the succession of day and night.

At page 795 the learned judge used language with reference to the powers of a grand jury which, we submit, furnishes as pure an analogy of the situation of the parties concerned here as could well be devised. The language is: "Nor can a grand jury issue a subpœna for a witness or decide the competency of a question asked, or punish for a contempt. These matters rest with the court."

In principle is there a shade of difference between the powers of the Commissioners under the statute in question and those exercised by a grand jury in performing the duties devolved upon them by statute? Does a grand jury exercise judicial functions? Can it hear and determine? Can it pronounce a judgment which any person or thing in the world would be bound by?

Suppose the grand jury of the city and county of San Francisco had summoned the sheriff of the city and county before it, and had propounded to him the following question: "Mr. Sheriff, have you 'vol-willfully permitted' the escape of John Doe, a prisoner once in your custody?" And the sheriff had replied, "I decline to answer," and the jury had then applied to the court for an order to show cause upon the sheriff why he should not make the answer, would the court have heard him say, "There is no 'case' before the court? The grand jury has no right to apply to this court to aid it in compelling me to answer unless I see fit to—I am a citizen of the United States. I have thrown around me those guaranties of personal liberty and private security which have come down to all of us alike from the days of the Tudors, and for attempting to curtail which the head of a Charles rolled from the block?"

Our opinion is that before the court would incline its ear seriously to such a showing of rhetorical right it would examine the provisions of section 923 of the penal code of California, which says: "The grand jury must inquire into the condition and management of the public prisons within the county; and into the willful and corrupt misconduct in office of public officers of every description within the county," taken in connection with section 108 of the same code, which says: "Every * * * sheriff * * * who fraudulently contrives, procures, aids, connives at, or voluntarily permits the escape of any prisoner in custody is punishable, etc.," before deciding upon the relevancy of the question, and the right of the jury to propound it.

With the policy or wisdom of the legislative department of the Government in directing an investigation or inquiry this court has nothing to do.

The only question which the court will permit itself to ask is: Has the legislature directed the investigation; does it invade any constitutional right of any one to be investigated?

In conclusion we will say, that unless this power to investigate all public and quasi-public enterprises, undertakings, and institutions shall be found to exist as one of the inherent powers of a sovereign people, a power which each State legislature in the Union may invoke as well as Congress, then before the decisions of the court in this case must fall every bank commission, railroad commission, board of examiners, and national bank inspector in the land.

We respectfully submit, for the reasons given, that the prayer of the petitioners should be granted.

United States Attorney.

BRIEF OF MESSRS. McALLISTER & BERGIN FOR LELAND STANFORD.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES IN AND FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

IN THE MATTER OF

The United States Pacific Railway Commission's application to compel Leland Stanford to answer.

[Points and authorities.]

The act of Congress of July 1, 1862, created and constitutes the basis of the relation between the company and the Government, speaking of which in the United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company (91 U. S., 81), the court say:

It is true the scheme contemplated profit to individuals, for without a reasonable expectation of this capital could not be obtained, nor the requisite skill and enterprise. But this consideration does not in itself change the relation of the parties to this suit. This might have been so if the Government had incorporated a company to advance private interests, and agreed to aid on account of the supposed incidental advantages which the public would derive from the completion of the projected railway. But the primary object of the Government was to advance its own interests, and it endeavored to engage individual co-operation as a means to an end—the securing of a road which should be used for its own purposes. The obligations, therefore, which were imposed on the company incorporated to build it must depend on the true meaning of the enactment itself, viewed in the light of contemporaneous history.

The nature of this relation is more extensively considered in United States vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company (98 U. S., 613, 614, 615), and the same case in the 11th Blatch., 385, 393, 397, 399, 400, and 401. Upon examination made in this case of the relations of the companies named in the act to the Government of the United States the court there held, that the relation thereby created was that of debtor and creditor, and that in respect to the property, in which the Government had no beneficial interest, that is to say, in respect to all the property and earnings of the company outside of the percentage of net earnings reserved to the Government, the companies occupied the relation of private proprietors, with whose proprietory interests and their control the Government can exercise no other power of interference than it can in respect to the proprietorship, control, and management of the property of any other private person. The power reserved to alter or modify the act of Congress is coupled with the obligation to exercise it with due regard to the rights of the company. Under exercise of this power the legal rights of the companies are reserved, and they remain as fully entitled to the protection of the law as the rights of any other private individual. The mere fact that the companies are artificial creations of law, called into existence by the consent of the parties co-operating in the organization of corporations, does not leave either the companies, the artificial creations, or the beneficiaries, of which they are simply the representatives, destitute of the benefit of the protection of all the constitutional guaranties assured to all persons for the protection of life, liberty and property. (Ex parte Parrott, 6 Sawy., 374; County of San Mateo v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 8 Sawy., 264-5; Santa Clara Co. v. S. P. R. R. Co., 118 U. S., 396.)

Among those guaranties is, that no man shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation. Of the extent to which this constitutional guaranty assures protection to private property an exhaustive discussion will be found in the case of Wynehamer v. The People (13 N. Y., 383), the court in that case declaring that "the true interpretation of these constitutional phrases is, that where rights are acquired by the citizen under the existing law there is no power in any branch of the Government to take them away; but where they are held contrary to the existing law, or are forfeited by its violation, then they may be taken from him—not by an act of the legislature, but in the due administration of the law itself, before the judicial tribunals of the State. The cause or occasion for depriving the citizen of his supposed rights must be found in the law as it is, or, at least, it can not be created by a legislative act which aims at their destruction. Where rights of property are admitted to exist, the legislature can not say they shall exist no longer; nor will it make any difference although a process and a tribunal are appointed to execute the sentence. If this is the "law of the land" and "due process of law" within the meaning of the Constitution, then the legislature is omnipotent. It may, under the same interpretation, pass a law to take away liberty or life without a pre-existing cause, appointing judicial and executive agencies to execute its will. Property is placed by the Constitution in the same category with liberty and life." * * *

We are brought, then, directly to the question, does the "act for the prevention of intemperance, pauperism, and crime," in a just constitutional sense, deprive the citizens of this State of their property in intoxicating liquors? We have already seen that this species of property is just as inviolable as any other. That by the operation of this law its commercial value is annihilated; that it can not be sold; that it is unlawful to keep it; that all legal protection is withdrawn from it; and that it becomes a public nuisance. Is the owner "deprived" of it within the fair meaning of the Constitution? I bring the act to this particular test, because if it can stand with this clause of the Constitution it can with every other.

Now, I can form no notion of property which does not include the essential characteristics and attributes with which it is clothed by the laws of the society. In a state of nature property did not exist at all. "Every man might then take to his use what he pleased, and retain it if he had sufficient power; but when men entered into society, and industry, arts, and sciences were introduced, property was gained by various means, for the securing whereof proper laws were ordained" (Tomlin's Law Dic., Property, 2 Bl. Com., 34.) Material objects, therefore, are property in the true sense, because they are impressed by the laws and usages of society with certain qualities, among which are, fundamentally, the right of the occupant or owner to use and enjoy them exclusively, and his absolute power to sell and dispose of them; and as property consists in the artificial impression of these qualities upon material things, so whatever removes the impression destroys the notion of property, although the things themselves may remain physically untouched.

Nor can I find any definition of property which does not include the power of disposition and sale, as well as the right of private use and enjoyment.

The statute under consideration, without reference to its provisions for the seizure and physical destruction of intoxicating liquors, by force of its prohibitions alone, sweeps them from the commerce of the State, and thus annihilates the quality of sale, which makes them valuable to the owner. This is destructive of the notion of property. I need, perhaps, take no further notice of their qualified vendibility for the Sacrament and the other special uses named in the act. These are only the occasional and incidental uses of the article. It is the general and primary use which is aimed at. It is the mass of property which is struck down; and the possible conservation of an extremely insignificant portion can not change the character of the law.

The power of disposition thus declared inherent in property and secured by the Constitution not merely imports right of the owner to sell and dispose of it, but to sell and dispose of it at pleasure, and when and where and how he pleases, subject only not to do so in contravention of the general laws of the land. It excludes and is incompatible with the idea that the owner in exercising such power of disposition can in any wise be called to account therefor, or be compelled to disclose the mode and manner in which he has seen fit to exercise this his legal and constitutional right. And it is upon this principle of the inviolability of private property and private ownership that it is not only thus secured by this provision of the Constitution, but the owner is protected against unreasonable searches and seizures. (Boyd vs. U. S., 116 U. S., 622, 629, 630, 631, 632, 634; Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, 376; In re Ziebold, 23 Fed. Rep., 793.)

Not only, therefore, is property thus secured under State and Federal Constitution, but the person of the owner is equally secured. To own or hold property without personal liberty would be but a poor boon. Hence it is that the Constitution declares that no man shall be deprived of liberty any more than property or life, and the liberty thus secured guaranties to the citizen full exercise of all his mental and physical faculties free from governmental interference, save and except in so far as the same may occur in the legitimate and orderly course of the administration of the general laws of the land.

Mr. Mills, in his work on Liberty, page 24, clearly and distinctly declares the true principle underlying the legitimate province of governmental interference with the liberty of the citizen. The learned author says:

The only part of the conduct of any one for which he is amenable to society is that which concern others. In the part which merely concerns himself his independence is of right absolute. Over himself, over his own body and mind, the individual is sovereign.

What kind of liberty is that which leaves the citizen liable to inquisitorial examination at the pleasure of the legislature? What kind of a constitutional guaranty is that which would thus expose him to the whims and caprices of any one department of the Government? If in respect to matters not arising in the course of judicial proceedings he may be compelled to disclose his private affairs and make known to the world that which lies treasured in his own bosom, where are the vaunted guaranties of freedom? In respect to such subjects, in framing the organic law, the people have not vested the legislature, so to speak, with jurisdiction over such matters, and they are as incompetent to invade or affect the same as would be a judicial tribunal that should undertake to pass judgment in a matter entirely without its jurisdiction.

No star chamber can ever be formed under the constitution of the State of California or the United States. (First Blackstone, 231; 4th Blackstone, 266, 310, 429, 433, 437; 2nd Hume's Hist. of Eng., 592; 4th Hume's Hist. of Eng., 200, 491, 495, 497, 498, 499; 5th Hume, pages 18 and 39; 1st Macaulay's Hist. of Eng., p. 98; 1st Hallam's Constitutional History, 65 to 67; 2nd Hallam's Constitutional History, pages 39 and 317; Loan Association vs. Topeka, 20 Wallace, 662; Ex parte Parrott, 6 Sawy., 374; Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wallace, 76, 90, 105, 113, 116.)

In the language of Justice Swayne in the Slaughter House cases (16 Wall., 127):

Life is the gift of God, and the right to preserve it is the most sacred of the rights of man. Liberty is freedom from all restraints but such as are justly imposed by law. Beyond that line lies the domain of usurpation and tyranny.

Interference within this realm is beyond the pale of constitutional legislation.

The court accordingly, in Kilbourn vs. Thompson (103 U. S. 190), declared:

Whether the power of punishment in either House by fine or imprisonment goes beyond this or not, we are sure that no person can be punished for contumacy as a witness before either House, unless his testimony is required in a matter into which that House has jurisdiction to inquire, and we feel equally sure that neither of these bodies possesses the general power of making inquiry into the private affairs of the citizen.

Page 193.

If the investigation which the committee was directed to make was judicial in its character, and could only be properly and successfully made by a court of justice, and if it related to a matter wherein relief or redress could be had only by a judicial proceeding, we do not, after what has been said, deem it necessary to discuss the proposition that the power attempted to be exercised was one confided by the Constitution to the judicial and not to the legislative department of the Government. We think it equally clear that the power asserted is judicial and not legislative.

The preamble to the resolution recites that the Government of the United States is a creditor of Jay Cook & Co., then in bankruptcy in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

If the United States is a creditor of any citizen, or of any one else, on whom process can be served, the usual, the only legal mode of enforcing payment of the debt is by a resort to a court of justice. For this purpose, among others, Congress has created courts in the United States, and officers have been appointed to prosecute the pleas of the Government in these courts. * * *

Page 194:

If the settlement to which the preamble refers as the principal reason why the courts are rendered powerless was obtained by fraud, or was without authority, or for any conceivable reason could be set aside or avoided, it should be done by some appropriate proceeding in the court which had the whole matter before it, and which had all the power in that case proper to be intrusted to anybody, and not by Congress or any power to be conferred on a committee of one of the two houses.

The resolution adopted as a sequence of this preamble contains no hint of any intention of final action by Congress on the subject. In all the argument on the case no suggestion has been made of what the House of Representatives or the Congress could have done in the way of remedying the wrong or securing the creditors of Jay Cook & Co., or even the United States. Was it to be simply a fruitless investigation into the personal affairs of individuals? If so, the House of Representatives had no power or authority in the matter more than any other equal number of gentlemen interested for the Government of their country. By "fruitless," we mean that it could result in no valid legislation on the subject to which the inquiry referred. (People vs. Keeler, 99 N. Y., 485.)

Not only is the inquiry inadmissible for these reasons, but on the further ground that the act of Congress itself clearly shows intention to extend the investigation to matters involving liability to criminal prosecution.

By the terms of the act evidence given on such investigation is declared inadmissible in any criminal suit or proceeding, thus clearly and unmistakably showing that the subject matter of the investigation designed was intended to embrace matters which might render the parties amenable to criminal prosecution. It is true that the inquiry is thus attempted to be made legal by excluding incriminating testimony that may be given in the course of the investigation from admission in any criminal prosecution, and it is no less true that there are some decisions undertaking to vindicate and uphold this species of legislation. Its correctness, however, has never been definitely determined by the highest court of the land, and is open to question upon just principles to unanswerable argument. (State vs. Girvin, 13 Lea, Tenn., 60.)

The line of reasoning upon which these authorities proceed is that the design of the constitutional provision is to protect the citizen against being compelled to bear witness against himself in any criminal prosecution, and that as that is the end designed to be secured by this constitutional provision, if such end be accomplished otherwise through legislation, it is competent for the legislature to declare that the parties shall be compelled to testify.

The vice of the argument lies in the assumption that it is competent for the legislature to compel the citizen to barter away his constitutional guaranty for this statutory privilege. There is no power in the Government to deprive the citizen of the benefit of any guaranty secured to him by the Constitution, and it is wholly illogical and unwarrantable to say that because the supposed end designed to be secured by the constitutional guaranty is accomplished by legislation, therefore may the legislature deny to him the benefit of the constitutional guaranty itself. Where, we would ask, is the warrant of the Constitution authorizing the legislature to set aside any of these provisions or to deny the citizen any immunity thereby secured to him? Is it not the veriest paltering with the greatest rights known to law, and secured to the citizen, to hold that he can be compelled to thus barter away his constitutional rights? Of course it is an entirely different question as to whether or not the legislature may not extend immunity from punishment to the person who may see fit to give evidence incriminating himself. That is a matter dependent upon different principles, not having any just application to the principle involved in this class of legislation.

Of course it must be manifest to the court that while the terms of the act of Congress might in this instance secure a party giving evidence from having the same used against him in any criminal prosecution instituted in a Federal court, it can not protect him against such consequences in a State tribunal, nor can it shield him from the obloquy and odium attached to the giving of such testimony. Whatever may be the validity of this provision of the act of Congress in the tribunals of the United States, it can have no operation in the State forum. Thus, under the provisions of this act, may a party be compelled to give evidence of an incriminating character, which not only may be used against him in State tribunals, but which will necessarily tend to degrade him and expose him to obloquy and odium.

Suggestion was made on the argument that declination to answer should have been upon this particular ground. But it is obvious that any such claim necessarily implies commission of that, guilt of which is entirely denied, and to make claim of privilege would necessarily import the very thing the party denies, a right to inquire into which is most distinctly and unequivocally challenged.

The constitutional right of a citizen should not be thus confounded with a mere rule of procedure properly obtaining in the ordinary course of procedure in the trial of criminal and civil cases. The rule itself in this respect is open to just doubt, and in our humble judgment is founded in error.

The general rule of which it has been made a part is one founded in experience and convenience, and having a distinct and intelligible purpose. The object of the rule is that a judge or court may be informed of the grounds upon which immunity is claimed or a ruling is asked, so that the court may, if so advised, correct its ruling accordingly. It is thus designed alike for the benefit of the court and the benefit of the adverse party. When informed of the grounds of the claim the adverse party may be able to supply proof by other competent evidence. The purpose of the rule is to place the court and the adverse party fully in possession of the facts, so that all may intelligently act accordingly. But where the objection is one that can not be changed by mere form of proof, this rule does not obtain. As correctly observed in Nightingale vs. Scannel (18 Cal., 323):

> The defendant claims that the evidence was not admissible for any purpose; that a statement of the ground upon which it was objected to would have been superfluous and was not therefore required. This view is based upon what appears to us to be the proper rule in such cases, and we see no good result to be accomplished in holding parties to a more strict and rigid practice in these matters.

Where, under the Constitution and the laws therefore, the party is entitled to the immunity claimed, it would seem that he should not be compelled to make the claim thereto in such a manner as to expose him to the odium attached to the mere assertion of his legal and constitutional right. The rule, however, has no application to the case now before the court. The question is here one of constitutional power. It is to compel the answers, and the court is here now fully and distinctly advised of all the grounds of objection interposed to answering.

To hold, therefore, that the rule had any application in the present instance would be to merely stick in the bark. Not only is the investigation attempted to be made unauthorized under the Constitution and laws, but this court, under the Constitution and the laws, has not jurisdiction to extend to it the aid invoked.

The United States courts have consistently declared from the earliest date that they can only exercise judicial powers.

The authorities on the point are: Hayburn's Case (2d Dall., 409); United States vs. Farréira (13 How., 40–47); U. S. vs. Todd (13 How., U. S., 52); United States vs. Ritchie (17 How., U. S., 533, 534); Ex parte Vallandigham (1 Wall., 252); Gordon vs. United States (2 Wall., 561; 117 U. S., 698); Burgoyne vs. Board of Supervisors (5 Cal., 19); Exline vs. Smith (Ibid.); Dixie vs. Hulburt (Ibid., 343); People vs. Sanderson (9 Cal., 166); Smith vs. Strother (68 Cal., 197); Gibbs vs. Templeton (62 Tex., 556); San Slyke vs. Trempeleau County Farmers' Insurance Company (29 Wisc., 392); Cohen vs. Hoff (3 Brevard, S. C., 501).

These cases very clearly show what constitutes judicial power, and that where the action of the court is not followed by judgment determinative of the rights of the parties litigant, it is not in any proper or legal sense the exercise of judicial power, and therefore can not be vested in any of the courts of the United States.

Neither the action of the commissioner of this court upon the present application partakes of this character.

Neither the action of the one nor the other is in any wise determinative of the rights of any person, and therefore it is not of a character jurisdiction of which Congress can constitutionally vest in this court.

Upon these principles we therefore respectfully submit that the prayer of the petition be denied.

Respectfully submitted.

McALLISTER & BERGIN,
Counsel for Leland Stanford.

BRIEF OF L. D. McKISICK, ESQ., FOR LELAND STANFORD.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

Before the honorable Stephen J. Field, one of the Justices of the Supreme Court; honorable Lorenzo Sawyer, judge of the circuit court; Honorable Ogden Hoffman, judge of the district court for the northern district of California; and the honorable George M. Sabin, judge of the district court for the district of Nevada. In the matter of the application of the Pacific Railway Commission for an order to compel Leland Stanford to answer certain questions propounded to him by the Commissioners while prosecuting their inquiries under the act of March 3, 1887.

I.

The provision of the act of March 3, 1887, creating the Commission, which authorizes one or more of the Commissioners to invoke the aid of the circuit or district court of the United States to assist them in compelling a witness to attend, and to answer questions, is a species of legislation so novel, that I have been wholly unable to find any judicial decision upon that or any analogous legislation.

The court is asked to make an order (not to render judgment or decree) compelling a citizen to answer questions propounded to him by a political agent of the legislative and executive departments of the government, over which it has no jurisdiction, in a matter in which it has and can have no concern.

The proceeding is inaugurated for the purpose of invoking the aid of the court, and to procure an order which, if not complied with, may result in a further order of the court to punish a citizen for no act done, or omitted to be done, in a judicial proceeding pending in court, but for acts done, or offenses alleged to have been committed, against the political department out of court.

Undoubtedly, either House of Congress may appoint committees of its members, and authorize them to make inquiries, and report the result of those inquiries to the House. So also Congress may enact a law, with the approval of the President, creating a commission, and authorize it to inquire into matters of public concern for the information of Congress. But can Congress confer power upon such committee or commission to invade the private rights of the citizen, or institute or initiate hostile proceedings against him, and, if resisted, fine and imprison him; in other words, deprive him of his property and of his liberty? If such power exists, the life, liberty, and property of the citizen are subject to the mere edict of Congress. In my opinion, no warrant for such power can be found in the Constitution of the United States nor in the law of the land.

Its attempted exercise is in direct conflict with the provisions of the fourth and fifth amendments of the Constitution.

I am not discussing the power of Congress to punish by fine or imprisonment for a breach of its privileges where the offender is the aggressor, but a case in which a committee or commission has instituted or initiated hostile proceedings against the citizen, and seeks to deprive him of his liberty and property without other warrant or authority than an act imposing upon it a mere duty to inquire and report.

In Kilbourn vs. Thompson (103 U. S., 168) the Supreme Court decided that the committee was appointed to investigate a subject not within the power of the House to investigate, and the action of the committee was therefore ultra vires and no defense. So that it is clear that these committees or commissions are not above the law. If they can become the aggressors in making inquiries, and institute proceedings resulting in depriving the citizen of his liberty or property, nothing could be easier than for Congress to become a despotism.

The fourth and fifth amendments are as follows:

FOURTH AMENDMENT.

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

FIFTH AMENDMENT.

No person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

Believing, as I do, that the questions propounded by the Commission to the witness violate the letter and spirit of those amendments as certainly and as clearly as the order made on Boyd did, which will be found reported in 116 U. S., 607, in my opinion the court will discharge the rule, on the ground that neither the Congress nor the Commission can constitutionally require them to be answered.

II.

Is the proceeding before the court a judicial proceeding, and if judicial, is it one of which the courts of the United States can take cognizance?

The provision of the act under which the petition was filed is as follows:

Any of the circuit or district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, issue an order requiring any such person to appear before said Commissioners, or either of them, as the case may be, and produce books and papers, if so ordered, and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

The jurisdiction of a court to compel the attendance of a witness is merely ancillary.

In 1st Greenleaf on Evidence (section 309), in treating of the attendance of witnesses, it is said:

And first, in regard to the method of procuring the attendance of witnesses, it is to be observed that every court having power definitely to hear and determine any suit, has by common law inherent power to call for all adequate proofs of the facts in controversy, and to that end to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses before it.

In Rapalje's Laws of Witnesses (section 301) the same doctrine is laid down. I find no trace of any authority or jurisdiction in the courts to issue a subpœna, or to make an order requiring a witness to attend before some other court, or at some other place, to answer questions in a suit or controversy of which the court has no power definitely to hear and determine, with the exception of letters rogatory, and the statutory provisions providing for the examination of witnesses before commissioners appointed by a court of some other State or a foreign country, which provisions are but a substitute for letters rogatory. The jurisdiction in such cases rests upon the principle of international comity.

This whole subject is explained in 1st Greenleaf (14th edition, section 320, and note). But in those cases there is always a suit pending in the court out of which the letters or the commissions issue.

In my opinion the order asked for in this proceeding is in no sense judicial. Congress could just as well have authorized the Commission to invoke the aid of the United States marshal, and commanded him to seize the contumacious witness and carry him before the Commission and compel him to answer, or confine him in jail during the pleasure of the Commissioners.

The fact that Congress has attempted to impose this duty upon the courts does not make it judicial; the courts determine the question.

In 2d Story on the Constitution (sec. 1777) it is said:

> The functions of the judges of the courts of the United States are strictly and exclusively judicial. They can not, therefore, be called upon to advise the President in any executive measure, or to give extra-judicial interpretation of law, or to act as commissioners in cases of pensions, or other like proceedings.

In support of the rule there stated he cites 5 Marshall's Life of Washington (ch. 6, pp. 433–441); Sergeant on Const. (ch. 29, p. 363); Marbury vs. Madison (1 Cranch, 171); Dewherst v. Coalthart (3 Dall. R., 409); Hayburn's Case (2 Dall. R., 409–410, and note); and to those may be added United States vs. Ferreira (13 Howard, p. 40, and note); Gordon vs. United States (117 U. S., 697).

The investigation and inquiry authorized by the act creating this Commission are purely political, and it is the settled doctrine of the Supreme Court that in such cases the judicial department of the Goverment will not interfere. (Luther vs. Bordon, 7 Howard p. 1; State of Georgia vs. Stanton, 6 Wall., 50; Mississippi vs. Johnson, 4 Wall., 475.)

In Georgia vs. Stanton the decision of the court dismissing the bill is put upon the sole ground of want of jurisdiction, because the questions involved were purely political.

III.

But if the proceedings now before the court be judicial, does it fall within the judicial power of the courts of the United States? Courts of the United States are not courts of inferior jurisdiction, but are courts of limited jurisdiction, and consequently the jurisdiction of the court must always be shown on the record, and depends upon two questions:

First. Has Congress extended the jurisdiction of the court over the subject matter, or over the parties?

Second. Is the act constitutional?

First, as the provisions of the Constitution.

The first section of the third article of the Constitution of the United States provides that—

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish.

And the second section of the third article provides that—

The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

Judicial power means that power with which courts are clothed for the purpose of the trial and determination of causes. (United States vs. Arredondo, 6 Peters, 691.)

It is not sufficient to bring a matter under the judicial power that it involves the exercise of judgment upon law and facts. (United States vs. Ferreira, 13 Howard, 40.)

Mr. Marshall, in his great speech in the House of Representatives on the Robins resolutions, defined the judicial power of the United States, as reported in the appendix to 5 Wheaton, pp. 16 and 17, in the following language:

The gentleman from New York had relied upon the second section of the third article of the Constitution, which enumerates the cases to which the judicial power of the United States extends, as expressly including that now under consideration. Before he examined that section it would not be improper to notice a very material misstatement of it, made in the resolutions offered by the gentleman from New York. By the Constitution the judicial power of the United States is extended to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States; but the resolutions declare the judicial power to extend to all questions arising under the Constitution, treaties, and laws of the United States. The difference between the Constitution and the resolutions was material and apparent. A case in law or equity was a term well understood and of limited signification. It was a controversy between parties which had taken a shape for judicial decision. If the judicial power extended to every question under the Constitution, it would involve almost every subject proper for legislative discussion and decision; if to every question under the laws and treaties of the United States, it would involve almost every subject on which the executive could act. The division of power which the gentleman had stated could exist no longer, and the other departments would be swallowed up by the judiciary. But it was apparent that the resolutions had essentially misrepresented the Constitution. He did not charge the gentleman from New York with intentional misrepresentation; he would not attribute to him such artifice in any case, much less in a case where detection was so easy and so certain. Yet this substantial departure from the Constitution in resolutions affecting substantially to unite it, was not less worthy of remark for being unintentional. It manifested the course of reasoning by which the gentleman had himself been misled and his judgment betrayed into the opinions those resolutions expressed.

By extending the judicial power to all cases in law and equity the Constitution had never been understood to confer on that department any political power whatever. To come within this description a question must assume a legal form for forensic litigation and judicial decision. There must be parties to come into court who can be reached by its process and bound by its power; whose rights admit of ultimate decision by a tribunal to which they are bound to submit.

And in Osborn vs. U. S. Bank (9 Wheaton, on p. 819) he said substantially the same thing. And in 2 Story on the Constitution (sec. 1646) the same definition of the words "case" and "controversies" is given. In the Mayor vs. Cooper (6 Wall., on p. 252), Mr. Justice Swayne, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

As regards all courts of the United States inferior to this tribunal two things are necessary to create jurisdiction, whether original or appellate. The Constitution must have given to the court the capacity to take it, and an act of Congress must have supplied it. Their concurrence is necessary to vest it.

Although this Pacific Railway Commission has come into this court and invoked its aid, they have not brought the United States with them, neither have they brought into court the Central Pacific Railroad Company. In Postmaster-General vs. Early (12 Wheaton R., 136-149) it was decided that the United States were not parties to the action, although the suit solely regarded their interests. So that it appears clear that we have neither a case nor a controversy. There are no parties, no subject matter about which there is a controversy, within the jurisdiction of the court, consequently there is no jurisdiction, for that means the power to hear and determine the subject matter in controversy between parties to a suit. (Rhode Island vs. Massachusetts, 12 Peters, 657.)

Bouvier says the word controversy means a dispute arising between two or more persons; controversy, says the Supreme Court in Chisholm vs. Georgia (2 Dall., 419), is a civil and not a criminal proceeding.

This argument must not be understood to deny jurisdiction to the circuit and district courts in all cases where there are not parties plaintiff and defendant. There are cases in which the court has jurisdiction in ex parte cases, notably in habeas corpus cases; but it must be remembered that the writ of habeas corpus is a constitutional writ, and the right to apply for it is a constitutional right; but after all it is never applied for until after there has been a case or a controversy in which the party applying was in some way deprived of his liberty. That was so in Fisk's case (113 U. S., 713). He was sued in the supreme court of the State of New York. Under a statute of that State, upon the application of the plaintiff in the action, the court made an order requiring him to go before a commissioner to be examined before issue or trial; he moved to vacate the order; the motion was denied and he appealed; the court of appeals affirmed the order; in the meantime he removed the case into the United States circuit court; that court made an order directing him to obey the order made in the cause by the State court before removal, and also made an order of its own, requiring him to go before the commissioner and be examined; he refused to obey both orders, and was thereupon fined and imprisoned; he applied to the Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted, upon the ground that after the case was removed into the circuit court, he was not bound to obey the order of the State court, and that the circuit court had no jurisdiction to make the order which it did.

I call the attention of the court to that case, for the reason that if the court shall make the order asked for here, it will be found to be very instructive.

IV.

As to the questions asked the witness by the commission: Having argued that subject fully at the bar, I shall only call the attention of the court to the authorities. A witness cannot be compelled to answer a question tending to disgrace him, or to degrade his moral character, or render him infamous, or subject him to a criminal prosecution, or to a suit for penalties, or to litigation of any kind. The scope of the inquiry authorized by the act under which the commission is proceeding is broad enough to cover nearly every one of the enumerated privileges.

The present question relates to expenditures of money to influence legislation. Section 5450 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides that—

> Every person who promises, offers, gives, or causes or procures to be promised or given any money or other thing of value, or makes or tenders any contract, etc., to any member of either house of Congress, with intent to influence his vote or decision, etc., shall be fined not more than three times the amount given, or promised, etc., and shall be moreover imprisoned not more than three years.

The penal code of California, section 85, provides that—

Every person who gives or offers to give a bribe to any member of the legislature, etc., to influence a member, etc., is punishable by imprisonment in the State prison not less than three nor more than ten years.

In addition to the above, sections 504, 560, and 563, relating to corporations, make many of the matters sought to be inquired into felonies and misdemeanors. I will go no further into these matters, believing as I do that the rule will be discharged; and I hope that your honors may not only discharge the rule, but that you will justify Senator Stanford for declining to answer the questions propounded to him, as Lord Kenyon did the witness in Milman vs. Tucker (2 Peak, N. P. C., 222-223), when he told the witness, on his being asked by Erskine whether he had not been convicted of forging coalmeters' certificates, that he need not answer; and told the jury that the witness (having availed himself of the privilege) was not thereby at all discredited; and said he, himself, should, had he been asked such a question, have refused to give an answer, for the sake of the justice of the country, and to prevent such an examination. (2 Phillips on Evidence, Note, p. 948.)

I append the argument made at the bar to these points, and I respectfully submit that the rule to show cause should be discharged.

L. D. McKISICK,
Of Counsel for Respondent.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

IN THE MATTER OF THE

Application of the United States Pacific Railway Commission for an order to compel Leland Stanford to make answer to certain questions to him by it.

WEDNESDAY, August 17, 1887.—2 o'clock p. m.

ARGUMENT OF L. D. M'KISICK.

If your honors please, my colleague presented the respondent's answer to show cause so fully this morning, that I shall not trouble your honors very long in adding just a few words to what he said, and entirely in consonance with what he did say, but I will present some views which I have in a rather different aspect.

Now, as to the power of Congress to appoint a commission to investigate matters in which Congress may feel that it now has or will hereafter have an interest, in view of what should be the policy of the Government in its legislation, I entirely agree with all that has been said. It is unlimited. But when it comes to the exercise of the power of that commission, whether it be joint by the Senate and the House, or whether it be separate by the Senate or by the House, if there should arise a question which involves the rights of a citizen we have a right to inquire into the questions involved, both in respect to the power of Congress to appoint the commission as to the particular subject, and also with regard to the manner in which the commission shall exercise the powers which have been conferred upon it.

This proceeding before your honors—and I do not say before this court purposely, because I will argue that it is not a proceeding in court all—but this proceeding before your honors arose in this way. The United States district attorney comes here and presents to your honors, or to one of your honors, an application which is styled—and I particularly call the attention of the court to this, because I shall endeavor to show that there is something in it—it is in the matter of the application of the Pacific Railway Commission. Application for an order to require Leland Stanford to make answer to certain questions put to him by it, and it is the petition of Robert E. Pattison, E. Ellery Anderson, and David T. Littler, commissioners appointed under an act of Congress entitled "an act authorizing the investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of railroads which have received aid from the United States, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1887." Now, that is, so far as we have in these proceedings, the title of this matter. This Railroad Commission, this Pacific Railway Commission, as it styles itself, and very properly too, is nothing more than an agent of the political department of the Government. It is an agent appointed by the Congress to make certain inquiries. It has no judicial functions whatever; otherwise, it would not be here before your honors. But it is clothed with certain powers, and certain duties have been imposed upon it; and I have no doubt it is trying faithfully to execute the powers and to perform those duties. When it has executed the powers which Congress has conferred upon it, its duty will then be to report to the President of the United States the results of its examinations and inquiries, and through the President of the United States to Congress; because the act makes it the duty of the President to submit to the Congress the report of the Commissioners, and the evidence, with such suggestions as he may deem proper. That is what this Commission is—a political agent of the Government, clothed with these powers, and charged with these duties. It comes here to the city of San Francisco, to the office of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, which is one of the roads which received bonded aid, as we may call it, from the Government, limited by the act to an investigation into the affairs of those railroad corporations which have received aid in bonds from the Government. That is the extent of its power. Whether it has gone beyond that or not is not now for us to discuss; but while engaged in the performance of its duties (and we will assume, and it is proper and right to assume for the Commissioners, and proper and right to assume for the Congress, in the first place, that the Congress intends no wrong to anybody; and in the second place, that the Commissioners intend no wrong to anybody, but they are attempting to discharge their duties), and that act says that in performance of their duties they shall have power to call before them persons and examine those persons as witnesses; they shall have power to send for papers and look into the various matters that are disclosed by those papers. If it shall become necessary, they may invoke the aid of any of the courts of the United States where they may be then in session, to have subpœnas to call witnesses before them; or if a witness while being examined should decline to answer questions, or in the language of the act, should become contumacious, which as lawyers we understand, then they may invoke the aid of the court to compel the witness to answer the questions. It is because this petition alleges that the respondent here became contumacious, in the technical sense, and declined to answer certain questions, that they come here now, and invoke the aid of the court—I will say of the courts of the United States—to compel that witness to answer those questions. Now, I say that at the threshold lies a very grave question, and I want to call your honors' attention the fact that there is no controversy between the United States and the Central Pacific Railroad Company at all. The act of Congress of the 3d of March, 1887, does not pretend that there is any controversy between the United States and the Central Pacific Railroad Company. There is no party here, either in law or in equity. There is no suit here, either at law or in equity, between the United States and the Central Pacific Railroad Company. There is no controversy here between the United States and the Central Pacific Railroad Company. But these gentlemen who have been appointed on this Commission, in the discharge of their duty, have found it necessary to appeal to that particular clause of the act of Congress which authorizes them to invoke the aid of the court.

Now, when they come into this court, they must come into it under the Constitution and the laws of the United States, because no man can come here and invoke the aid of the circuit court, or the district court of the United States, unless he can show authority from the Constitution, and under the Constitution, and an act of Congress, which authorizes him to do so.

Now, the question is, "Is this a judicial proceeding?" The question is "Has the court any jurisdiction under the Constitution of the United States, or the acts of Congress, to lend its aid to this Commission to compel this respondent to answer the question?" I say, if the honorable court please, or if your honors please, rather, that nothing of the kind can be found either in the Constitution of the United States, or in any statute of Congress passed in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States; and I say that, if the honorable court please, upon my reading of the Constitution. And while I am not going to detain your honors very long, I want, simply because it is in the line of duty, as I think, to state propositions that are very familiar to your honors.

The first section of the third article of the Constitution of the United States provides that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Constitution does not define judicial power, nor does it define courts; but this Constitution was framed by gentlemen who were perfectly familiar with the common law; it was framed under the common law, as we might say; because we have in it these sections that the right of trial in criminal cases shall be by jury, and in civil cases, where the matter in controversy is more than $20, by jury. The Constitution does not define what a jury is, but we all know that a jury at common law and the jury that is meant by this Constitution consists of twelve men; and we know what the judicial power means, although the Constitution does not define it, but it has been defined by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Constitution defines the limits of the judicial power, but Congress prescribes how much of it is to be exercised by the Federal courts. Judicial power means that power with which courts are clothed for the purpose of the trial and determination of causes; the power conferred to render a judgment or decree; that is judicial power. Now, the second section of the third article provides how far this judicial power shall extend. And in that section it is provided:

> The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their direction; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.

The Constitution does not define the word "case," but we understand what that means. It is a suit either at law or in equity, where there are parties plaintiff, complainant; parties defendant, respondent. There must be a case under these clauses of the second section of the third article, to which the jurisdiction extends. Furthermore, it extends to controversies to which the United States shall be a party. I call the attention of your honors to the fact that the United States is no party here. It extends to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State or the citizens thereof and foreign citizens or subjects. Now this judicial power, which the Constitution says shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish, extends to these persons and to these subject matters no further, and Congress can not extend it any further, if your honors please; but Congress may say how much of it shall be exercised, and that is the great distinction. The Congress may say that the circuit courts of the United States shall exercise so much of this power as it chooses it may exercise; and only on the 3d of March, 1887, if your honors please, the jurisdiction of the circuit court was very much restricted. Congress had a right to do that, because the decisions from the time that the Constitution was ordained and established have been that the Congress may confer as much of this jurisdiction which is vested in the courts, or which may be vested in the courts, or to which the judicial power may extend, as it please; but the courts have as continuously and as frequently said, whenever it became necessary for them to say so, that Congress can not go beyond what the Constitution has said. Now I say, if the honorable court please, or if your honors please, that before you can exercise any jurisdiction at all, there must be a suit at law or in equity, or a controversy. We have nothing of the kind here, and I believe you will agree with us when your honors come to think of this, with the authorities before you which my friend has cited—and the cases run all through them—commencing with Hayburn's case. That was the old pension case, where the judges were authorized by the act of Congress to inquire into the various applications laid before them by persons who claimed that they were entitled to pensions. That case is so familiar to the court that I won't refer to it; but the judges all differed; that is, they did not agree as to whether it was a judicial power or whether they were to act as commissioners, and some of them acted as commissioners, and some of them allowed Todd's pension at New Haven, Conn., and the pension was paid to him; but the question still remained unsettled by the conflicting opinions of the various judges. The United States after having paid that pension sued to recover it back, and the question was whether or not the act under which these judicial officers had passed upon it was constitutional. If it was, then the pension was rightly paid. If not, the pension was wrongfully paid, and the United States Government had the right to recover it back. The court held in the Todd case that the act conferring these powers upon the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States was unconstitutional, and that the judicial power was improperly exercised in allowing the pension, and the Government recovered a verdict against Todd.

Mr. Justice FIELD. What volume is that reported in?

Mr. MCKISICK. That is reported in the note to the case of Ferriera, in 13th How. The case itself was never reported, but the Chief Justice looked it up. It is in the note to the case in 13th How.

Mr. Justice FIELD. He refers to that in his opinion.

Mr. MCKISICK. Yes, he refers to it in his opinion, and also refers to the

...ial case, and tells you where you can find the opinion of all the ... upon that question.

Mr. Justice FIELD. Does Judge Taney, in that Hayburn case, lay ... the doctrine that no judicial power can be exercised except in a ...?

Mr. MCKISICK. No, sir; because it was not necessary for him to de... that. He states this: He refers to all these cases, and says that ... judicial power which is conferred by the Constitution upon the ... must be exercised in conformity with the Constitution, and not ... conformity with acts of Congress, if they go beyond the Constitution.

Mr. Justice FIELD. And this judicial power can not be exercised ex... in cases?

Mr. MCKISICK. There must be a case or a controversy. Just why ... Constitution changed its phraseology from "cases at law and in ...ity" to "controversies" the commentators have always been in ...ubt; but there are certainly many controversies that are special pro...dings, and probably the framers of the Constitution had something ... that idea in their minds when they changed the phraseology from ..." to "controversies;" but the Supreme Court has always decided ... they are almost interchangeable.

Mr. Justice FIELD. That would lead, practically, to this: That Con... could not issue any commission and compel testimony to be given, ...use it could not invest the commission with authority to enforce ...dience to a subpœna, and could not invest the courts with authority. ... that your point?

Mr. MCKISICK. That is my point, sir. If Congress wants a commis... to exercise judicial functions, it may say, "Be it enacted, and ... hereby is created a Pacific railway court;" because I don't be... the Constitution limits Congress in determining what they shall ... a court.

Judge HOFFMAN. They must have a case or a controversy before ..., according to your argument, or they could not investigate.

Mr. MCKISICK. That is exactly my argument. That is to say, the ...ission may investigate any subject, but when that commission ... into this court it must come here with a case, or it must come ... with a controversy; and unless it does come here with a case or ... a controversy, the judicial power which is vested in the courts of ... United States does not extend to that matter; because here is the ...ation: It shall extend only to cases at law, or in equity, or to con...ersies between the enumerated parties. That is the point that I ..., and that is the reason that I call the attention of your honors to ... fact that there is no case here; there is no controversy here. ... is no controversy in the act. The act itself makes no controversy ... the Central or the Union Pacific, or any other railroad, but ... simply appoints this Commission to investigate and inquire into ..., and report them to the President, in order that they may be laid ... Congress. Therefore I say that the argument of my friend is ... correct and proper when he says that this Commission, while ... investigate to the extent that the debtor is willing to allow it ... investigate, and probably some distance beyond that, under the ...isions of the act of Congress, or the various acts of Congress ... (because as to some of them the railroad corporation accepted ... terms and thereby came under the act itself), when that Commis... comes into this court, or into any court, it must come here under ... provisions of the Constitution. I understand, if your honors please, ... the rule is perfectly well settled, not only in the Supreme Court of the United States, but in the district and in the circuit courts, that whenever a question comes into the court, the jurisdiction of the court must affirmatively appear. While it is true that, under the Constitution and under the acts of Congress, the circuit courts and district courts are not courts of limited jurisdiction in the common-law sense, yet under the peculiar phraseology of the Constitution, which vests the power in one Supreme Court and in the inferior courts, and then says to what subjects and what persons it shall stand, that the courts always stop at the threshold, to look to the question of jurisdiction, and if they find—no matter whether it is made or not by the parties—if the court finds that it is without jurisdiction under the Constitution, or if an act of Congress has attempted to confer more jurisdiction upon it than the Constitution gave it, they will stop sua sponte and proceed no further. It is true that in some instances, where it was a question of citizenship, the parties—although the record did not affirmatively show it—the parties consented in open court that the facts of citizenship necessary to give the court jurisdiction did exist. But suppose, if the honorable court please, just to illustrate, that an act of Congress were passed, authorizing a citizen of a State to sue another citizen of the same State upon a money demand, where the amount in controversy was $100,000, and thereupon Lloyd Tevis sued James C. Flood—they are both citizens of California—and alleged that under that act of Congress he had come into the circuit court to prosecute his money demand; not a question of grants from different States, but a money demand against James C. Flood, under that act of Congress, for $100,000. Your honors would not entertain that jurisdiction a moment, because you would say that Congress had no power under the Constitution to extend the jurisdiction of the circuit court to controversies of that character between citizens of the same State.

Now these are broad illustrations, but I want to impress upon the court that my opinion is that there is no case here, either at law or in equity, nor any controversy between the United States or the Pacific Railway Commission and the Central Pacific Railroad Company. That is not the case here at all. This Commission has no controversy with the Central Pacific Railroad Company. They come here and tell you that a witness whom they desire to examine in making their investigation into the affairs of the Central Pacific Railroad Company is contumacious, and they invoke your aid to make him answer questions which they have propounded to him, without any case at all—without any controversy with the Central Pacific Railroad Company. I do not propose to go any further into that proposition. I think I have made myself understood as to that.

Now as to the next. I don't think that I can add any thing at all to what has been said by my friend. He has put it so strong and upon such a broad principle, that I think it certainly lodged in your honors' minds that the character of the questions propounded to the witness, whom this petition alleges to be contumacious, are such questions as no court of justice, if it were a case or if it were a controversy, would compel him to answer. Without a case and without a controversy, of course I come back to my first proposition. But with a case and with a controversy, the questions propounded to this witness are of such a character that no court of justice would compel him to answer.

We have some principles in our code of civil procedure relating to witnesses that are nothing in the world but rules of the common law—general rules of law applicable to all the courts. I mean they are extracted from the common law.

Your honors will remember that this Commission is clothed with the power of making these investigations; it makes them itself; it examines the witnesses; the witness has nobody there, no judge, no one to protect him; but just such questions as they may believe—and I don't want to do them an injustice—but just such questions as they may believe they are authorized by the act of Congress to ask—and the act of Congress is certainly very sweeping—they ask the witness. The witness can not appeal to a judge. There is no judge there to protect him. He must answer, or he is contumacious, in the opinion of the Commissioners, because they believe that under the act of Congress they have the right to compel the witness to answer. I don't say that they have the right to compel him, but they have a right to insist upon his answer, and if he does not answer, then they believe they have a right to invoke the aid of your courts. Now, that is contrary to all principles of law. A witness is entitled to be protected—I don't care in what tribunal he is—he is entitled to be protected. From what? If your honors will permit me I will read to you sections 2065 and 2066 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California. They are only, as I say, rules of the common law, and rules of all courts of justice; rules of the courts of the United States, as well as of the courts of California. "A witness must answer questions legal and pertinent to the matter in issue." Well now, there is no issue. There is no issue at all between the United States and the Central Pacific Railroad Company. There is no issue between the Pacific Railway Commission and the Central Pacific Railroad Company. There is no such thing as an issue to be found in the act of Congress. There is no act which they have done, or which they can do, which makes an issue which this law means, and that is, where there is a party plaintiff, a party defendant; a party complainant or a party respondent, as it may be, in law or in equity.

"A witness must answer questions legal and pertinent to the matters in issue, though his answer may establish a claim against himself; but he need not give an answer which will have a tendency to subject him to punishment for a felony, nor need he give an answer which will have a direct tendency to degrade his character, unless it be to the very fact in issue, or to a fact from which the fact in issue would be presumed. But a witness must answer as to the fact of his previous conviction for felony. 2066. It is the right of a witness to be protected from irrelevant, improper, or insulting questions.

Who protects him in that right before this Commission, if your honors please? Here is a right given to a witness by the law—and I say that this law is just as applicable in the courts of the United States as it is in the courts of California—to be protected from these things, and yet there is nobody who can enforce that right—nobody there. "And from harsh or insulting demeanor." I will read the section:

"It is the right of a witness to be protected from irrelevant, improper, or insulting questions, and from harsh or insulting demeanor; to be detained only so long as the interests of justice require it; to be examined only as to matters legal and pertinent to the issue.

I say that these rules, although they are formulated in the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California, are as old as Lord Ellenborough's time. He did protect his witnesses.

Judge HOFFMAN. Mr. McKisick, am I to understand you as denying to the legislature of this State the right to organize a commission to investigate a subject and to compel witnesses to testify? Because, if it is a mere investigation there is no issue, there is no suit at law, there is no controversy; it is merely an inquiry. There is no charge against anybody or suit against anybody. Have they no right to compel a witness to answer?

Mr. McKISICK. They may have a right, but they have no right to invoke the judicial power to aid them; but in a case of that kind it would be the duty of the committee to report back to the legislature, and then for the legislature to act—and the legislature has quasi judicial powers, and always has had to punish for a breach of privilege. Parliament had them, and the legislatures of the State and Congress have them; and if the committee had been properly organized and sent out to investigate, and a witness is brought before it, and the witness is contumacious, it is the duty of the committee to go back to its author, the legislature, but not to come into a court of justice.

Judge HOFFMAN. The Supreme Court negatived the idea of judicial power such as Parliament exercises being confided to Congress at all. That is in the case of a suit against the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. McKISICK. I don't understand, if the honorable court please, that the decision has gone quite that far. I think that there are certain powers that the legislature or Congress may exercise; but I won't undertake to say, if your honors please, what the legislature ought to do, or how far it could go, if the committee reported back to the legislature that a witness was contumacious. But I say that it has no right to come into a court of justice—that is, I say that the Constitution does not authorize it to come into a court of justice, and invoke the aid of a court to compel a witness to answer before a committee.

Now, as I have said, the witness must be protected. Suppose, if your honors please, that you should differ with me—and I merely state this for illustration—and make an order compelling this witness to appear before the Commission to answer the question, and he should go there, and the question should be put to him—I won't say what this Commission would do—but suppose the question should be put to him in a harsh, insulting manner, and he were to say, "I don't want to answer that question; I want to be protected." Would either one of your honors go there to protect him? Are you a part of that Commission? I beg pardon for putting my argument that way, but that is what it comes to. Is the circuit court of the United States, or the district court of the United States a part of this Pacific Railway Commission, or its servant? I say, No. I say it is a tribunal under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and the witness could not insist upon your honors going there to protect him from the wrongs mentioned in one provision of this code, or give him the rights mentioned in another. And he goes there and he declines to answer because of the manner, or has answered as he did in this very case, when your honors look into this petition, with the exhibits as to this $171,000 voucher. He answered as fully as any court would have ever compelled him to answer as to the first proposition, what became of the money. He said, "I can't remember; the transaction is so old; it is made up of so many different items. I was once familiar with it, but they have passed out of my mind and I can't tell you." And I say, and I say it with a great deal of confidence, that if either one of your honors had been presiding in a court of justice in the trial of a case or a controversy, and the witness had answered in that way, you would not have compelled him to answer it any further.

Mr. CAREY. You do not suggest that in your answer.

Mr. McKISICK. Why should we, when you put it in your petition?

Mr. CAREY. You didn't suggest to the court that you have sufficiently answered.

Mr. McKISICK. The court will see that we have sufficiently answered by looking at your petition. Senator Stanford could have met this application, in my opinion, by a motion to quash, or a demurrer; but from the beginning of these investigations down to the 10th of August, 1887, he has shown every disposition that an honorable gentleman could show to comply with the law, and to be courteous and polite to these Commissioners; but when they press him on these questions beyond where any witness ought to be pressed, then he appeals to the Constitution and the laws, and declines to answer. That is the position that he is occupying, and when he comes here to respond——

Mr. Justice FIELD (interrupting). Does he put his objection to answer on the ground that he cannot recollect the matter?

Mr. MCKISICK. If the court please, he did not in his answer, but the petition itself exhibits the answer that he made to a question to this very voucher, and of course we did not deem it necessary for him to answer any further.

Mr. Justice FIELD. I am speaking of before the Commission.

Mr. MCKISICK. Oh yes, he puts it very fully, and he gives the reasons and he gives them in extenso, and with a great deal of particularity. Any one who reads that answer and reads the circumstances under which that voucher was made up, will understand perfectly well that he was giving the very best answer to that Commission that he could give in a court of justice.

Judge HOFFMAN. As I understand, he is asked, was any portion of this $171,000 paid for the purpose of influencing legislation? He says, "I decline to answer." He don't say, "I don't know."

Mr. MCKISICK. That is a separate question.

Judge HOFFMAN. That is the question we are dealing with.

Mr. MCKISICK. We are dealing with two questions. He had said he did not know what items made up that voucher. Then the question was put to him, if any part of that money had been used to influence legislation. Under the advice of counsel he stopped there. Now, if the honorable court please, or if your honors please—whichever you may be—there is something that you will see, when you come to look at these questions and the answers, that will convey to your minds the impression that the question was not asked of Senator Stanford if any of this money had been used to influence legislation legitimately. We all know that thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars may be used legitimately to influence legislation. But these questions are framed, and the whole tenor of them shows that the purpose and scope of them was to ascertain from the witness whether any of the money had been used to influence legislation improperly. When I say "improperly," I mean either under the Marshall case, or if there was bribery. I mean under the Marshall case where there was pay, or under the Trist case where there were certain improper statements made by the Messrs. Childs to certain members of Congress. The whole tenor and scope of these questions go to that: "Have you used any money improperly, illegally, and wrongfully to influence legislation?"

Mr. CAREY. That is an inference you draw from the questions. The questions are not framed in that way.

Mr. MCKISICK. You will see that that is the whole tenor and scope of the questions. The exhibits to this petition show that, if I read them correctly. Congress did not, in my opinion, mean anything of the kind, because Congress certainly knew very well that money might be spent to influence legislation. Congress might have wanted to know whether the moneys thus spent had influenced legislation in the interests of the company, or had influenced legislation against their interests. But that is not the purpose of this Commission in asking these questions, as I think your honors will very readily see; but the purpose was to fasten some stigma upon the witness. The purpose was to fasten some stigma upon certain persons whose names were mentioned on some of those vouchers. It is not dark at all. It is clear as noonday sun that that is the object and purpose of these questions, from the manner in which they were shaped and framed; and I say that the witness did perfectly right in declining to answer them, and I do not believe that your honors will make an order requiring him to answer them. I don't believe, in the first place, that the circuit court, or the district court, or that your honors as judges, have any jurisdiction whatever over this matter. I do believe that you will agree with me when you come to read the questions propounded to the witness, and the manner in which they were propounded to him, and there are two classes of them, as I say. To one class he answers just as fully as he would have been compelled to answer in any court of justice. The judge would have said, "The witness has gone far enough; he has told you all he knows." The other is, where it is apparent and transparent that the object and purpose was——

Mr. Justice FIELD. Did it involve the first question when he said he could not state what made up the items; do you take that in connection?

Mr. MCKISICK. They asked him the general question, what his recollection about the voucher was. I won't give you the language of the question, but it is there. There was nothing wrong in that question at all.

Mr. Justice FIELD. His answer was what?

Mr. MCKISICK. His answer went very fully into an explanation of the voucher.

Mr. Justice FIELD. After that, notwithstanding he said he didn't know, they asked him whether any of that money had been used to influence legislation?

Mr. MCKISICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. Justice FIELD. Your argument is that the second ruling involves the first?

Mr. MCKISICK. The second ruling involved the first. And then, besides, the tone and manner of the question shows that they were not satisfied with his answer, and they wanted to show by him that some of the money which he had expended in that voucher, and in others, included sums of money that had been paid improperly and illegally to influence legislation; and I am perfectly willing to rest that branch of the case upon your honors' reading of the questions and his answers.

Now, one other question that I think is very proper to state, and I will only state it without argument. This particular voucher, or these particular vouchers, to be sure, come from the archives of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, but they have the name of this witness upon them; and as to that, of course, he is being examined about a paper or about affairs of which he himself was a party in making the paper. Now, I say that under the Boyd case, and under all of the cases under the Constitution, in fact, that when they came to that paper and asked him improper questions, or asked him questions that might have tended to degrade his character or to criminate him, he had a right to stop. And, furthermore, if your honors please, this act of Congress authorizes these Commissioners to report whether or not any dividends have been improperly declared; whether or not any of the net proceeds or the net earnings of the company had been improperly diverted. In other words, these questions would tend, if answered by the witness in the way which the Commission expected him or wanted him to answer, eridirectly, they would tend to subject him to certain penalties and forfeitures. I call your attention to the case of the United States vs. The Planters' Bank of Virginia—I believe my friend Mr. Bergin did not refer to that; it is in 1st Peters, and at page 100—the United States became a creditor of that bank. Under an act of the legislature of Virginia, which authorized certain private banking institutions to be organized in that State, certain formalities were required to be complied with by the officers or persons organizing that bank. If they were not complied with, the officers and directors became personally responsible, and liable not only for the debts of the bank but subject to certain penalties imposed by the act itself. The bank having become insolvent, and not being able to pay the United States when it demanded the debt which it owed, the United States filed a bill in equity, under the provision of an act of the Virginia legislature which authorized a bill in equity to be filed against the officers of the bank to make them personally liable for the debt of the bank. That act of the legislature of Virginia required the officers and directors to answer questions, but said that "no answer given to a bill in equity in this proceeding shall be used in any criminal proceeding against the officers." The cashier was one of the officers—his name was Campbell. When he came to answer with the others they pleaded that they could not answer that without subjecting themselves to penalties and forfeitures under the laws of Virginia That plea was set down for argument, and the judge of the district court, having heard argument on that plea, sustained it, and thereupon the United States appealed—it was an equity case—to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the pleas are set out in the report. The facts are all stated and the pleas set out, and Chief Justice Marshall affirmed the judgment of the district court in about two paragraphs, saying: "It is perfectly evident, under the act of the legislature of Virginia, that an answer to this bill would subject these parties to penalties, and therefore they are not required to answer." I say that whether you take this upon the ground that these questions tend to criminate or degrade the witness, or whether they tend to subject him to penalties, or to forfeitures, or to suits to recover back net earnings, or whatever the phrase is in the act, that he is not compelled to answer that question at all.

Mr. Justice FIELD. He didn't take that ground.

Mr. CAREY. No, sir; he didn't take that ground.

Mr. MCKISICK. He does not take this ground, if the honorable court please. The answer has not been read to you. When you come to the latter clauses of the answer you will see that he stands upon his legal right under the Constitution of the United States, and that is sufficient. The Constitution of the United States protects him, and he is not bound to plead specially which one of the sections or which one of the provisions of the Constitution does protect him; but that was the ground upon which he declined, and he would have declined, of course, upon no other, because under the Constitution of the United States he was not bound to answer.

Mr. Justice FIELD. Should he not have taken that ground when the question was asked?

Mr. MCKISICK. I think not. I do not think the law requires it; in fact, I am very sure that the witness may say, "I decline to answer," and then he may give his reasons for it, if he is asked for. "It will tend to criminate me; it will tend to degrade me." But the reasons here were not asked for.

Judge HOFFMAN. Must he not, in any court of justice, put his privilege upon that ground, and say, "Counsel advises me not to answer?"

Mr. MCKISICK. In the first place he says, "I decline to answer." Then the party examining has a right to say, "Upon what ground do you decline?" But suppose the party does not say that; then when he is called upon to show cause why he did not answer, he, of course, may give a reason for it.

OPINION OF COURT.

The Courts of the United States can not be made mere aids to a commission of inquiry created by Congress.

IN THE MATTER OF THE

Application of the Pacific Railway Commission for an order upon a witness before it to answer certain interrogatories propounded to him.

OPINIONS OF MR. JUSTICE FIELD, AND JUDGES SAWYER AND SABIN, DELIVERED IN THE U. S. CIRCUIT COURT AT SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 29, 1887.

[T. I. Bergin, L. D. McKisick, for Leland Stanford. John T. Carey, U. S. District Attorney, Henry C. McPike, Asst. U. S. Dist. Attorney, for the Railway Commission.]

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, NINTH CIRCUIT, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

1. The Pacific Railway Commission is not a judicial body and possesses no judicial powers under the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, creating it, and can determine no rights of the Government or of the corporations whose affairs it is appointed to investigate.
2. Congress can not compel the production of private books and papers of citizens for its inspection, except in the course of judicial proceedings, or in suits instituted for that purpose, and then only upon averments that its rights in some way depend upon evidence therein contained.
3. The courts are open to the United States as to private parties to secure protection for their legal rights and interests, by regular proceedings.
4. Congress can not empower a commission to investigate the private affairs, books, and papers of the officers and employés of corporations indebted to the Government as to their relations to other companies with which such corporations have had dealings, except so far as such officers and employés are willing to submit the same for inspection; and the investigation of the Pacific Railway Commission into the affairs of officers and employés of the Pacific Railway Companies under the act of March 3, 1887, is limited to that extent.
5. The United States have no interest in expenditures of the Central Pacific Railroad Company under vouchers which have not been charged against the Government in the accounts between them; and the Pacific Railway Commission under the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, has no power to investigate such expenditures against the will of the company and its officers.
6. The judicial power of the United States is limited to "cases" and "controversies" enumerated in Article III, Section 1, of the Constitution as modified by the eleventh amendment, and to petitions on habeas corpus and can not be extended by Congress; and by such "cases" and "controversies" are meant the claims of litigants brought for determination by regular judicial proceedings established by law or custom.
7. The judicial department is independent of the legislative, in the Federal Government, and Congress can not make the courts its instruments in conducting mere legislative investigations.

8. The power of United States courts to authorize the taking of depositions on interrogatory from courts of foreign jurisdictions exists by international comity; but no comity of any kind can be invoked by a mere investigating committee appointed by Congress.
9. The Central Pacific Railroad Company is a State corporation not subject to Federal control, any further than a natural person similarly situated would be. Per Sawyer, J.
10. The Central Pacific Railroad Company is absolute owner of the lands and bonds granted to it by the Government, having complied with the act making the grant, subject to the lien of the Government to secure its advances, in the same way and to the same extent as a natural person in like situation. Per Sawyer, J.
11. The relation of creditor and debtor exists between the United States and the Central Pacific Railroad Company, under the act granting aid to the latter, with like force and effect as if both were natural persons, the relation being private and having nothing to do with the power of the Government as sovereign. Per Sawyer, J.
12. The United States, as creditor, can not institute a compulsory investigation into the private affairs of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or require it to exhibit its books and papers for inspection in any other way, or to any greater extent, than would be lawful in the case of private creditors and debtors. Per Sawyer, J.
13. The United States, as Creditor, have the same remedy as a private creditor, and no other, to compel payment of any moneys due it from the Central Pacific Railroad Company, as their debtor, or to prevent the latter from wasting its assets before the debt matures, and that remedy, if any, must be by a regular judicial proceeding in due course of law, and Congress has no power to constitute a roving, legislative inquisition into the affairs of the company to ascertain what it has done or is doing with its money. Per Sawyer, J.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

This is an application of the Pacific Railway Commission, created under the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, "Authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of railroads which have received aid from the United States, and for other purposes," for an order requiring a witness before it to answer certain interrogatories propounded to him. That act authorizes the President to appoint three commissioners to examine the books, papers, and methods of all railroad companies which have received aid in bonds from the Government, and in terms invests them with power to make a searching investigation into the working and financial management, business, and affairs of the aided companies, and also to ascertain and report—

Whether any of the directors, officers, or employés of said companies, respectively, have been or are now directly or indirectly interested, and to what amount or extent, in any other railroad, steamship, telegraph, express, mining, construction, or other business company or corporation, and with which any agreements, undertakings, or leases have been made or entered into; what amounts of money or credit have been loaned by any of said companies to any person or corporation; what amounts of money or credit have been or are now borrowed by any of said companies, giving names of lenders and the purposes for which said sums have been or are now required; what amounts of money or other valuable consideration, such as stocks, bonds, passes, and so forth, have been expended or paid out by said companies, whether for lawful or unlawful purposes, but for which sufficient and detailed vouchers have not been given or filed with the records of said company; and further to inquire and report whether said companies, or either of them, or their officers or agents, have paid any money or other valuable consideration, or done any other act or thing for the purpose of influencing legislation.

It is difficult to express in general terms the extent to which the Commissioners are required to go in their inquisition into the business and affairs of the aided companies; or the extent to which they may not go into other business and affairs of its directors, officers, and employés. The act itself must be read to form any conception of the all-pervading character of the scrutiny it exacts of them.

And it provides that the Commissioners, or either of them, shall have the power—

To require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to the matter under investigation, and to administer oaths; and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books, papers, and documents.

And it declares that—

Any of the circuit or district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on, may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, issue an order requiring any such person to appear before said Commissioners, or either of them, as the case may be, and produce books and papers if so ordered, and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

And also that—

The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

In the discharge of the duties imposed upon them, the Commissioners have attended at San Francisco and called before them as a witness Leland Stanford, who is now and has been from its organization president of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, one of the companies which received aid in bonds from the Government; and on the 10th of August, whilst he was under examination respecting the affairs of that company, a number of vouchers purporting to represent the expenditure of moneys belonging to it were produced and verified. These vouchers, as stated by the Commissioners, represented the aggregate sum of $733,725.68, which had been expended by Mr. Stanford between November 9, 1870, and December 21, 1880, and by him charged to the company, and by the company subsequently reimbursed to him. The persons to whom the moneys were paid and the objects to which they had been applied do not appear upon the face of the vouchers, except that the objects are stated to have been for "general expense account" or for "legal services," and except, also, that in a few instances the initials of persons to whom the money is purported to have been paid are given. One of the vouchers (No. 2,569½) represented the expenditure of $171,781.89. It reads as follows:

C. P. R. R. Co., to Leland Stanford, Dr.

To cash paid on account of general expenses to December 31, 1875.....	$37,365.50
To cash paid on account of general expenses to December 31, 1875.....	34,416.39
	171,781.89

This was indorsed, in addition to its number, amount, and a statement of its general character, as follows:

Allowed Feb. 7, 1876, by board of directors, folio 153.
I certify that the within account, amounting to $171,781.89, is correct.
LELAND STANFORD.

When under examination Mr. Stanford was asked to explain in detail the character of the expenditures covered by this voucher. He replied that he had no recollection of its contents, but presumed it was made up of many items. He then proceeded to explain at great length the manner in which he did business for the company in negotiating loans and incurring expenditures, which was briefly this: The loans were generally negotiated in San Francisco, and the payment of expenses incurred by him was frequently made there, though for many years the office of the company was at Sacramento. His payments were usually in checks drawn in his own name. The check-books, with loose memoranda kept by him, were handed, from time to time, to some one connected with the office, by whom a general voucher was made up embracing the several expenditures incurred, and the voucher was then presented by the witness to the directors of the company and by them approved. The witness kept no accounts of his several expenditures, except loose memoranda and his check-books, from which the vouchers were made up; and he supposed the voucher in question was thus made up. He could not, at that date, state the items which made up the several accounts, but he had no doubt that he explained the matter to the company when the voucher was presented. To the question, "What explanation did you give the company?" the witness answered as follows:

Well, as I do not remember the items of it, I cannot remember, of course, what explanation I may have given to the company. I don't think I went into details of these things to the company, further than to say I found it necessary to expend for the general interest of the company so much; and I do not think that they ever questioned me particularly as to the wisdom of the expenditure.

The Commission then asked the witness this question:

Was any part of the $171,000 (the sum named in this bill that I have handed to you and that you have) paid for the purpose of influencing legislation?

The counsel present acting for the railroad company objected to the question, for the reason that the witness had said that he did not remember what constituted the items composing the voucher; and said that upon that point (of influencing legislation) any question the Commission has asked, or might be disposed to ask, the witness would be advised not to answer, upon the ground that the company is willing to account to the Government for its proportion of any voucher that is produced, or of any entry upon the books of the company that is unexplained, and therefore it will not make any difference what is done with the money—whether it was thrown into the sea or wasted in any manner or form. The chairman of the Commission repeated the question in a modified form, as follows:

Was any part of the sum named in the voucher submitted to you paid to any agent or individual for the purpose of influencing legislation?

To this the witness answered as follows:

I told you I did not know anything about this, but then I shall act upon the advice of my counsel. I don't suppose it can make any possible difference as long as we account for the money. If the Government is not satisfied with the vouchers which we present, whether the money was expended or wasted or anything of the kind, it can make no possible difference, because if it went into the sea—if I had used this money improperly or thrown it away, I might be accountable to the stockholders for my trust, but the Government can not have any more than the money, and the company is willing to account for that if you are not satisfied with the action.

The witness, therefore, under advice of counsel, declined to give any further answer.

The chairman also asked this question:

Are you able to state to the Commission that any of the money was paid for illegitimate or corrupt purposes, that is, to corrupt the legislature of the State of California or any other State legislature, or the Congress of the United States?

And to which the witness answered as follows:

I have told you what I know, that I do not remember about that account; but I can say this, that I never corrupted a member of the legislature in my life, and I do not know that any of my agents ever did. So far as Congress is concerned, I saw a statement that the board of directors allowed my account for expenditures made in Washington or in various places. I do not know that I ever had any occasion to pay out any money at Washington except for my own private expenses.

The witness, upon further examination, testified that his check-books in which he drew his checks for the expenditures were destroyed; that it had always been his habit about once a year to have a "clean up," and when he wanted to go away he would overhaul his papers, and what he did not want he would destroy; that he had been to Europe three times within the last few years, and each time he had "cleaned up," leaving only such papers as, in case he might not return, he was willing that other people might see.

Notwithstanding the answer of the witness that he could not state the items of the voucher, and had no recollection of any of them, he was repeatedly asked substantially the same question, as though by its repetition a different answer might be obtained. The answer was, however, substantially the same in every instance. Other vouchers of a similar kind presented by the witness to the company were produced and verified, and with respect to them the witness said as follows:

I suggest to the Commission that there is not in all that class of bills to-day a single item that I positively remember. I could not tell the amount, nor when these bills were credited, excepting I went to the books. I cannot tell of a single item that went to make up the amounts. Let my answer as to this and to the other vouchers of that class be the same as I have made to the other (the first) voucher; and I will take that position generally.

Yet the Commissioners felt it their duty to ask specifically as to each voucher substantially the same question, at which some feeling appears to have been excited, as the following passage from the examination upon one of the vouchers discloses:

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMISSION. Was any part of the sum expended through any agent or individual for the purpose of influencing legislation?

Answer. Not to my knowledge. I have told you already. I do not know the object of your examining me in this way. I have told you that I do not know anything about it; and I have told you that, I think, three or four times.

The CHAIRMAN. I want you to distinctly understand that I am going to ask you as to each of these vouchers, and I will put it on the record.

The WITNESS. And I want you to distinctly understand that I shall exercise my discretion about it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is your right; and it is my right and duty, sworn to, to ask you.

The WITNESS. It is your right and your duty to be a gentleman in asking questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if I have not been, I will apologize.

The WITNESS. Well, I think you have occasion to apologize for asking such questions as that over and over again.

The CHAIRMAN. I will repeat my question, and you can decline just as you have done. I am going through all of these vouchers just in this way, so that there will be no mistake in the future.

The Commissioners now ask in their petition that the witness be summoned to show cause why he should not be required to answer the interrogatories whether any part of the sums named in the several vouchers was paid for the purpose of influencing legislation, which he has declined to do except in the manner stated.

Subsequently interrogatories were propounded to Mr. Stanford inquiring whether any portion of the moneys covered by the several vouchers produced following the first one was paid to certain parties, who were named, for the purpose of using the same in connection with measures pending in the legislature.

The witness declined to answer these interrogatories, and the Commissioners also ask in their petition that he be summoned to show cause why he should not be required to answer them.

It was also in evidence before the Commission that in December, 1875, the legislature of California was in session in the city of Sacramento.

and that it was the custom of the railroad company to be represented before its committees. The Commission thereupon inquired as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. How many representatives did you have there?

Answer. I used to generally go there and spend a good deal of time when there was any very hostile legislation going on or proposed. I was up there, and sometimes had one of our people and sometimes another; sometimes one lawyer and sometimes another.

The CHAIRMAN. Please name the lawyers who were in the habit of attending the legislature with you?

Answer. Unless it is really necessary, I do not want to go into the detail of any thing of that kind. We often employ agents in a confidential character, and it was not advisable that others should know that they were in our service. I do not want to answer unless I am compelled to answer. I want to give you all the information that is in our power by which you may understand under what obligations we are to the Government.

If we have wrongfully disposed of any of the assets of the Central Pacific Company that could possibly affect its relation with the Government I want you to know it, but where it is a matter merely between myself and my stockholders and directors, and it can not make any difference in our relations to the Government or what the Government may want to claim because of the lack of proper vouchers upon which to base their five or twenty-five per cent., I do not want to do it. I can not conceive that the questions you are asking me can possibly affect our account with the Government so long as we are willing to pay. If you are not satisfied with these vouchers, we say to you say so, and we will account for them as money on hand.

To the question subsequently repeated the witness declined to answer, and the Commissioners pray in their petition that the witness also be required, by order of the court, to show cause why he shall not be required to answer this interrogatory. Upon the filing of the petition, which was signed and verified by the oath of the Commissioners, an order was entered as prayed, that the witness show cause before the court, on a day designated, why he should not be required to appear before them and answer the interrogatories propounded.

The witness appeared in response to the order and filed his answer to the petition, in which he gives at some length the history of the construction of the road of the company and of the difficulties its projectors had to encounter, and mentions the aid in bonds and lands received from the Government, and the annual reports made to the Secretary of the Treasury of its condition and management. He states that since its organization, in June, 1861, he has been its president, and, after describing the manner of doing business, adds—

In this way I have taken part in transacting the business of the company for a period now extending over twenty-five years, and in point of value aggregating upwards of four hundred millions of dollars. As the business took place I was cognizant of it, but, owing to its multiplicity and the pressure of matters more important than mere detail, as well as the lapse of time, I am now no longer able to recall many of the matters with which I was personally so familiar.

He also states that by the decision of the Supreme Court the relation between the United States and the railroad company is that of creditor and debtor, and that the rights of both are those springing from that relation; that the examination made by the Commission has not only extended to the affairs of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, but has extended to a searching investigation of the affairs of all the consolidated and allied companies connected with that corporation; and that their affairs have been examined into not only by the experts of the Commission, but the Commissioners themselves, and their business relations have been exposed to the public and the prying curiosity of rival business competitors; and that the Commission insists upon investigating matters with which the Government has and can have no possible concern; that the disposition the company may have made of such portion of its assets or earnings as the Government has not and never had any interest in is of this character; and yet the Commission insists upon answers to questions respecting such disposition which can have no possible effect upon the relations between the company and the Government, and can only tend to cast suspicion upon parties whose names may be mentioned; and as the subjects in respect to which these questions are propounded are of an exclusively private character, in no way affecting the interests of the Government, neither the company nor its officers feel called upon to answer.

The respondent also makes this extraordinary statement, that he is constrained to this course "as the gentlemen of the Commission have distinctly and repeatedly avowed, in the course of their examination, that they do not regard themselves bound in such examination by the ordinary rules of evidence; that they would receive hearsay and ex parte statements, surmises, suspicions, and all character of information that might be called to their attention;" and that during the course of his examination it had more than once transpired that he was examined upon charges made in pleadings and proceedings instituted against the company based upon suspicion and surmises, and in many cases without actual foundation; that questions had been propounded and a line of examination pursued manifestly prompted by disaffected and hostile parties, whose aim was more the pursuit of personal enmity of a private character than the interests of the public at large or the ends of justice; that to answer any of the objectionable questions would necessarily give rise to the implication that all persons whose names may be mentioned in the questions to which answers are declined are guilty of the acts of commission which is implied in the bare asking of the questions; that in his testimony he had said in substance, and now repeats it, that he never corrupted or attempted to corrupt any member of the legislature or any member of Congress or any public official, and never authorised any agent to do so; that all the claims covered by the vouchers referred to have received not only the approval of the board of directors of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, but likewise the approval of the stockholders of that company; that all parties who could in any way legally or equitably be affected by the disbursements embraced in them were fully satisfied therewith and have ratified and approved of the same.

And in addition the respondent states that, in the conduct and management of a business of the magnitude of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the various corporations consolidated and allied therewith, it is impossible not from time to time to have to do business involving disbursements which every dictate of business prudence will not admit of being made public; that arrangements of a private character, names of parties not publicly known, and the disclosures of which could only result in defeating the ends in view and exposing the persons so named to suspicion and obloquy would forbid making the same public, either upon the archives of the company or before a public commission; that this course of policy is not only sanctioned by ordinary experience in business life, but the Government of the United States and the government of the State of California, as well as the government of the city and county of San Francisco, severally, allow to their chief magistrates money the investment of which is committed exclusively to their judgment and discretion and for which detailed vouchers are never required.

The respondent further adds that the Commission deemed it its duty to propound questions involving criminality on his part and on the part of the persons whose names were mentioned in such questions, answers to which, for the reasons stated, he has felt constrained to decline to make; that, acting not only on his own behalf but on behalf of those whose interests as stockholders of the Central Pacific Railroad Company are committed to his charge, he feels bound to decline to answer them unless by the court he is otherwise directed.

The purport of the answer of the respondent is that the Government has no legal interest in the matters in relation to which the interrogatories are propounded; that he has answered the interrogatories so far as it was in his power to do so, not having any recollection of the items for which the vouchers were made up, at this distant day from the transactions to which they relate, and that he is shielded by the Constitution from answering questions implying criminality in his conduct and calculated to cast aspersions upon others.

The district attorney of the United States, acting for the Commissioners, moves for a peremptory order upon the witness to compel him to answer interrogatories, notwithstanding his answer to the order to show cause.

Mr. Justice FIELD, after filing the above statement of facts, delivered the opinion of the court as follows:

The motion for a peremptory order upon the witness to answer the interrogatories propounded by the Railway Commission has been fully argued; and everything which could be said in its favor has been ably presented by the United States attorney, either in oral or printed arguments. In resisting the motion counsel of the respondent have not confined themselves to a discussion of the propriety and necessity of the interrogatories, and the sufficiency of the answers given by him, but they have assailed the validity of the act creating the Commission, so far as it authorizes an examination into the private affairs of the directors, officers, and employés of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and confers the right to invoke the power of the Federal courts in aid of the general investigation directed.

Impressed with the gravity of the questions presented, we have given to them all the consideration in our power.

The Pacific Railway Commission, created under the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, is not a judicial body; it possesses no judicial power; it can determine no rights of the Government or of the companies whose affairs it investigates. Those rights will remain the subject of judicial inquiry and determination as fully as though the Commission had never been created; and in such inquiry its report to the President of its action will not be even admissible as evidence of any of the matters investigated. It is a mere board of inquiry, directed to obtain information upon certain matters and report the result of its investigations to the President, who is to lay the same before Congress. In the progress of its investigations, and in the furtherance of them, it is in terms authorized to invoke the aid of the courts of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents. And the act provides that the circuit or district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which the inquiry of the Commission is had, in case of contumacy or refusal of any person to obey a subpœna to him, may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commissioners and produce books and papers and give evidence touching the matters in question.

The investigation directed is to be distinguished from the inquiries authorized upon taking the census. The Constitution provides for an enumeration of the inhabitants of the States at regular periods, in order to furnish a basis for the apportionment of Representatives, and in connection with the ascertainment of the number of inhabitants, the act of Congress provides for certain inquiries as to their age, birth, marriage, occupation, and respecting some other matters of general interest, and for a refusal of any one to answer them a small penalty is imposed (R. S., sec. 2171). There is no attempt in such inquiries to pry into the private affairs and papers of any one, nor are the courts called upon to enforce answers to them. Similar inquiries usually accompany the taking of a census of every country, and are not deemed to encroach upon the rights of the citizen.

And in addition to the inquiries usually accompanying the taking of the census, there is no doubt that Congress may authorize a commission to obtain information upon any subject which, in its judgment, it may be important to possess. It may inquire into the extent of the productions of the country of every kind, natural and artificial, and seek information as to the habits, business, and even amusements of the people. But in its inquiries it is controlled by the same guards against the invasion of private rights which limit the investigations of private parties into similar matters. In the pursuit of knowledge it can not compel the production of the private books and papers of the citizen for its inspection, except in the progress of judicial proceedings, or in suits instituted for that purpose, and in both cases only upon averments that its rights are in some way dependent for enforcement upon the evidence those books and papers contain.

Of all the rights of the citizen, few are of greater importance or more essential to his peace and happiness than the right of personal security, and that involves not merely protection of his person from assault, but exemption of his private affairs, books, and papers from the inspection and scrutiny of others. Without the enjoyment of this right all other rights would lose half their value. The law provides for the compulsory production, in the progress of judicial proceedings or by direct suit for that purpose, of such documents as affect the interest of others, and also in certain cases for the seizure of criminating papers necessary for the prosecution of offenders against public justice, and only in one of these ways can they be obtained and their contents made known against the will of the owners.

In the recent case of Boyd vs. the United States (116 U. S., 616) the Supreme Court held that a provision of law of Congress which authorized a court of the United States, in revenue cases, on motion of the Government attorney, to require the defendant or claimant to produce in court his private books, invoices, and papers, or that the allegations of the attorney respecting them should be taken as confessed, was unconstitutional and void as applied to suits for penalties or to establish a forfeiture of the party's goods. The court, speaking by Mr. Justice Bradley, said:

> Any compulsory discovery by extorting the party's oath, or compelling the production of his private books and papers to convict him of crime or to forfeit his property, is contrary to the principles of free government. It is abhorrent to the instincts of an Englishman; it is abhorrent to the instincts of an American. It may suit the purpose of despotic power, but it cannot abide the pure atmosphere of political liberty and personal freedom.

The language thus used had reference, it is true, to the compulsory production of papers as a foundation for criminal proceedings, but it is applicable to any such production of the private books and papers of a party otherwise than in the course of judicial proceedings or a direct suit for that purpose. It is the forcible intrusion into and compulsory exposure of one's private affairs and papers, without judicial process, or in the course of judicial proceedings, which is contrary to the principles of a free government, and is abhorrent to the instincts of Englishmen and Americans.

In his opinion in the celebrated case of Entick vs. Carrington, and three other King's messengers, reported at length in 19 Howell's State Trials, 1029, Lord Camden said:

> Papers are the owner's goods and chattels; they are his dearest property, and are so far from enduring a seizure, that they will hardly bear an inspection; and though the eye can not, by the laws of England, be guilty of a trespass, yet, where papers are removed and carried away the secret nature of those goods will be an aggravation of the trespass and demand more considerable damages in that respect. Where is the written law that gives any magistrate such a power? I can safely answer, there is none; and, therefore, it is too much for us, without such authority, to pronounce a practice legal which would be subversive of all the comforts of society.

Compulsory process to produce such papers, not in a judicial proceeding, but before a commission of inquiry, is as subversive of "all the comforts of society" as their seizure under the general warrant condemned in that case. The principles laid down in the opinion of Lord Camden, said the Supreme Court of the United States, "affect the very essence of constitutional liberty and security. They reach further than the concrete form of the case then before the court with its adventitious circumstances; they apply to all invasions on the part of the Government and its employés of the sanctity of man's home and the privacies of life."

In Kilbourn vs. Thompson (113 U. S., 168), we have a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that neither House of Congress has the power to make inquiries into the private affairs of the citizen; that is, to compel exposure of such affairs. That case was this: The firm of Jay Cooke & Co. were debtors of the United States, and it was alleged that they were interested in a "real-estate pool" in the city of Washington, and that the trustees of their estate and effects had made a settlement of their interests with the associates of the firm to the disadvantage and loss of numerous creditors, including the Government of the United States. The House of Representatives, by a resolution reciting these facts, authorized the Speaker to appoint a committee of five to inquire into the matter and history of said "real-estate pool" and the character of the settlement, with the amount of the property involved in which Jay Cooke & Co. were interested, and the amount paid, or to be paid, in said settlement, with power to send for persons and papers, and report to the House. The committee was appointed and organized, and proceeded to make the inquiry directed. A subpœna was issued to one Kilbourn, commanding him to appear before the committee to testify and be examined touching the matters to be inquired into, and to bring with him certain designated records, papers, and maps relating to the inquiry. Kilbourn appeared before the committee and was asked to state the names of the five members of the real-estate pool and where each resided, and he refused to answer the question or to produce the books which had been required. The committee reported the matter to the House, and it ordered the Speaker to issue his warrant, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms, to arrest Kilbourn and bring him before the bar of the House to answer why he should not be punished for contempt. On being brought before the House, Kilbourn persisted in his refusal to answer the question and to produce the books and papers required. He was thereupon held to be in contempt, and committed to custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms until he should signify his willingness to appear before the committee and answer the question and obey the subpœna duces tecum; and it was ordered that in the mean time the Sergeant-at-Arms should cause him to be confined in the common jail of the District of Columbia. He was accordingly confined in that jail forty-five days, when he was released on habeas corpus by the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. Upon his release he sued the Speaker of the House, the members of the committee, and the Sergeant-at-Arms for his forcible arrest and confinement. The defendants pleaded the facts recited, to which plea the plaintiff demurred. The demurrer was overruled, and judgment ordered for the defendants. On a writ of error to the Supreme Court the judgment was affirmed as to all the defendants except the Sergeant-at-Arms. They, being members of the House, were held to be protected from prosecution for their action. But as to Thompson, the judgment was reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings. In the Supreme Court the questions involved received great consideration; and it was held that the subject matter of the investigation was judicial and not legislative, and that there was no power in Congress, or in either House, on the allegation that an insolvent debtor of the United States was interested in a private business partnership, to investigate the affairs of that partnership, and, consequently, no authority to compel a witness to testify on the subject.

> The House of Representatives [said the court] has the sole right to impeach officers of the Government and the Senate to try them. Were the question of such impeachment before either body acting in its appropriate sphere on that subject, we see no reason to doubt the right to compel the attendance of witnesses and their answer to proper questions in the same manner and by the use of the same means that courts of justice can in like cases. Whether the power of punishment in either House by fine or imprisonment goes beyond this or not, we are sure that no person can be punished for contumacy as a witness before either House unless his testimony is required in a matter into which that House has jurisdiction to inquire, and we feel equally sure that neither of these bodies possesses the general power of making inquiry into the private affairs of the citizen.

And again:

> If the investigation which the committee was directed to make was judicial in its character, and could only be properly and successfully made by a court of justice, and if it related to a matter wherein relief or redress could be had only by a judicial proceeding, we do not, after what has been said, deem it necessary to discuss the proposition that the power attempted to be exercised was one confided by the Constitution to the judicial, and not to the legislative, department of the Government. We think it equally clear that the power asserted is judicial, and not legislative.

And again:

> The resolution adopted as a sequence of the preamble contains no hint of any intention of final action by Congress on the subject. In all the argument on the case no suggestion has been made of what the House of Representatives or the Congress could have done in the way of remedying the wrong or securing the creditors of Jay Cooke & Co., or even the United States. Was it to be simply a fruitless investigation into the personal affairs of individuals? If so, the House of Representatives had no power or authority in the matter more than any other equal number of gentlemen interested for the Government of their country. By fruitless, we mean that it could result in no valid legislation on the subject to which the inquiry referred.

When the case went back to the supreme court of the District of Columbia and was tried, the plaintiff recovered a verdict for $60,000 against the Sergeant-at-Arms. A new trial having been granted for excessive damages, the plaintiff recovered on the second trial a verdict for $30,500. This amount was subsequently reduced to $20,000, which was paid by order of Congress, with interest and costs of suit. (23 U. S., 1 Otto, McArthur and Mackey Rep., 416, 432.)

This case will stand for all time as a bulwark against the invasion of the right of the citizen to protection in his private affairs against the unlimited scrutiny of investigation by a Congressional committee. The courts are open to the United States as they are to the private citizen, and both can there secure, by regular proceedings, ample protection of all rights and interests which are entitled to protection under a government of a written constitution and laws.

The act of Congress not only authorizes a searching investigation into the methods, affairs, and business of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, but it makes it the duty of the Railway Commission to inquire into, ascertain, and report whether any of the directors, officers, or employés of that company have been, or are now, directly or indirectly, interested, and to what extent, in any railroad, steam-ship, telegraph, express, mining, construction, or other business company or corporation, and with which any agreements, undertakings, or leases have been made or entered into. There are over one hundred officers, principal and minor, of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and nearly five thousand employés. It is not unreasonable to suppose that a large portion of these have some interest, as stockholders or otherwise, in some other company or corporation with which the railway company may have an agreement of some kind, and it would be difficult to state the extent to which the explorations of the Commission in tothe private affairs of these persons may not go if the mandate of the act could be fully carried out. But in accordance with the principles declared in the case of Kilbourn vs. Thompson, and the equally important doctrines announced in Boyd vs. The United States, the Commission is limited in its inquiries as to the interest of these directors, officers, and employés in any other business, company, or corporation to such matters as these persons may choose to disclose. They can not be compelled to open their books and expose such other business to the inspection and examination of the Commission. They were not prohibited from engaging in any other lawful business because of their interest in and connection with the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and that other business might as well be the construction and management of other railroads as the planting of vines or the raising of fruit, in which some of those directors and officers and employés have been in fact engaged. And they are entitled to the same protection and exemption from inquisitorial investigation into such business as any other citizens engaged in like business.

With reference to the vouchers respecting which the principal interrogatories are propounded, and to which we are asked to compel answers from the witness, it is conceded by the Commission on this motion that the moneys covered by them were not charged against the United States in ascertaining the net earnings of the company. If such were the case, it is difficult to see what interest the United States can have in the disposition of those moneys. Be that as it may, the Federal courts can not, upon that concession, aid the Commission in ascertaining how the moneys were expended. Those courts can not become the instruments of the Commission in furthering its investigation. Their power, its nature and extent, is defined by the Constitution. The Government established by that instrument is one of delegated powers, supreme in its prescribed sphere, but without authority beyond it. No department of it can exercise any powers not specifically enumerated or necessarily implied in those enumerated. Such is the teaching of all of our great jurists, and the tenth amendment declares that "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people." Any legislation of Congress beyond the limits of the powers delegated is an invasion of the rights reserved to the States or to the people, and is necessarily void. The first section of the third article of the Constitution declares that "The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish." The second section of the same article declares that—

The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, or other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens or subjects.

This section was modified by the eleventh amendment, declaring that—

The judicial power shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign State.

As thus modified, the section states all the cases and controversies in which the judicial power of the United States can be exercised, except those arising on a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which is regarded as a suit for one's personal freedom. The judicial power of the United States is, therefore, vested in the courts, and can only be exercised by them in the cases and controversies enumerated, and in petitions for writs of habeas corpus. In no other proceedings can that power be invoked, and it is not competent for Congress to require its exercise in any other way. Any act providing for such exercise would be a direct invasion of the rights reserved to the States or to the people, and it would be the duty of the court to declare it null and void. Story says, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, that—

The functions of the judges of the courts of the United States are strictly and exclusively judicial. They cannot, therefore, be called upon to advise the President in any executive measures or to give extrajudicial interpretations of law, or to act as commissioners in cases of pensions or other like proceedings. (Sec. 177.)

The judicial article of the Constitution mentions cases and controversies. The term controversies, if distinguishable at all from cases, is so in that it is less comprehensive than the latter and includes only suits of a civil nature. (Chisholm vs. Georgia, 2 Dall., 431, 432; 1st Tucker's Commentaries, App., 420, 421.) By cases and controversies are intended the claims of litigants brought before the courts for determination by such regular proceedings as are established by law or custom for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs. Whenever the claim of a party under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States takes such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, then it has become a case. The term implies the existence of present or possible adverse parties whose contentions are submitted to the court for adjudication. In Osborn vs. United States (9 Whea., 819), the Supreme Court, speaking by Chief-Justice Marshall, after quoting the third article of the Constitution declaring the extent of the judicial power of the United States, said:

This clause enables the judicial department to receive jurisdiction to the full extent of the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States, when any question, respecting them shall assume such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting on it. That power is capable of acting only when the subject is submitted to it by a party who asserts his rights in the form prescribed by law. It then becomes a case, and the Constitution declares that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States.

In his Commentaries on the Constitution, Mr. Justice Story says:

It is clear that the judicial department is authorized to exercise jurisdiction to the full extent of the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States, whenever any question respecting them shall assume such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it. When it has assumed such a form, it then becomes a case; and then, and not till then, the judicial power attaches to it. A case, then, in the sense of this clause of the Constitution, arises when some subject touching the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States is submitted to the courts by a party who asserts his rights in the form prescribed by law.

And Mr. Justice Story refers in a note to the speech of Marshall in the case of Robbins, in the House of Representatives, before he became Chief-Justice, which contains a clear statement of the conditions upon which the judicial power of the United States can be exercised. His language was:

By extending the judicial power to all cases in law and equity the Constitution has never been understood to confer on that department any political power whatever. To come within this description, a question must assume a legal form for forensic litigation and judicial decision. There must be parties to come into court, who can be reached by its process and bound by its power; whose rights admit of ultimate decision by a tribunal to which they are bound to submit.

The proceedings to obtain testimony upon letters rogatory to be used in the courts of foreign countries, is not, as suggested by counsel, an exception to this doctrine. There are certain powers inherent in all courts. The power to preserve order in their proceedings and to punish for contempt of their authority are instances of this kind. And by jurists and text writers the power of the courts of record of one country, as a matter of comity, to furnish assistance, so far as is consistent with their own jurisdiction, to the courts of another country, by taking the testimony of witnesses to be used in the foreign country, or by ordering it to be taken before a magistrate or commissioner, has also been classed among their inherent powers.

For by the law of nations [says Greenleaf] courts of justice of different countries are bound mutually to aid and assist each other, for the furtherance of justice; and hence when the testimony of a foreign witness is necessary, the court before which the action is pending may send to the court within whose jurisdiction the witness resides a writ, either patent or close, usually termed a letter rogatory, or a commission sub mutuæ vicissitudinis obtentu ac in juris subsidium, from those words contained in it. By this instrument the court abroad is informed of the pendency of the cause, and the names of the foreign witnesses, and is requested to cause their depositions to be taken in due course of law, for the furtherance of justice, with an offer on the part of the tribunal making the request to do the like for the other, in a similar case. (Treatise on evidence, vol. 1, section 320.)

The comity in behalf of which this power is exercised cannot, of course, be invoked by any mere investigating commission. And it would seem that by act of Congress the power of the Federal courts in this respect has been restricted to cases in which a foreign government is a party or has an interest. (R. S., sec. 4071.)

The act of Congress creating the Railway Commission in terms provides, as already stated, that it may invoke the aid of any circuit or district court to require the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents relating to the subject of inquiry; and empowers the court, in case of contumacy or refusal of persons to obey subpœnas to them, to issue orders requiring them to appear before the commissioners, or either of them, and produce the books and ordered, and give evidence touching the matters in question and to punish disobedience to its orders; and does not appear to leave any discretion in the matter with the court. It would seem as though Congress intended that the court should make the orders sought upon the mere request of the Commissioners, without regard to the nature of the inquiry. It is difficult to believe that it could have intended that the court should thus be the mere executor of the Commissioners' will. And yet, if the Commissioners are not bound, as they have asserted, by any rules of evidence in their investigations, and may receive hearsay, ex parte statements, and information of every character that may be brought to their attention, and the court is to aid them in this manner of investigation, there can be no room for the exercise of judgment as to the propriety of the questions asked, and the court is left merely to direct that the pleasure of the Commissioners in the line of their inquiries be carried out. But if it was expected that the court, when its aid is invoked, should examine the subject of the inquiries to see their character, so as to be able to determine the propriety and pertinency of the questions, and the propriety and necessity of producing the books, papers, and documents asked for before the Commission, then it would be called upon to exercise advisory functions in an administrative or political proceeding, or to exercise judicial power; if the former, they can not be invested in the court; if the latter, the power can only be exercised in the cases or controversies enumerated in the Constitution, or in cases of habeas corpus.

The provision of the act authorizing the courts to aid in the investigation in the manner indicated must, therefore, be adjudged void. The Federal courts under the Constitution can not be made the aids to any investigation by a commission or a committee into the affairs of any one. If rights are to be protected or wrongs redressed by any investigation, it must be conducted by regular proceedings in the courts of justice in cases authorized by the Constitution.

The inability of the courts of the United States to exercise power in any other than regular judicial proceedings was decided in Hayburn's case as early as 1792 (2 Dall., 409). In March of that year Congress passed an act providing that invalid officers, soldiers, and seamen of the Revolution should be entitled to certain pensions proportionate to the extent of their disability, and devolved upon the circuit court of the United States of the district where the invalids resided the duty of examining the proofs presented of the nature and extent of the disability, and of determining what amount of their monthly pay would be equivalent to the disability ascertained and to certify the same to the Secretary of War, who was to place the names of the applicants returned on the pension list of the United States in conformity thereto, unless where he had cause to suspect imposition or mistake, in which case he was authorized to withhold the name of the applicant from the list and report the same to Congress at its next session (1 Stats. at Large, 244, secs. 2 and 4). Every circuit judge, except one, who did not have the question before him, was of opinion that the law was unconstitutional and void. From a statement of Mr. Justice Curtis, in a note appended to the report of the case, it would seem that the judges were of opinion that the power devolved upon them by the act was not judicial in the sense of the Constitution, and if judicial, that their decisions could not be subject to the revision of the Secretary of War or of the Congress of the United States. Plainly, the power exercised by them in determining the extent to which the invalids were entitled to the pensions provided upon the proof produced was in its nature judicial, for it required examination of evidence and judgment thereon, but it was not judicial in the sense of the Constitution, under which judicial power can be exercised only in the cases enumerated in that instrument. The judges forwarded their conclusions to President Washington, and the act was subsequently repealed.

A suit being afterwards brought against one Yale Todd to recover back the amount of pension paid to him, the question of the validity of the act came before the Supreme Court, and judgment was rendered in favor of the United States for the money. This case will be found stated at length by Chief-Justice Taney in a note to the report of United States vs. Ferreira (13 Howard, 52). "The decision," said that great Chief-Justice, "has ever since been regarded and followed by every department of the Government, by the legislative and executive, as well as the judiciary." (Gordon vs. United States, 117 U. S., 703.)

The conclusion we have thus reached disposes of the petition of the Railway Commissioners, and renders it unnecessary to consider whether the interrogatories propounded were proper in themselves or were sufficiently met by the answers given by Mr. Stanford, or whether any of them were open to objection for the assumptions they made or the imputations they implied. It is enough that the Federal courts can not be made the instruments to aid the Commissioners in their investigations. It also renders it unnecessary to make any comment upon the extraordinary position taken by them according to the statement of the respondent, to which we have referred, that they did not regard themselves bound in their examination by the ordinary rules of evidence, but would receive hearsay and ex parte statements, surmises, and information of every character that might be called to their attention. It can not be that the courts of the United States can be used in furtherance of investigations in which all rules of evidence may be thus disregarded.

The motion of the district attorney for a peremptory order upon the witness to answer the interrogatories as set forth in the petition of the Railway Commission is therefore denied, and the order to show cause is discharged.

CONCURRING OPINION.

SAWYER, circuit judge, concurring:

I fully concur in the reasoning of the circuit justice and the conclusions reached, but I deem it proper to present some further views in support of our decision.

It is necessary to understand the exact legal relation of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States, in order to correctly appreciate the constitutional powers of Congress, and of the Commission acting under its authority, over it. The Central Pacific Railroad Company is a private corporation, created and existing under the laws of the State of California. It derived none of its corporate faculties or franchises from the United States. It is in no way subject to the control or laws of the United States, except so far as it is subject to regulation as an instrument of foreign or interstate commerce, or their authority to establish post-roads, or their war powers, in pursuance of the constitutional provisions on the subject, or such regulation as is authorized by the terms of the contract found in the acts of Congress of 1862 and 1864, accepted by the railroad company as a contract. The Central Pacific Railroad Company is simply an artificial person, created with certain faculties by the State of California, and, it stands in relation to the United States, within the scope of its faculties, in precisely the same situation as a natural person under like circumstances. The United States have no more and no less, power over it, than they would have over a natural person in the same situation. The contract might as well have been made with a natural person as with a corporation. Had the grantee under the acts of Congress been a natural person instead of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, accepting the terms of the contract tendered by the act and constructing the road and performing the conditions of the contract, the rights of the United States would have been precisely such as they are now with respect to the Central Pacific Railroad Company; no more, and no less. Since all the conditions of the contract on the part of the Central Pacific Railroad Company have been fully performed in all respects, so far as they are required to be performed for that purpose, the title to the lands granted has fully vested, and the Government bonds having been delivered, the Central Pacific Railroad Company has become the absolute owner of the road and all its appurtenances, together with the lands granted and bonds issued, subject only to the mortgage to secure the payment of the bonds issued by itself, and the lien of the Government to secure its advances, in all respects in the same manner and to the same extent as if it were a natural person similarly situated. The United States have no further control over or interest in said lands or bonds. The United States, in sections 5 and 6 of the act of 1862 and section 5 of the act of 1864, tendered the railroad companies a contract, and, when accepted, there was a contract between the parties upon the terms specified obligatory upon both, and which could not be changed by either without the consent of the other. Says the Supreme Court in U. S. vs. C. P. R. R. Co. (118 U. S., 238), after quoting these provisions:

> These sections, taken together, constitute the contract between the United States and the appellee. (U. S. vs. U. P. R. R. Co., 91 U. S., 72; Sinking Fund Case, 99 U. S., 700-718; U. P. R. R. Co. vs. U. S., 104 U. S., 662.) This contract is binding on the United States, and they can not, without the consent of the company, change its terms by any subsequent legislation. (Sinking Fund Cases, supra.)

Being the owner, with the title fully vested in it, the company could dispose of the lands and bonds at its own will and pleasure, in the same manner, and to the same extent, and with the same effect, as if the contract had been between two natural persons, without being liable to render any other account to the United States than it could be called upon to render had the United States been an association of an equal number of natural persons.

It is, consequently, a matter of no legal concern to the United States what disposition the company made of the lands or bonds, and they have no right to inquire into the matter of their disposition in any other mode or under any other circumstances than they could have been inquired into had the corporation and the United States been two natural persons.

The relation of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States, therefore, under the contract as a contract, is now simply that of debtor and creditor, with certain covenants for service on its completed road still to be performed by the latter, with the debt and performance of those covenants secured by certain specific liens upon portions of the property of the debtor. They stand upon an equal footing as contractors, and upon the same footing as debtor and creditor, as if the indebtedness, obligations, and securities existed between two natural persons. This is clearly the result, as established by the Supreme Court in the Sinking Fund cases, which has by a divided court extended the power of Congress further in that direction than any other case, and, as it seems to us, to the utmost admissible limit. In those cases the Chief Justice, who announced the opinion of the majority of the court, in speaking of the Union Pacific Company, which is a corporation created by Congress itself, said:

> The United States occupy toward this corporation a twofold relation—that of sovereign and that of creditor. (U. S. vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company, 98 U. S., 566.) Their rights as a sovereign are not crippled because they are creditors, and their privileges as creditors are not enlarged by the charter because of their sovereignty. They can not, as creditors, demand payment of what is due them before the time limited by the contract. Neither can they, as sovereign or creditors, require the company to pay the other debts it owes before they mature. (99 U. S., 724.)

As to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the United States do not even occupy the relation of sovereign, except so far as its road extends through the Territories, and then only as to that part of the road within a Territory, which is now only that part in the Territory of Utah, and so far as its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and between the States is concerned, and these powers are merely police powers. The organization of the Central Pacific Railroad Company is under and by virtue of the laws of another sovereignty, and its habitat is in the State of California, beyond the jurisdiction of the United States, except so far as it is subject to the power of Congress under some special grant of power, or its control is necessary to carry out some power specially granted. We look in vain for any power to deal with it, except the power to regulate its acts, as an instrument of interstate or foreign commerce, or such power as Congress may have over it under its authority to establish post-roads, or under its war powers. The relation of debtor and creditor arising under a contract is but a private relation. It is not a sovereign or governmental relation. And the power reserved in the acts of Congress to repeal or amend the act as to the Central Pacific Railroad Company could only extend to amendment, so far as it operated as a law, and not as a contract, and then not to affect the terms of the contract after it had become executed and rights had vested under it.

If, as said by the Supreme Court, the "privileges" of the United States "as creditors are not enlarged by the charter, because of their sovereignty," then no greater powers can be conferred upon the Commission appointed by Congress in this case than Congress could have conferred upon them for the investigation of matters between debtors and creditors who are natural persons, citizens of and residing within States. Could a private creditor authorize or lawfully make a compulsory examination of the character provided for in this act into the private affairs of his debtor? Or could Congress, within a State, under its limited sovereign powers in a State, authorize a private creditor to make such an examination of his debtor's affairs and call upon the courts in like manner to compel answers? Can the Government do for itself, as creditor within a State, what it cannot do for private creditors? If not, and "the privileges of the United States as creditors are not enlarged by the charter because of their sovereignty," upon what principle can the compulsory examination attempted to be authorized by this act be sustained? I can find none. This investigation, so far as the questions under consideration are concerned, is not for a sovereign governmental purpose, but for the purpose of further securing a private debt not yet matured, already secured by a contract, acceptable to and accepted by the creditor at the time it was made. And—constitutional prohibition which prevents States from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, but equally with the States they are prohibited from depriving persons or corporations of property without due process of law. They cannot legislate away to themselves, without making compensation, the lands they have given this corporation to aid in the construction of its railroad. Neither can they by legislation compel the corporation to discharge its obligations in respect to the subsidy bonds otherwise than according to the terms of the contract already made in that connection. The United States are as much bound by their contracts as are individuals. If they repudiate their obligations it is as much repudiation, with all the wrong and reproach that term implies, as it would be if the repudiator had been a State, or a municipality, or a citizen. No change can be made in the title created by the grant of the lands, or in the contract for the subsidy bonds, without the consent of the corporation. All this is indisputable. (The Chief Justice in the Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S., 718, 719.)

> The United States can not any more than a State interfere with private rights except for legitimate governmental purposes. They are not included within the con-

Having ascertained the relation of the parties to each other to be that of contractors—that of debtor and creditor by contract simply, in the same sense as if both were natural persons and private citizens—the question arises as to what authority Congress has, within a State, through Commissioners appointed by it, to investigate the private affairs of a mere contract debtor, and ascertain what he has done with his own money, or what he proposes to do with it—whether he is making judicious investment of his money or not—as bearing upon his probable ability to pay his debt, some years in the future, when it shall have matured?

Mr. Justice Field well said, in the Sinking Fund cases:

> When, therefore, the Government of the United States entered into the contract with the Central Pacific Railroad Company, it could no more than a private corporation or a private individual finally construe and determine the extent of the company's rights and liabilities. If it had cause of complaint against the company, it could not undertake itself, by legislative decree, to redress the grievances, but was compelled to seek redress, as all other civil corporations are compelled, through the judicial tribunals. If the company was wasting its property, of which no allegation is made, or impairing the security of the Government, the remedy by suit was ample. To declare that one of two contracting parties is entitled, under the contract between them, to the payment of a greater sum than is admitted to be payable, or to other or greater security than that given, is not a legislative function. It is judicial action; it is the exercise of judicial power, and all such power, with respect to any transaction arising under the laws of the United States, is vested by the Constitution in the courts of the country. (99 U. S., 759, 760; see also authorities cited.)

I do not understand that this doctrine is questioned by the majority of the court. They only differed as to its applicability in that particular case. I do not understand that the Central Pacific Railroad Company is charged with a violation of any of the terms of its contract, unless it be claimed that it has failed to pay over the full amount of percentage required by the contract of the net earnings of the road. If it has failed in this matter, it is not a matter of any legal concern to the Government what the company has done with its own. If it has failed in this particular, and there is reason for sustaining an action, the proper mode of procedure for ascertaining the truth and enforcing the obligation, if violated, is to institute a suit, alleging the facts, and have an investigation in due course of judicial inquiry, and obtain a judgment for any amount withheld. If the full amount has not been paid over, it matters not to the Government how the balance has been expended. The company is liable like any other debtor upon a contract, and not otherwise. But if it be desirable to trace it, and subject the specific fund to the uses contemplated, and there be sufficient ground for so doing, the courts are the proper tribunals in which to effect that object. So, also, if there be a commission of waste upon the property upon which the debt is secured, the courts afford the proper remedy by a suit in equity to restrain the waste. These are the means afforded by the Constitution and laws to private parties for redressing their wrongs. And there is no different remedy provided for the Government on its contracts. In such proceedings there would be allegations which would inform the defendant what it is called upon to meet. In the language cited by Mr. Justice Field, from a case in the supreme court of Massachusetts, "like all other matters involving a controversy concerning public duty and private rights," it would in such proceedings "be adjusted and settled in the regular tribunals where questions of law and fact are adjudicated on fixed, established principles, and according to the forms and usages best adapted to secure the impartial administration of justice." (99 U. S., 761.) A bill in equity that seeks a discovery upon general, loose, and vague allegations is styled a "fishing bill," and such a bill would be at once dismissed on that ground. (Sto. Eq., Pl. 263, 264, and cases cited.) A general, roving, offensive, inquisitorial, compulsory investigation, conducted by a commission without any allegations, upon no fixed principles, and governed by no rules of law or of evidence, and no restrictions except its own will or caprice, is unknown to our Constitution and laws; and such an inquisition would be destructive of the rights of the citizen and an intolerable tyranny. Let the power once be established and there is no knowing where the practice under it would end.

These principles, it appears to me, are established beyond further controversy in the case of Kilbourn vs. Thompson (103 U. S., 168). At the time of the failure of the bankers, Jay Cooke & Co., they were largely indebted to the United States for moneys deposited by the Secretary of the Navy with a branch of the house in London. It was claimed that Jay Cooke & Co. were largely interested in a company dealing in real estate at Washington, known as the "real estate pool," and that a considerable amount of their funds was invested in that speculation. It seems to have been claimed, also, that there was something in the nature of a trust in favor of the Government in the moneys of Cooke, that had gone into the pool. A committee was appointed to investigate the matter and trace the money, with power to send for persons and papers. Kilbourn, supposed to be one of the managers of the pool, was summoned for examination. He refused to testify, on the ground that the House had no authority, in this manner, to inquire into the private affairs of the debtors of the Government, and others connected with them. He was thereupon, upon proceedings for that purpose, committed by the House for contempt, and held in custody forty-five days. After his release he sued the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and the investigating committee for false imprisonment, and recovered a large judgment of $60,000, afterwards reduced to $20,000, on the ground that the House had no authority to make a compulsory investigation, or to commit him for contempt, for the reason that these functions were judicial in their nature, over which the courts alone can have jurisdiction; and this judgment, as against the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, was affirmed by the Supreme Court. In the course of the decision the court says:

> If the United States is a creditor of any citizen, or of any one else, on whom process can be served, the usual, the only legal mode of enforcing payment of the debt is by a resort to a court of justice. For this purpose, among others, Congress has created courts of the United States and officers have been appointed to prosecute the pleas of the Government in these courts. (103 U. S., 193.)

Again:

> What was this committee charged to do? To inquire into the nature and history of this real estate pool. How indefinite. What was the real estate pool? Is it charged with any crime or offense? If so, the courts alone can punish the members of

Is it charged with fraud against the Government? Here, again, the courts, and the courts alone, can afford a remedy. Was it a corporation whose powers Congress could repeal? There is no suggestion of the kind. (Ib., 195.)

Again:

In looking to the preamble and resolutions under which the committee acted, before which Kilbourn refused to testify, we are of opinion that the House of Representatives not only exceeded the limit of its own authority, but assumed a power which could only be properly exercised by another branch of the Government because it was in its nature purely judicial. (Ib., 192.)

And again, after stating some particulars to which the powers of the House to punish extends, the court adds:

Whether the power of punishment in either house, by fine or imprisonment, goes beyond this or not, we are sure that no person can be punished for contumacy as a witness before either house unless his testimony is required in a matter into which the House has jurisdiction to inquire, and we feel equally sure that neither of these bodies possesses the general power of making inquiry into the private affairs of the citizen. (Ib., 190.)

After a thorough discussion of the case and an elaborate examination of the authorities the court announces its unanimous conclusion in the following terms:

We are of opinion, for these reasons, that the resolution of the House of Representatives authorizing the investigation was in excess of the power conferred on that body by the Constitution; that the committee, therefore, had no lawful authority to require Kilbourn to testify as a witness beyond what he voluntarily chose to tell; that the orders and resolutions of the House and the warrant of the Speaker under which Kilbourn was imprisoned are in like manner void for want of jurisdiction in that body, and that his imprisonment is without any lawful authority. (Ib., 196.)

In my judgment the principle established here covers fully the case under consideration. It establishes the position that the House of Representatives has no authority or jurisdiction to make a compulsory inquiry into the disposition of the funds of a conventional debtor of the United States; to inquire what this debtor upon a contract has done with his money, or to inquire into the private affairs of their debtors upon contract and those dealing with such debtors.

It is urged that the decision only goes to the point that private parties dealing with the debtor cannot be examined by the House; that the principle does not extend to the debtor himself, and especially to the Central Pacific Company, which is but a corporation; and that the present investigation only extends to what disposition it has made of its bonds and proceeds of lands received from the Government and the money arising from operating its road.

But there is no such limitation in the ruling. Says the court:

Can the rights of the pool or of its members, or the rights of the debtor and of the creditor of the debtor, be determined by the report of a committee or by an act of Congress? If they cannot, what authority has the House to enter upon this investigation into the private affairs of individuals who hold no office under the Government? (Ib., 195.)

That the Central Pacific Railroad is a corporation in no way beholden to the United States for its corporate faculties and franchises and not a natural person cannot affect the question.

It is but an aggregation of natural persons, and is as much a private party as if its constituents were united in a mere partnership instead of a corporation. This principle was maintained in the railroad tax cases (2 Saw., 166), and recognized by the Supreme Court at the argument of the same case on appeal. The bonds issued and the lands granted, as we have before seen, under the authorities cited, upon the completion of the road and the specific earnings of the road thereafter arising, were the absolute property of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, in which the United States had no legal concern whatever, except so far as their lien by contract covers them. There is no element of a trust, public or otherwise, in the case, as sometimes claimed, except in such sense as any common carrier, whether by ox team, mule team, horse team, railway or steam-ship, exercises a public trust, which is only subject to regulation under the police powers of the Government, State or national, as the case may require. That there is no element of trust in the case is ably shown by Mr. Justice Hunt, in U. S. vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company (11 Blatch., 403), and his ruling on this point was affirmed on appeal in 98 U. S., 570. But if there were a trust as claimed, the administration of the laws relating to trusts is the peculiar province of courts of equity. It is no part of the functions of Congress under the Constitution.

It is further urged that the judgment of imprisonment only was held to be beyond the jurisdiction of the House—that the House, or Congress, may investigate and call upon the courts when so authorized, as in the present act, to perform the judicial part of the work by enforcing the requirement of the Commissioners. But there is no such limitation in the language of the court, as will be seen by re-examining the passages quoted. On the contrary, the want of power in the House to punish is grounded on the want of power to investigate at all. It is directly said in the case cited that the House may punish for contempt in certain specified cases wherein the power is conferred by the Constitution, or when necessary to the proper execution of powers expressly conferred. And the court with reference to these instances, as we have seen, says in terms:

> Whether the power of punishment in either house by fine and imprisonment goes beyond this or not, we are sure that no person can be punished for contumacy as a witness before either house unless his testimony is required in a matter into which that House has jurisdiction to inquire, and we feel equally sure that neither of those bodies possesses the general power of making inquiry into the private affairs of the citizen. (Kilbourn vs. Thompson, 103 U. S., 190.)

That was a case like this, wherein the House was seeking to inquire into the private affairs of the debtor—seeking to ascertain what that debtor had done with his money, some of which he held as a depositary of the United States.

The decision was not put upon the ground that the House could not in any case punish for contempt, but on the ground that the House, in cases like this, had no authority to make the inquiry at all, and consequently there could be no punishment for contempt, either by the House or any other body or tribunal. Under the act now in question, Congress has undertaken to authorize a commission to make inquiry into the private affairs of its creditors—into the purpose, for which the debtor appropriated its own funds—which the Supreme Court, in the case cited, says it has no power to do, and the Commission is authorized to call upon the courts to aid it in its unlawful inquiry. The court is not called upon to act in any judicial proceeding, or investigation pending before it, or before any other court, in the discharge of its judicial functions, or any matter ancillary to the exercise of its judicial functions. There is no case or controversy at all pending before it of which the proceeding attempted to be authorized is a part, or to which it is ancillary or in any way pertinent. It does not appear to us that it is contemplated by the act that the court, in the investigation provided for, when called upon to aid the Commission shall inquire beyond the point whether the question asked is within the scope of the broad field of inquiry prescribed. And so the Commissioners claim, for they have conducted their investigation on that theory; and they insist that they are not bound by any rules of evidence or other principles of law observed by courts of justice, and by which the latter are guided and controlled, in the ascertainment of facts in the course of ordinary judicial proceedings. If this be the correct view, the court is expected to compel an answer irrespective of any other considerations. Even questions criminating the witness are to be answered, the only protection to the party being that his answer shall not be used against him in a criminal prosecution—a protection of little avail to any party who should disclose criminal acts upon which an indictment could be found, and should upon compulsion indicate other sources of evidence by means of which the acts disclosed can be proved; and such acts may also constitute offenses under the laws of the State, against which Congress can afford no immunity.

As bearing upon the power of Congress to compel an answer to criminating questions, or compel the production of private papers, see U. S. v. Boyd (116 U. S., 616). The principles therein established are equally applicable to the matter now under consideration. The court seems, therefore, to be called upon to compel, under process for contempt, an answer to any question which the Commission sees fit to ask within the scope of the inquiry attempted to be authorized by the act. If this be so, the court is, simply, made an instrument by this act, in the hands of the Commission, to execute its unregulated and unrestricted will. The court is made the ministerial agent of the Commission to perform its behests, whenever a witness refuses to respond to a question or produce papers within the range of the authority attempted to be given by the statute. The judicial department of the Government is, simply, made, by this act, an adjunct to the legislative department in the exercise of its political and legislative functions and powers to execute its commands, and that, too, in a matter into which Congress, under the decision cited, has no jurisdiction whatever to inquire. I know of no power in Congress to thus render the judicial department subordinate or ancillary to the legislative and executive departments of the Government, or to either of them. If there is any one proposition immutably established, I had supposed it to be that the judiciary department is absolutely independent of the other departments of the Government; that it cannot be called upon to act in part subordinate to any other department of the Government, or to a commission armed with exasperating inquisitorial powers over private affairs, unlimited by any consideration other than its own unregulated discretion. And so I understand the authorities to be.

The functions of the judges of the courts of the United States are strictly and exclusively judicial. They cannot therefore be called upon to advise the President in any interpretation of law, or to act as commissioners in cases of pensions or other like proceedings. (2 Sto. Con., sec. 1777, and cases cited.)

The courts in this instance are called upon not to exercise their ordinary powers in the administration of justice, but to assist Congress in the exercise of its deliberative, legislative, and political powers—to aid it by irregular and extraordinary, not to say unprecedented, means—to act as its agent in matters wholly foreign to the functions of the judiciary.

In my judgment, therefore, reason and the authorities cited establish beyond reasonable ground for controversy the proposition that there is no lawful authority in the Commissioners to compel answers to the various questions propounded and set out in the petition, or any of them, which the respondent refused to answer, nor can the courts be lawfully required to compel answers thereto.

I concur in the order made discharging the order to show cause.

CONCURRING OPINION.

SABIN, J., Concurring.

In announcing my concurrence in the opinions of the circuit justice and the circuit judge in this matter, I do not deem it necessary to review at any length the questions by them so ably and satisfactorily discussed and decided. In this application to the court to issue its subpœna and compel answers to be made to the various questions propounded, the court is called upon to exercise no judicial function or power, unless it be the very slight duty of determining whether or not the questions propounded are within the scope of the inquiry authorized by the act of Congress creating the Commission.

The act itself is most broad and comprehensive in its terms and imposes little, if any, restraint upon the Commission in the field of its inquiry. It scarcely needs the ruling of a court to determine whether the questions propounded, or any questions which may be propounded, by this Commission, are within the scope and purview of the act creating the Commission. But, aside from this most simple and limited duty, if duty it may be, the court has no judicial function to perform in this matter. It is simply called upon by the Commission to execute its will; to compel the attendance and obedience of witnesses—a purely ministerial duty—to serve as a convenient adjunct to the Commission. I cannot think that the courts were organized for any such purpose, or that they can be called upon to perform any such duty.

I need not advert to the nature and character of many of the questions propounded by the Commission, as appears from the record of this proceeding, answers to which the court is asked to compel. They seem to be quite in keeping with some of the extraordinary powers claimed and exercised by the Commission, and to fully confirm their assumed right to disregard the usual and established rules of evidence and principles of law in conducting their investigations. And this court is seriously asked to lend its aid in furtherance of such purpose. Many of the questions propounded would seem, from the record, to have been answered as fully as it was possible for the witness to answer them. I do not, however, press this consideration, as I think this decision should rest, not upon the simple fact as to whether or not the questions have been fully answered, but upon the broader and more important principles which underlie this whole subject, to wit: Has this Commission lawful right to hold this investigation; to propound these questions and compel answers thereto; to inquire into the private affairs of this respondent, or of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, or of any individual, and invoke the powers of this court to carry out such purpose? These questions are so fully and ably discussed in the opinions rendered that further comment thereon seems unnecessary.

It is not claimed that this is a "case" or a "controversy" between any parties to which the judicial power extends and over which it has proper jurisdiction. Neither the United States nor any other person is making complaint against this respondent or against said railroad company, in any form or manner known to judicial proceedings. No charges are made against the one or the other, by any one, of duties neglected or obligations unfulfilled. In regard to the very account immediately under consideration by the Commission, and in reference to which many of the questions were propounded to which we are asked to compel answers, it is shown that this account was fully settled and adjusted by and between the United States and said company long ago. Upon page

In the argument of the United States attorney, submitted in support of this motion, it is stated:

"Some question was made as to whether, as a matter of fact, the moneys covered by Mr. Stanford's vouchers had been included in the account rendered to the Government for the purpose of ascertaining the net earnings of the company. The Commissioners do not desire a decision based upon this question, and therefore concede, for the purposes of this motion, that the amounts in question have not been charged as against the United States, to the end that this matter may be disposed of entirely on its merits."

If this be true, what interest then is it to the United States, even if it had a right so to do, to inquire how or in what manner this account accrued or was paid? It concerns the United States in no manner—affects no pecuniary right or interest claimed by it, due or not matured. What interest then has the United States in this inquiry beyond that of any third party whose curiosity might prompt him to inquire into that concerning which he has no right or interest?

Is not this, then, a mere idle inquiry, not made in the interest of, or to preserve or establish the rights of, the Government or any person? Has not any third person, to gratify an idle curiosity, the same right to institute these inquries and invoke the aid of the courts in support thereof?

Courts do not entertain such investigations or inquiries, or lend their aid thereto. If this power of unlimited, inquisitorial investigation into the affairs of private corporations or companies, or of individuals—and it concerns all alike—shall be once established, who can say where it will end or what will be its limit of injustice at all times, but more especially when called into exercise in times of political excitement, or under the influence of partisan zeal or passion?

In the close adherence to well-settled principles of law, founded upon the just observance of the rights of all parties, will we not find the greatest safety alike to public and private rights?

Without further discussion of the subject, I fully concur in the opinion read and in the order made.

(Indorsed:) Read in open court August 29, 1887.

L. S. B. SAWYER, Clerk.

I, L. S. B. Sawyer, clerk of the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of California, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true, and correct copy of the opinions read in open court August 29, 1887, in the therein entitled matter.

Attest my hand and the seal of said circuit court this 26th day of September, 1887.

JUDGE OGDEN HOFFMAN'S DISSENTING OPINION.

IN THE MATTER OF THE

Application of the Pacific Railway Commission for an order upon a witness before it to answer certain interrogatories propounded to him.

OPINION OF HOFFMAN, JUDGE.

I am unable to concur in the decision of the court refusing to grant the order applied for by the Commissioners.

The application was made in precise conformity to the third section of the act of March 3, 1887.

That section, after conferring power on the Commissioners to require the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, etc., provides that "to that end they may invoke the aid of the courts," and power is given to the courts, in cases of contumacy or refusal of a witness to appear and testify or produce books, etc., before the Commissioners, to issue an order requiring him to do so. And any refusal to obey such order may be punished by such court as a contempt.

Similar and almost identical provisions are contained in the act to regulate commerce, commonly known as the interstate commerce act.

Section 12 of that act, after conferring upon the Commission power to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, etc., provides that "to that end it may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books," etc.

And the courts of the United States are empowered, "in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to a witness," to order him to appear before the Commission and produce the books or give evidence touching the matter in question, "and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof."

Section 6 of the same act confers upon the courts extensive powers to enforce the orders of the Commission by writs of mandamus and by injunction, disobedience to which is made punishable as for a contempt.

If the grounds on which the decision of the court in the present case are in great part based be correct its aid must be refused not only to these two Commissions but also to all commissions of inquiry created by Congress to obtain information, however necessary to enlightened legislation.

It is not suggested that Congress could constitutionally confer upon any such Commission the judicial power of adjudging a recusant witness guilty of and punishing him for contempt.

If the courts can afford no aid, the only source of information is testimony voluntarily furnished.

The great importance of the questions thus presented will be at once recognized.

It may be suggested that all requisite information will usually be offered to commissions of inquiry voluntarily, and therefore that compulsory process is unnecessary.

But the question is, Does the right exist, to be exercised when found to be necessary?

I think it clear, that the right to require information in aid of legislation is an appropriate and necessary means of enabling Congress to exercise its great and principal, if not sole, function. That it is, therefore, a power conferred upon it by the Constitution by necessary implication; and that as it can only be effectually exerted through and by the aid of the courts, it is the duty and right of the courts to furnish that aid, when required by law, upon notice to the witness, and after full and careful consideration whether the proposed inquiry invades any constitutional right, immunity, or privilege which the witness may claim.

If such a question should be presented I should go as far as either of my associates in maintaining the constitutional rights of the citizen against encroachment by the Commission, whether by its own volition or by direction of Congress.

The application of the Commission, "invoking the aid of the court," has been denied on the grounds:

1. That the duty imposed before the court is merely to enforce by its process the order of the Commission requiring the attendance or evidence of the witness, or the production of books, papers, etc., "relating to the matter under investigation." That the court is clothed with no judicial function whatever; that it is, in fact, degraded into the mere executive officer of the Commission, to be used as the blind instrument for the enforcement of its mandates.

If this be the true construction of the act, I should, without hesitation, unite with my associates in declining to perform so unconstitutional and degrading a function.

That the act will bear this construction, I admit.

That it is the necessary and reasonable construction, I deny.

It is a well-settled rule that when an act of Congress or of a legislature is susceptible of two constructions, one violative of the Constitution and of the private rights of citizens and the other obnoxious to no such objections, the latter interpretation shall be preferred, if for no other reason than a decent respect for the motives and intentions of the legislature.

It will be noted that the language of the act is not mandatory upon the courts, but permissive; it does not impose a duty; it merely confers a right. It is, that the court may, when its aid is invoked, issue an order, and the failure to obey such order may be punished as a contempt. The words must or shall are not employed.

The aid here invoked is that of a court.

Congress could not have been unaware or unmindful of the facts that the courts of the United States can not be converted in to mere instruments or executive officers of a commission of inquiry.

It seems to me more reasonable and more respectful to Congress to construe these provisions as conferring upon the courts the right to lend their aid only after full consideration and judicial determination of every question raised or objection made by the witness.

That it is its right and duty to consider and adjudge whether the question put to the witness is, in the words of the act, "relative to the matter under investigation; whether it violates his right to be protected from inquisitions into his private affairs or into his private papers; whether he has any personal privilege to refuse to answer, and, possibly, whether the question put or the papers required are only colorably in aid of contemplated legislation, but really an essentially inquisitorial investigation to subserve political or personal ends.

Every constitutional right of the citizen would thus be fully protected. And he would receive that protection where, as in all cases, he must ultimately look for it, in the courts of the country.

If I am right in this construction of the statute, the objection fails.

2. The second ground upon which the court has declined to lend its aid raises by far the most important question presented in this case.

It is held by the court that no jurisdiction has been given to it under the Constitution, nor can it be conferred by Congress, to entertain an application of this nature, because there is no "case" or "controversy" before it, such as is contemplated in the provisions which define the extent of the judicial power of the United States.

It will be noted that this ruling does not rest upon the alleged inquisitorial or other objectionable character of the investigation which the railway commission is directed to make.

It applies to all commissions of inquiry which Congress may create, and, in effect, denies to Congress the right to obtain information through the instrumentality of such commissions, except from witnesses who voluntarily appear and testify.

I am deeply impressed with the importance of this question, and that in differing from my associates I am liable to error. But it arises in this case and must be considered.

I do not for a moment question that, in the language of Judge Story—

> The functions of the judges of the courts of the United States are strictly and exclusively judicial. They can not, therefore, be called upon to advise the President in any executive measures, or to give extra-judicial interpretations of law, or to act as commissioners in cases of pensions or other like proceedings. (Story's Comm. on the Cons., sec. 1777.)

I of course am aware that, by the second section of the third article of the Constitution, the judicial power of the United States is declared to extend to the "cases and controversies" therein specified.

In the great case of Osborn vs. United States, the Supreme Court, speaking through Chief Justice Marshall, said of this article of the Constitution:

> This clause enables the judicial department to receive jurisdiction to the full extent of the constitutional laws and treaties of the United States, where any question respecting them shall assume such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it. That power is capable of acting only when the subject is submitted to it by a party who asserts his rights in the form prescribed by law.
> It then becomes a case, and the Constitution declares that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under the Constitution, treaties, and laws of the United States.

That the questions presented, or which might be presented, in this or other similar proceedings are eminently judicial in their character can not be doubted.

They have involved a judicial inquiry into the constitutional right of Congress to direct an alleged inquisitorial investigation into the private affairs of a citizen, or to compel the production of his private books and papers.

They might also have required the judicial determination of his right to refuse to incriminate himself, or to betray the secrets of the confessional or of professional confidence.

ey have also involved an inquiry into the relations of the Govern-to the aided railways, and especially the Central Pacific, and the of its legislative power with regard to them.
ey are, therefore, in the highest sense judicial in their nature.
ve they assumed such a form that the judicial power is capable ting upon them?
a certain sense the "subject has," in the language of Chief Justice hall, "been submitted to the court by a party who asserts his rights form prescribed by law."
e Commission asserts its right to obtain an answer to the questions to the witness.
hether that right exists, they submit to the decision of the court irected by law, and in the form of a petition asking its aid. That he court is authorized by law to afford if in its opinion the Com-ion has a right to put the questions and obtain an answer to them.
t it seems to be considered that to call the judicial power into vity, and especially its power to issue and enforce compulsory proto a witness, there must be a "case" where there are parties plain-nd defendant before the court in the usual form of litigation.
ch does not seem to have hitherto been the understanding of either legislative or judicial branches of the Government. No decision is in support of this construction of the Constitution.
e courts are empowered by law to issue upon the request or letters tory of a foreign tribunal compulsory process to obtain the testiy of a witness.
e power to assist each other in the administration of justice is said e inherent in all courts, and it is their duty to do so under the ty of nations.
t if the judicial power of the United States extends only to cases re the courts, between parties plaintiff and defendant, and if no er exists to issue compulsory process in aid of an inquiry, directed e made by a statute of the United States, I have been unable to ow that power can be invoked in aid of judicial investigations in eign country. Certainly the courts can possess no inherent power t as conferred directly or indirectly by the Constitution, and it is lly certain they can derive none from the comity of nations.
e laws of Congress also provide that compulsory process may issue tain the testimony of a witness in perpetuam rei memoriam.
e exercise of this power is not limited to cases actually pending in between parties plaintiff and defendant. It extends to cases re litigation is expected or merely apprehended.
all or many of the States extensive powers of investigation and iry have been confided to grand juries. In aid of these inquiries pulsory process is freely awarded and enforced by the courts.
Congress should see fit to confer similar powers on grand juries of United States and authorize them to invoke the aid of the courts uing compulsory process, would the law be deemed unconstitu-l except in cases where a prosecution had actually been comced against a party accused and held to answer by the committing trate?
e fact that grand jurors are officers of the court is immaterial. For uestion is, can the court issue compulsory process in aid of an ingation where there is no case between parties litigant before the t? If, as I believe, Congress could constitutionally authorize such tigations to be made and empower the courts to afford the aid h would alone render them possible, I fail to perceive why it can afford the same aid to a commission of inquiry created by law.

If the law had authorized the district attorney, on the report of the commissioners that a witness had refused to attend and testify, to file a petition in the name of the United States on the relation of the commissioners praying that the witness be cited to appear and show cause why compulsory process should not issue against him, a "case" would be made which would fully satisfy the conditions contended for, as necessary to the exercise of judicial power.

But surely the constitutionality of the exercise by the courts of the powers invoked by the Commission must be a matter of substance and not of form, and can not depend upon a slight change in the method of procedure.

The aid which the court is asked to furnish is not merely the expression of its opinion that the witness ought to answer, and a recommendation or even an order to him to do so.

It is to punish him by attachment if he fails to obey the order.

But in all proceedings against defaulting witnesses, the papers, though in the beginning entitled in the name of the parties litigant, are, when the attachment issues, entitled in the name of the State or the people thereof, or of the United States. (People vs. Ferris, 9 Johns., 160.)

Whenever, therefore, the court issues its process against the person of the witness, which alone renders its interposition effectual, a case is presented in which the United States is formally the prosecutor and the witness the accused or defendant.

But without insisting strenuously on the force of these observations, which relate to matters of form rather than of substance, and are intended to meet an objection essentially verbal in its nature, it is sufficient to say that in this case a controversy has arisen between commissioners, in the attempted discharge of duties imposed upon them by law, and a witness, as to their right to make and his obligation to answer certain inquiries.

That controversy has, as by law directed, been referred to the court for its decision.

The questions raised are not only judicial in their nature, but require a decision by the court upon the validity under the Constitution of a statute of the United States, and the court is asked to give effect to its decision by declaring the witness to be under no obligation to answer, or by ordering him to do so, and enforcing obedience by means peculiarly judicial in their character.

It appears to me that a "case" has been presented to the court within the judicial grant of the Constitution.

The reasons assigned by the circuit judge in his concurring opinion for refusing to make the order prayed for refer more particularly to the railroads whose affairs the Commissioners are directed to investigate, and especially to the Central Pacific.

It is held by him, in substance, that the Central Pacific Railroad Company is a State corporation, not subject to Federal control any further than a natural person similarly situated would be.

2. That, having complied with the conditions of the grant, it holds its bonds and lands subject to the lien of the Government, in the same way and to the same extent as a natural person would do.

3. That the relation of creditor and debtor exists between the United States and the company with like force and effect as if both were natural persons; the relation being private, and having nothing to do with the power of the Government as sovereign.

4. The United States can not institute a compulsory investigation the private affairs of the company, or require it to produce its books, etc., in any other way or to any greater extent than would be lawful in the case of private creditors and debtors.

The United States have the same remedy as a private creditor, and no other, to compel payment of moneys due or prevent waste of assets before the debt matures, and that remedy must be by a regular judicial proceeding in due course of law. And Congress has no power to institute a roving legislative inquisition into the affairs of the company to ascertain what it has done or is doing with its money.

Syllabus of concurring opinion of Sawyer, circuit judge.

The power of Congress to institute any compulsory inquiry whatever into the affairs of the aided railroads, even for the purpose of obtaining information necessary to the just or enlightened exercise of its legislative functions, is thus wholly denied.

In the case of Kilbourn vs. Thompson (103 U. S., p. 168) is much relied on in the opinion of both the judges of the court, a careful examination of that case, and of the points actually decided by it, becomes necessary.

The principal point decided in that case related to the judicial powers of either of the two branches of Congress.

It was held that neither house of Congress possesses any general power to punish for contempt.

That either house, in deciding on the election and qualifications of its members, has an undoubted right to examine witnesses and inspect papers, subject to the usual rights of witnesses in such cases; and it may be that a witness would be subject to like punishment at the hands of a body engaged in trying a contested election, for refusing to testify, that he would if the case were pending before a court of judicature.

This power, the court held, could not be exercised where the inquiry related to the private affairs of a citizen, as neither of the houses possesses the "general power" of making such inquiries.

The witness Kilbourn was a real-estate dealer in Washington, "and he was required to make statements in regard to his dealings with various persons who had had transactions with him, and to produce his books for the general inspection of the committee."

Statement of the case by Mr. Justice Miller, in his address to the alumni of the law department of the University of Michigan, June 29, 1887.

The nature of such an inquiry could not be mistaken or disputed.

The difference between it and the inquiry addressed to the respondent in this case is obvious.

"As to the existence or non-existence of the power (to punish for contempt)" in "aid of the legislative functions," the court expressly declines to decide (p. 189).

But it points out, with much emphasis, that no legislation was contemplated or was even possible on the subject-matter of the investigation ordered.

The resolution [it says] adopted, as a sequence of this preamble, contains no hint of any intention of final action by Congress on the subject. In all the argument of the case, no suggestion has been made of what the House of Representatives or the Congress could have done in the way of remedying the wrong or securing the creditors of Jay Cooke & Co., or even the United States. Was it simply a fruitless investigation into the personal affairs of individuals? If so, the House of Representatives had no power or authority in the matter more than any other equal number of gentlemen interested in the government of their country. By "fruitless" we mean that it could result in no valid legislation on the subject to which the inquiry referred. (P. 195.)

The difference in this particular, also, between the investigation directed by law to be made in this case and that ordered by the resolution of the House of Representatives in Kilbourn's case needs no comment.

The court further adverts to the fact that the matter to be investigated was pending in a court of justice, which had ample power to give redress to the creditors of Jay Cooke & Co., by setting aside the settlement made by the trustee, if for any reason it could or ought to be set aside. This was a purely judicial function, which could not be exercised by Congress nor conferred by resolution on a committee of one of the two houses.

I have mentioned these particulars to show how widely the case of Kilbourn differs in every essential particular from the case at bar.

The judgment contains no intimation that Congress might not, by statute passed under the ordinary forms of legislation, confer upon a committee of investigation appointed by either or both houses the right to issue or obtain compulsory process for the attendance of witnesses. Still less does it determine the principal question mooted in this case, viz, whether Congress can authorize a commission of inquiry, in aid of legislation, to invoke the aid of the courts to compel the attendance of witnesses, and can constitutionally empower and require the court to afford that aid after it shall have judicially determined that the witness has no valid excuse for refusing to attend or to answer.

As to the nature and the limits of the legislative power of Congress over the aided railroads, the case of course throws no light whatever.

It must be conceded that the United States occupy towards the aided railroads (or at least towards the Union Pacific) a twofold relation—that of sovereign and that of creditor.

> Their rights as a sovereign are not crippled because they are creditors, and their privileges as creditors are not enlarged by the charter because of their sovereignty. (U. S. vs. Union Pacific Co., 98 U. S., 569.)

In other words, it is decided in this case that the United States, like private persons, are bound by their contracts, and that they can not by legislation impair the rights of parties with whom they have contracted, or enhance their own in violation of the stipulations of their contract.

But that the United States retain extensive powers of legislation has been recognized by the Supreme Court in two important cases.

By the act of March 3, 1873 (17 Statutes, 509), the Attorney-General was peremptorily ordered to bring a suit in the name of the United States against the Union Pacific Railroad Company. The nature of this suit is thus described by Mr. Justice Miller (page 608):

> For the purpose of this suit the court wherein it is brought was vested with power and aided by modes of procedure which it could apply to no other. Parties are subjected to a jurisdiction to which the same court could not subject them in any other suit, and they are required to litigate their rights in a suit common to them and others, with whom they could not be joined under the rules governing such matters in any other case.

These provisions were held to be a valid and constitutional exercise of legislative power.

It must be admitted, therefore, that with regard to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, at least, the United States possesses something more than the powers and rights of a private creditor, and that, though bound by their contracts, they can aid their enforcement by special and exceptional legislation.

It may be observed in addition that the same act conferred jurisdiction "on the proper circuit court of the United States to hear and determine all cases of mandamus to compel said Union Pacific Railroad Company to operate its road as required by law."

The validity of this provision was not passed upon by the Supreme Court, but it is referred to by Mr. Justice Miller without any intimation that it was unconstitutional.

By the act of May 7, 1878, known as the "Thurman act," it was proided in substance that the percentage of net earnings to be paid by both the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific Railroad Companies should thereafter be 25 per cent. of the same instead of 5 per cent., and that the one-half of the earnings for services rendered to the Government by the respective companies, which, by the act of July 2, 1864, was to be paid to the companies, should be retained by the Government to constitute a sinking fund for the ultimate discharge of the indebtedness due to the United States.

This legislation was held by the Supreme Court as valid and constitutional.

The relations of the Central Pacific Company, as a corporation created under the laws of California, to the United States, were elaborately considered by the court, and the validity of the legislation with regard to it, as well as the Union Pacific Company, was affirmed.

In regard to the former company the court observes:

The California corporation was organized under a State law, with an authorized capital of $8,500,000, to build a road from the city of Sacramento to the eastern boundary of the State, a distance of about 115 miles. * * * No power was granted to build any road outside the State or in the State except between the terminii named.

By the act of 1862 Congress granted this corporation the right to build a road from San Francisco or the navigable waters of the Sacramento River to the eastern boundary of the State, and from there through the Territories of the United States, until it met the road of the Union Pacific Company.

For this purpose all the rights, privileges, and franchises were given this company that were granted the Union Pacific Company, except the franchise of being a corporation, and such others as were merely incident to the organization of the company. The land grants and subsidy bonds to this company were the same in character and quantity as those to the Union Pacific, and the same right of amendment was reserved. Each of the companies was required to file in the Department of the Interior its acceptance of the conditions imposed before it could become entitled to the benefits conferred by the act.

This was promptly done by the Central Pacific Company, and in this way that corporation voluntarily submitted itself to such legislative control by Congress as was reserved under the power of amendment.

I am unable to perceive how, while this decision remains the law, the right of Congress to investigate its affairs for the purpose of obtaining information in aid of legislation can be questioned.

The investigation ordered by Congress has been characterized as an inquisitorial and an unwarrantable inquiry into the private affairs of the citizen.

That some of the inquiries directed to be made of the officers, stockholders, and employés of the companies are obnoxious to this objection may be conceded. If so, the court would not compel the witnesses to answer them.

The questions which the witness declined to answer in no way referred to his private and individual affairs.

They referred to the disposition made of its earnings by the company of which he is the head. In these earnings the United States is interested to the extent of 25 per cent. of their net amount.

But, if I understand correctly the arguments of counsel and the opinions of the judges, the whole investigation seems to be regarded as inquisitorial and unwarranted.

It seems to have been overlooked that many of the inquiries directed to be made are in the interest of the companies, and presumably indorsed in the subjects of investigation at their instance.

The Commissioners are required—

To ascertain the average cost per annum of Government transportation in the region now traversed by the Pacific railroads between the year 1850 and the completion of said roads; also, the average cost per annum since such completion, and what additional facilities have been furnished to the Government and people by said roads; also, to inquire what discount the Pacific Railroad and its several branches were forced to make in disposing of the bonds to obtain the gold coin which was the currency of the country through which the greater part of said roads pass. Also, to ascertain the comparative cost of construction of said roads as compared with what they would have cost with the prices of labor and commodities prevailing five years preceding, or five years subsequent to the completion of said roads. Also, to inquire whether or not the Pacific Railroad was completed in less time than was allowed by law; and if so, in how much less time, and if the United States was benefited thereby. Also, to inquire if either of the Pacific railroads have been embarrassed and their earning capacity impaired by antagonistic local or State legislation. Also, to inquire whether the United States, since the Union and Pacific Railroad Companies accepted the terms proposed by Congress for the construction of the Pacific Railroad, has granted aid in lands for building competing parallel railroads to said Pacific railroads; and if so, how many such roads and to what extent such competing lines have impaired the earning capacity of the Pacific Railroad. Also, if the United States have contracts with branch roads controlled by either of said Pacific roads for carrying United States mails; and if so, what service has been performed by them, and what money, if any, has been paid for such service, and what remains due and unpaid; and if the United States, by failing to pay for such mail service, has embarrassed said railroad companies, or either of them, in paying their indebtedness to the United States. Also, to inquire if the several Pacific Railroad Companies have complied with the provisions of an act to alter, etc., * * * commonly known as to the "Thurman act;" and if not, in what particulars they have failed to comply. Also, to inquire what sums the Pacific railroads and their branches can severally pay annually on account of their indebtedness to the United States without imposing such burdens upon the people, and particularly upon the localities through which the roads pass, as to retard the development of the country.

The Commissioners are also directed to consider and report whether the interests of the United States require any extension of the time "for the performance of the obligations to the United States of said companies, or any of them.

* * * * * * * * * *

"And if in their opinion such extension shall be required by the interests of the United States, they shall submit a scheme for such extension which shall secure to the United States full payment of all debts due them from said companies, with a reasonable rate of interest, in such time as the Commissioners shall propose, having due regard to the financial ability of said companies, and the proper conduct of their business in such manner as shall afford efficient service to the public."

It will not be contended by any one, least of all by the respondent, that the investigation of the matters mentioned in the foregoing extracts from the statute is inquisitorial or offensive, or that it violates the rights of corporations or of their members as individuals.

On the contrary, that distinguished gentleman expressed in his communication to the Commissioners, in reply to their written interrogatories of May 12, 1887, the opinion that—

> The creation of the Commission charged by Congress with the duty of examining into the workings and financial management of all railroads that have received aid in bonds from the Government, * * * was an honest and candid admission by Congress that there were equities existing in favor of the railroads in question, which should be inquired into, and to the full benefit of which they are entitled.

And he adds:

> I know that such equities exist in favor of the roads I represent, and I am pleased that an opportunity has at length been offered us by Congress to present them in such form as to insure their full and impartial consideration both by it and the people at large.

When all the provisions of the act directing the investigations are considered, it does not seem wholly unworthy of the encomium bestowed upon it by the respondent.

Nor can I perceive with what justice the investigations, so far as the questions under consideration are concerned, can be described as instituted for the purpose of securing "a private debt not yet matured."

The labors of the Commission can give no additional security to the United States for the collection of its debt.

The Commissioners have no judicial powers. Neither the evidence taken by them nor their report would be admissible in a judicial proceeding. Congress may not adopt their conclusions of fact.

Their functions are limited to an inquiry into and ascertainment of facts to be laid before Congress, in view of legislation, possibly, and, as seems to have been expected, favorable to the companies.

But if my convictions had been less strong on the points I have discussed I should still have felt obliged to dissent from the action of the court, refusing the order prayed for.

It has been shown that the questions decided by the court are constitutional questions of grave, I might say transcendent, importance.

The doctrine enunciated in effect denies to Congress the right to invoke the aid of the courts to secure by compulsory process the attendance of any witness before any commission of inquiry, and to the court the right of affording that aid, if invoked.

The immediate effect of this decision, if followed, is to cripple, if not paralyze, the Commissioners in the discharge of a large part of their duties imposed upon them by law.

Much of the information sought for can only be obtained from the officers and employés of the railroads.

So long as those persons supposed they could be compelled to attend and give evidence, they freely responded to the summons of the Commissioners. But now, that they are advised that no power exists to compel them to do so, they will naturally decline to assume the odious attitude of voluntary informers against their employers, and will refuse to produce any papers or disclose any fact which might injuriously affect them.

If the witness had been ordered to answer and had refused, he would have been attached for contempt and committed to the custody of the marshal. From this custody he could have been at once released on habeas corpus, and held to bail in a nominal amount. The important questions raised could thus have been speedily submitted to the Supreme Court for final decision, without the slightest oppression or even inconvenience to the witness.

I know of no way in which the decision now made can be reviewed by that high tribunal.

It is declared by the Supreme Court in the Sinking Fund cases "that every possible presumption is in favor of the validity of a statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a reasonable doubt." (99 U. S., 718.)

Whatever may be thought of the validity of the reasoning by which I have attempted to maintain the constitutionality of this statute, it must, I think, be conceded, that the questions are novel and hitherto undecided, and that its unconstitutionality is at least doubtful.

In view of this fact, and of the far-reaching consequences of the decision, I considered it to be the duty of an inferior court not to pronounce against its unconstitutionality by a judgment which could not be reviewed or corrected by the Supreme Court, but, rather, to remit the question to that court for final solution; especially when the means of doing so were simple and speedy, and attended by no injury or inconvenience to any one.

[Order.]

At a stated term, to wit: the July term A. D. 1887, of the circuit court of the United States of America, of the ninth judicial circuit, in and for the northern district of California, held at the court-room, in the city and county of San Francisco, on Monday, the 29th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven.

In the matter of the application of the United States Pacific Railway Commission for an order to compel Hon. Leland Stanford to answer certain questions.—No. 5108.

This matter having been heretofore heard and submitted to the court for consideration and decision, and the same having been duly considered, Justice Field reads an opinion, and Judges Sawyer and Sabin concurring opinions, and thereupon it is ordered that the motion of the United States attorney, for a peremptory order upon the witness to answer the interrogatories propounded as set forth in the petition of the Railway Commission be, and the same hereby is, denied, and the order to show cause herein discharged.

[Indorsed.]

No. 5108. United States circuit court, ninth circuit, northern district of California. In the matter of the application of the United States Pacific Railway Commission for an order to compel Leland Stanford to answer certain questions. Certified copy of order.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a full, true, and correct copy of an original judgment entered in the above entitled cause.

(3) With respect to the quantity of land which is as yet unpatented to the companies mentioned I have to state that such quantities can not be given with accuracy, as many of the lands are, as yet, unsurveyed, and no complete adjustment, for the purpose of artaining the losses sustained by the several grants, by reason of settlements, entries, reservations, etc., has been made.

The number of acres granted to the companies in question is, however, estimated as follows:

To the Union Pacific Railway Company, 11,309,844 acres, of which 4,853,844 acres are in the State of Nebraska, 590,000 acres in Colorado, 5,016,000 acres in Wyoming, and [illegible],000 acres in Utah.

The grant to the Central Pacific Railroad Company is estimated at 8,000,000 acres, of which 1,600,000 acres are in the State of California, 5,100,000 acres in Nevada, and 1,300,000 acres in Utah.

The grant to the Kansas Pacific Railway Company is estimated at 6,000,000 acres, of which 4,000,000 acres are in Kansas and 2,000,000 acres in Colorado.

The Western Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company have selected practically all the lands within the limits of their respective grants which were subject thereto, except, perhaps, isolated tracts, the greater portion of which have been patented, for which reason no estimate of the number of acres granted to said companies is submitted.

(4) Copies of the lists of selections of lands filed in this Department by the companies named are also requested.

As there are, including the patented lists, 290 lists of such selections, embracing [illegible],000 acres, to prepare copies of which would, with the force which could be assigned to such duty, require at least three months, such copies have not been prepared. If, however, the commissioners still desire said copies, and will so advise this office, they will be furnished as soon as possible.

The following statement shows the number of acres selected by the respective companies which have not been patented, and are now awaiting examination by this office:

The commissions' letter is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. A. J. SPARKS,
Commissioner.

Agreement of the Transcontinental Association.

Resolved: (1) San Francisco and Portland shall be regarded as common points in the matter of rates to and from Eastern common or competitive points.

(2) The through rates via all routes to and from Portland, via San Francisco, and to and from San Francisco, via Portland, shall be the same upon business exchanged with Eastern common or competitive points in the United States or Canadas.

(3) All business passing through San Francisco to or from points north of the Oregon-California State line shall be delivered to the line of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, Pacific Coast Steam-ship Company, or Oregon Improvement Company, in consideration of which the companies named will give to the Southern routes a rebate of 20 per cent. from the tariff rate—which shall not be increased—between San Francisco or Portland and points north. It is further agreed that in the event of ocean competition between San Francisco and said Northern points, the steam-ship lines of the above-named companies will guarantee protection against rates made by other steam-ships not controlled, subsidized, or chartered by any of the lines parties to this agreement.

Rates on business to and from points north of the Oregon and California State line, when carried via San Francisco, except the business of Portland, and the canned-salmon business of Astoria, shall be made by adding to the Portland or San Francisco rate a charge which shall not be less than the local charge of the Northern Pacific Railroad between Portland and such points, nor more than the present established rates between San Francisco and such points, less the 20 per cent. rebate hereinbefore guaranteed.

(4) The through rates between eastern through or competitive points and points in California, other than San Francisco, for business forwarded via Portland, shall be made by adding to the through rates between said eastern points and San Francisco the current local rates of the regular established transportation lines, which may carry the business between said California points and San Francisco.

(5) All lines here represented solemnly agree to maintain the rates now in force, or which may hereafter be mutually agreed upon, between San Francisco and Portland, on the one hand, and eastern through or competitive points in the United States or Canadas on the other hand, without cut, rebate, or deviation in any manner, it being the understanding that the giving of passes or reduced fares to, or upon request of, or for account of shippers or consignees or their families, or to any person, for the purpose of influencing business, or the payment of any ticket commissions, shall be regarded as a violation of this agreement, subjecting the offender to the penalties hereinafter provided.

(6) From and after the date of this agreement no street commission or ticket rebate on east-bound overland tickets will be paid by the companies parties hereto; and connecting eastern lines shall be requested by the commission hereafter to be appointed to discontinue the payment of street commissions and rebates to passengers, and the making of any cuts whatever from established through rates; and should any such railroad company fail or refuse to comply with such requests, it shall be the duty of the commissioner to notify the Pacific coast terminal companies, which shall then suspend the sale of all tickets over the lines so failing or refusing for so long a time as the commissioner may direct.

And further, the Pacific coast terminal companies shall, through the commissioner, redeem (within five days from date of issue), at the full amount received by them therefor, any and all through tickets of their respective issues, purchased by or for passengers, at such times and under such circumstances as may be deemed best by the commissioner.

(7) All special contracts binding shippers to one or more of the parties hereto shall be immediately thrown open to each and every other party to this agreement, and contracting shippers shall be notified to that effect.

(8) A commissioner shall be appointed whose salary and expenses shall be paid jointly by the parties hereto in proportion as the earnings from the business subject to this agreement are shared by each.

(9) Said commissioner shall arbitrate all disputes arising under this agreement between the parties thereto, and his decision shall be final and binding upon all. Complaints by one or more parties against other parties hereto shall be made in writing to the commissioner, who shall promptly investigate and give judgment according to the facts, within thirty days, unless more time shall seem to be necessary for full inquiry and consideration upon the part of the commissioner.

(10) If any party hereto is adjudged by the commissioner to have deviated from the established rates, said party shall be fined for each offense three times the amount of earnings which would have accrued from the business had it been taken at the regularly established rates, but not less in any case than $500.

(11) Each party hereto shall deposit with some solvent bank, to the order of the commissioner, the sum of $5,000, and shall keep that sum so deposited. From said sum all fines shall be collected by the commissioner.

(12) The fines collected by the commissioner shall be distributed among the non-offending parties hereto in proportion to their earnings from the business, subject to this agreement.

(13) The commissioner shall have access to all books and papers of the parties hereto which have a bearing upon the Pacific coast traffic, which is the subject of this agreement.

(14) It is also agreed that, so far as practicable, the parties to this agreement will protect the through rates and carry out all instructions that may be issued by the commissioner in order to protect the through rates, so that one line may not have any advantage over any other line.

(15) Said commissioner shall be promptly supplied at the close of each day's business with a legible impression copy of the way-bills for all freight covered by this agreement, and shall be supplied by each of the parties hereto with such other statistics and statements, as he may desire, as to the business done by them and covered by this agreement.

(16) It is agreed that a new passenger tariff will be issued as soon as practicable, and in case the lines can not agree on rates the commissioner will settle all the differences that may come up, such as giving side rides and other matters. His action will be final.

(17) It is agreed that the subsidy now paid the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for steamers between San Francisco and New York shall be borne by the several companies here represented in the proportions of their revenue from the San Francisco business covered by this agreement.

(18) It is understood and agreed that the Pacific mail business between New York and San Francisco shall be managed fairly and impartially in the interests of all lines concerned, and shall not be used as a means of securing business for any one or more of these lines as against others, and that any complaints upon this subject shall be referred to and settled by the commissioner, subject to the same fine that is provided for the cutting of rates, it being understood that the commissioner's relations to the Pacific mail business between New York and San Francisco shall be the same as his relations to the other business which is the subject of this agreement.

(19) This agreement shall take effect October 1, 1883, and continue in force until December 31, 1884, or until ninety days' written notice shall have been given to the commissioner, by one or more parties hereto, of a desire or intention to withdraw therefrom.

Agreement of the Trans-Continental Association.

TOPEKA, KANS., November 8, 1881.

The agreement of the Trans-Continental Association, dated September 28, 1882, is hereby altered and amended to read as follows:

Section 4 is amended by substituting the word "Portland" for the word San Francisco in the last two places in said section in which the word San Francisco occurs.

Sections 1, 2, and 3 are canceled, and the following clauses substituted therefor:

Rates between San Francisco, on the one hand, and Galveston, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Kansas City, and intermediate points on the Missouri River and points common therewith, on the other, shall be the same as the rates between Portland, on the one hand, and Saint Paul, Minneapolis, Minnesota Transfer, Duluth, and Superior, and points common therewith, on the other.

Rates between San Francisco and the Northern Pacific Railroad's eastern terminals, and points east thereof via Portland, shall be made by adding to the agreed Portland rates, as herein provided for, the established ocean tariff.

Rates between points north of the Oregon and California State line and eastern points via San Francisco, shall be made by adding to the agreed San Francisco rates, herein provided for, the established ocean tariff.

In consideration of the foregoing, the Northern Pacific and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company shall be paid by the other lines, parties hereto, in the manner hereinafter provided, 6 per cent. of the gross earnings accruing to the said other lines on business between, or passing through eastern points herein named and San Francisco, except business received from or delivered to the Occidental and Oriental Steamship Company or the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, it being understood that the Northern Pacific Railroad and the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company share in the subsidy to be paid the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in accordance with section seventeenth.

Settlements to be made monthly, on receipt of the Commissioner's statement of the net balance.

It being understood that the Trans-Continental agreement, as now modified, shall not in any way affect the rights of the Oregon Short Line Railway Company, or the Utah and Northern Railway Company, under their contracts with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company.

Provided, That the Utah and Northern Railway shall not make lower rates to or from San Francisco via Portland, than the rates made to and from San Francisco direct by the parties hereto.

Provided, That whenever the percentages of any of the members of this association are hereafter changed, or whenever any new members are admitted to this association, the percentages of all the members shall be revised according to the rules of this association.

4. The through rates between eastern through or competitive points and points in California other than San Francisco, for business forwarded via Portland, shall be made by adding to the through rates between said eastern points and Portland, the current local rates of the regular established transportation lines, which may carry the business between said California points and Portland.

5. All lines here represented solemnly agree to maintain the rates now in force, or which may hereafter be mutually agreed upon, between San Francisco and Portland, on the one hand, and eastern through or competitive points in the United States or Canada on the other hand, without cut, rebate, or deviation in any manner; it being the understanding that the giving of passes or reduced fares to, or upon request of, or for the account of, shippers or consignees or their families, or to any person, for the purpose of influencing business, or the payment of any ticket commissions, shall be regarded as violation of this agreement, subjecting the offender to the penalties hereinafter provided.

6. From and after the date of this agreement no street commission or ticket rebate on east-bound overland tickets will be paid by the companies, parties hereto; and connecting eastern lines shall be requested by the commissioner hereafter to be appointed to discontinue the payment of street commissions and rebates to passengers, and the making of any cuts whatever from established through rates; and should any such railroad company fail or refuse to comply with such requests, it shall be the duty of the commissioner to notify the Pacific Coast Terminal Companies, which shall then suspend the sale of all tickets over the lines so failing or refusing, for so long a time as the Commissioner may direct.

And, further, the Pacific Coast Terminal Companies shall, through the commissioner, redeem within five (5) days from the date of issue, at the full amount received by them therefor, any and all through tickets of their respective issues, purchased by or for passengers, at such times and under such circumstances as may be deemed best by the commissioner.

7. All special contracts binding shippers to one or more of the parties hereto shall be immediately thrown open to each and every other party to this agreement, and contracting shippers shall be notified to that effect.

6. A commissioner shall be appointed, whose salary and expenses shall be paid jointly by the parties hereto in proportion as the earnings from the business subject to this agreement are shared by each.

7. Said commissioner shall arbitrate all disputes arising under this agreement between the parties hereto, and his decision shall be final and binding upon all. Complaints by one or more parties against other parties hereto shall be made in writing to the commissioner, who shall promptly investigate and give judgment according to the facts within thirty days, unless more time shall seem to be necessary for full inquiry and consideration on the part of the commissioner.

8. If any party hereto is adjudged by the commissioner to have deviated from the established rates, said party shall be fined for each offense three times the amount of earnings which would have accrued from the business had it been taken at the regularly-established rates, but not less, in any case, than $500.

9. Each party hereto shall deposit with some solvent bank, to the order of the commissioner, the sum of $5,000, and shall keep that sum so deposited. From said sum all fines shall be collected by the commissioner.

10. The fines collected by the commissioner shall be distributed among the non-offending parties hereto in proportion to their earnings from the business, subject to this agreement.

11. The commissioner shall have access to all books and papers of the parties hereto which have a bearing upon the Pacific Coast traffic, which is the subject of this agreement.

12. It is also agreed that, so far as practicable, the parties to this agreement will protect the through rates and carry out all instructions that may be issued by the commissioner in order to protect the through rates, so that one line may not have any advantage over any other line.

13. Said commissioner shall be promptly supplied at the close of each day's business with a legible impression copy of the way-bills for all freight covered by this agreement, and shall be supplied by each of the parties hereto with such other statistics and statements as he may desire, as to the business done by them and covered by this agreement.

14. It is agreed that a new passenger tariff will be issued as soon as practicable, and in case the lines can not agree on rates, the commissioner will settle all the differences that may come up, such as giving side rides and other matters. His action will be final.

15. It is agreed that the subsidy now paid the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, for its steamers between San Francisco and New York, shall be borne by the several companies here represented, in the proportions of their revenue from the San Francisco business covered by this agreement.

16. It is understood and agreed that the Pacific Mail business between New York and San Francisco shall be managed fairly and impartially, in the interests of all lines concerned, and shall not be used as a means of securing business for any one or more of those lines as against others, and that any complaints upon this subject shall be referred to and decided by the commissioner, subject to the same fine that is provided for the making of rates.

It being understood that the commissioner's relations to the Pacific Mail business between New York and San Francisco shall be the same as his relations to the other business which is the subject of this agreement.

18. This agreement shall take effect October 1, 1883, and continue in force until December 31, 1884, or until ninety days' written notice shall have been given to the commissioner, by one or more parties hereto, of a desire or intention to withdraw therefrom.

Resolved, That while it is the wish of all parties, members of the Trans-Continental Association, to continue existing schedules of rates for excursion parties from the East to the Pacific coast and return, all applications for such transportation rates and special arrangements be referred to and acted upon by the commissioner, who shall inform those interested as to routes, etc.

The above allowances to include baggage checked to local or intermediate points, the owner having paid through excess or extra baggage charges (if any).

All second-class or emigrant baggage to be checked only to actual destination of the passenger.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,
San Francisco, September 15, 1887.

DEAR SIR: In response to your request, I have made out, and hand you herewith, a diagram showing the lines of the Central Pacific Railroad, and the mortgages thereon. This diagram is in accordance with the idea expressed by you, as I understand it.

Very truly yours,

G. L. LANSING,
Assistant Secretary.

CHARLES P. YOUNG, Esq.,
Secretary U. S. Pacific Railway Commission, 10 Wall Street, New York.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,
San Francisco, September 8, 1887.

SIR: In response to your verbal request made at the last day of the session of your Commission in San Francisco, I hand you herewith statements regarding the freight and passenger traffic of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and associated lines, for the ten years ending 1880, stated annually, showing the decrease of rates and the increase of traffic.

Very respectfully,

G. L. LANSING,
Assistant Secretary.

Hon. ROBERT E. PATTISON,
Chairman Pacific Railway Commission, No. 10 Wall Street, Room 33, New York.

Statement of passenger traffic, rates, and gross receipts from same, on the Central Pacific Railroad and leased lines, and the same lines operated by the Southern Pacific Company, from April 1, 1885.

[C. P. R. R. Co.—Passenger traffic—1877-1886.]

Year.	Passengers carried one mile.	Miles of road.	Passengers carried one mile to each mile of road.	Rate per passenger per mile.	Gross receipts.
				Cents.
1877	181,715,306	1,788	101,907	3.02	$5,483,794
1878	178,723,225	2,119	84,350	2.95	5,264,913
1879	180,779,711	2,319	77,953	2.72	4,919,254
1880	191,415,400	2,467	77,590	3.04	5,810,794
1881	218,117,760	2,707	80,575	3.06	6,668,639
1882	255,824,362	3,041	84,125	2.92	7,474,216
1883	291,109,508	3,998	97,100	2.73	7,945,838
1884	275,084,110	2,957	93,011	2.63	7,236,570
1885	260,140,788	2,809	92,641	2.45	6,377,966
1886	325,814,000	2,860	113,921	2.02	6,579,561

The average rate per passenger carried one mile, for 1877, was 3.02 cents, as compared with 2.02 cents in 1886, a difference of 1 cent, or about 50 per cent. The average passenger traffic for the same time shows that for 1886 to have been about 13 per cent. greater than for 1877. The increase of passenger traffic is thus not commensurate with the reduction in rates.

The gross receipts from passenger traffic on all lines in 1886 was, at the average rate of 2.02 cents per mile, $6,579,561. Had the average rate for 1877 been paid on the traffic of 1886, the gross receipts would have been for the latter year $9,839,582, or $3,260,021 more than they actually were.

I hereby certify that the foregoing statement is compiled from the books and records of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company, and that the same is true, according to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Assistant Secretary C. P. R. R. Co.

1886	949,594,447	2,860	332,026	1.38	13,068,450

Average rate for 1877 was 2.71 cents per ton per mile, as compared with 1.38 in 1886, a difference of 1.33 cents, or about 100 per cent. The average traffic for the same time shows that for 1886 to have been but about 65 per cent. greater than for 1877. The increase of traffic is therefore not commensurate with the reduction of rates.

The gross receipts from freight traffic for all lines in 1886 was, at the average rate of 1.38 cents per ton per mile, $13,088,430. Had the average rate of 1877 been paid on the traffic of 1886 the gross receipts would have been $25,733,009, or about $12,644,579 more than they actually were.

I hereby certify that the foregoing statement is compiled from the books and records of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and Southern Pacific Company, and that the same is true according to the best of my knowledge and belief.

UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
GENERAL TRAFFIC MANAGER'S OFFICE,
Omaha, September 29, 1887.

DEAR SIR: In my examination the Commission asked an explanation of rebates paid on coal shipped from Eldon, and also rebates paid to the Clyde Mill, in Kansas. As I was not familiar with the cases at the time, I have since investigated them, and copy below the record, which will show why these rebates were allowed.

You will also find copy of the sworn statement of J. H. Ferguson, which shows why the Union Pacific company was forced to pay rebates to the Omaha and Grant and other smelting and refining companies on shipments of bullion. This should go into the record of my testimony as a sample of the competition we have had to meet in the past by rebate.

Yours truly,

THOS. L. KIMBALL,
Assistant to Vice-President.

CHARLES P. YOUNG, Esq.,
Secretary Pacific Railway Commission, 10 Wall Street, New York.

[Eldon Coal and Mining Company, Omaha. Hanson & Adams, Central City. Seven original expense bills herewith.]

OCTOBER 10, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Please reduce charges to $1.50 per ton from Ottumwa or Eldon, Iowa, to Central City, charging the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad 50 per cent. of the overcharge, using mine weight as basis of settlement.

It was necessary for us to make this rate of $1.50 in order to put Eldon coal down at Central City at the same price at which White Breast coal was being delivered.

Please give the matter immediate attention, as I have said to Mr. Ladd, secretary of the Eldon Coal and Mining Company, that we would make immediate refund.

Yours truly,

J. A. MUNROE,
Assistant General Freight Agent.

J. G. TAYLOR, Esq.,
Freight Auditor, Omaha, Nebr.

OCTOBER 10, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Please reduce charges to $1.25 per ton on basis of mine weights, Eldon or Ottumwa, Iowa, to Hastings. Charge the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad their proportion. We had to make this rate in order to meet the White Breast competition.

Your immediate attention please, as I have said to Mr. Ladd, of the Eldon Coal and Mining Company, that we would arrange to settle these claims promptly, and [illegible] these are the last claims we shall have of this character, for I believe the coal question is very nearly settled and that we shall be able in the future to make something out of the business.

Yours truly,

J. A. MUNROE,
Assistant General Freight Agent.

J. G. TAYLOR, Esq.,

LINCOLN, NEBR., July 6, 1887.

GENTLEMEN: Inclosed find copies of protests served on the Missouri Pacific, the Burlington, and Missouri River, in Nebraska, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroads, at this place; also the arguments with which we propose to go before the Interstate Commission.

While we have made no specific charge against the Union Pacific Railway Company, we implicate them in making the complaints, as being parties to the combination that exists to discriminate against this locality, and in favor of Omaha.

Please furnish me with a list of the rates given by Himebaugh & Merriam, commencing with 1883, and terminating April 5, last. This is for the information of C. T. Brown & Co., a grain firm located at this point. They state that they have thirteen elevators, which cost $50,000, on the line of the Union Pacific Railway; that during the year 1883 their rebate was 5 cents per hundred weight, but since that date the Union Pacific Railway has paid them but 2 cents per hundred weight when they transferred the grain. When they asked for special rates they were told plainly that they could have no special rates, but that they must sell to the Omaha firm. This they were compelled to do, much to their detriment, and against their wishes. This has been the situation since 1883.

Very respectfully,

J. E. UTT.

UNION PACIFIC INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE, Kansas City, Mo.

PROTEST NOTICE.

To the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, its agents and attorneys at Lincoln, Nebr.

You will take notice that I, or we, object and protest against payment of the excessive freight charges that have been and are now being enacted by your company to this city on and since April 5 last, from Chicago and common points, and Saint Louis, East Saint Louis, and common points on shipments from those points, and originating east thereof, to wit:

From Chicago and common points:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	B.	C.	D.	E.	Salt.
100	84	57	41	35	40	35	28	25	21	25

From Saint Louis, East Saint Louis, and common points:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	B.	C.	D.	E.
80	64	47	36	30	32½	27½	23	20	16

The following reasons are given to justify the action taken in this instance:

The rates and charges are unjust and unreasonable as compared with those to adjacent and competing points, for example: The rates to Louisville and Omaha are from Chicago and common points:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	B.	C.	D.	E.	Salt.
90	75	50	35	30	32½	29½	23	20	16	20

From Saint Louis and East Saint Louis:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	B.	C.	D.	E.
70	55	40	30	25	25	22	18	15	11

The distance from Saint Louis to Lincoln via your line is less than the distance to Omaha.

In establishing rates to Lincoln and Omaha the fact is disregarded by your line that substantially the short haul is within the long haul.

The present schedule of rates is a discrimination against this locality, and disregards the existence of similar conditions and like circumstances. Lincoln is a city of great commercial importance, competing with Omaha for supremacy in the same territory west of the Missouri River, and favored with many natural facilities superior to that point.

The rates from Chicago and Saint Louis to Lincoln are on a basis that will average 15 per cent. higher than the rates to Omaha. This is done by joint action and agreement of the Missouri Pacific, Union Pacific, Burlington and Missouri River, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railways and connections, being competing, and that have compromised their differences and placed the city of Lincoln on an extortionate basis by an unlawful combination.

The business of Lincoln has been fostered and developed by railway companies within the last twelve years, quoting Omaha rates openly and privately, thereby establishing a precedent that should govern existing tariffs.

Therefore we, or I, give final notice that in due time appeal will be made to the United States courts and the Interstate Commerce Commission for relief in the premises, also claims will be presented, and payment pressed, for reimbursements based on equitable rates of all overcharges that have accrued or may accrue on shipments made over your line since April 5, 1887.

Lincoln, Nebr., ——— ——, 1887.

PROTEST NOTICE.

To the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company in Nebraska, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company (owner), their agents and attorneys at Lincoln, Nebr.:

You will take notice that I, or we, object and protest against payment of the excessive freight charges that have been and are now being exacted by your railroad lines in this city, on and since April 5 last from Chicago and common points, or originating beyond—for example—from Chicago:

1.	2.	3	4.	5.	A.	B	C.	D.	E.	Salt.	Hard coal.
100	84	57	51	35	40	35	28	25	21	25	25

And on lumber from Chicago, 26 cents; Clinton, 24 cents; Minneapolis, 28 cents per 100 pounds, and from other points higher or lower rates according to established differentials based on the Chicago rate.

The following reasons are given to justify the action taken in this instance:

The rates and charges are unjust and unreasonable as compared with adjacent and competing points—for example, the rates to Omaha and Louisville, via your lines from Chicago, are:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	B.	C.	D.	E.	Salt.	Hard coal.
90	75	50	35	30	32½	29½	23	20	16	20	20

And on lumber from Chicago, 20 cents; Clinton, 18 cents; Minneapolis, 22 cents, per 100 pounds, other points taking the usual differentials based on Chicago, but all rates are at least 6 cents per 100 pounds higher to Lincoln than Omaha or Louisville.

A comparison of your existing freight schedules show that the rates from Chicago to Lincoln average 118 per cent. on the class rates, 130 per cent. on lumber, and 125 per cent. on salt and hard coal, above rates to Louisville and Omaha.

The distances via your lines are from Chicago to Omaha, 508 miles; Louisville, 510 miles; Lincoln, 541 miles; if the mileage Chicago to Lincoln was applied to the Louisville and Omaha rates on a proportionate basis, the rates Chicago to Lincoln would be 106 per cent. of the rates to those points; at present your lines charge and collect more per ton per mile on freight to Lincoln being long haul, than for the short haul to Louisville, the latter being included wholly within the former.

The current freight tariffs from Chicago to Lincoln are a discrimination against this locality, and disregard the existence of similar conditions and like circumstances, Lincoln being a city of commercial importance, competing with Omaha for supremacy in all territory west of the Missouri River, with many superior natural advantages over that point. The excessive rates to Lincoln are the result of collusion between the Missouri Pacific, Burlington and Missouri River in Nebraska, Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy (owner), Union Pacific, Fremont and Elkhorn Valley Railroads and connections, competing lines, compromising their differences, and placing this city on an extortionate basis by an unlawful combination.

Therefore, I, or we, give final notice hereby, that in due time an appeal will be made to the United States courts and the Interstate Commerce Commission for relief in the premises, also claims will be made and payment insisted on for reimbursement based on equitable rates for all overcharges that have accrued or may accrue on shipments made over your lines since April 5, 1887.

LINCOLN, NEBR., ——— ——, 1887.

———

Complaint is made against the Missouri Pacific Railway Company as follows: For unjust and unreasonable freight charges; extortionate freight rates; disregard for distance and the long and short haul; discrimination against this locality; disregard of precedent established prior to April 5 last; disregard for similar conditions and circumstances; disregard for Lincoln as a commercial center and rate-basing point, and an unlawful combination with other railways against the commercial, manufacturing, mercantile, and financial prospects of the city of Lincoln.

To the honorable Board of Railway Commissioners for the State of Nebraska:

Your petitioners respectfully show that the Lincoln Board of Trade and Freight Bureau are composed of all classes of prominent business men of this city, that the object of their organization is to promote commercial interests by all legitimate means they are able to command.

This city being located inland depends entirely upon its railways for transportation accommodations. Ten distinct lines reach this place, being a greater number than to any other point within the State; they were directed and built here because this is the natural commercial center of the State.

The railways reaching the city of Lincoln can, by acting justly, encourage its growth, or if unmolested, they can, by discrimination destroy its prosperity; it is evident they have adopted the latter course as they are favoring rival cities, and depressing the business of this place. For this cause the organizations named protest against this injustice, and appeal through your honorable body for relief.

Complaint is made against the Missouri Pacific Railway, a direct line, owned and controlled by the same company, and under one management from Saint Louis to Lincoln, Nebr., and doing business with connecting lines from Chicago to Lincoln.

1. The rates charged to Lincoln from Chicago, East Saint Louis, Saint Louis, and common points by the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, and its connections, on business from those points, and originating east thereof, are unjust and unreasonable as compared with adjacent and competing points. For example:

From Chicago to Lincoln:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	B.	C.	D.	E.	Salt.	Hard coal.	Lumber.
100	84	57	41	35	40	35	28	25	21	25	25	26

From Saint Louis and East Saint Louis to Lincoln:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	B.	C.	D.	E.	Salt.	Hard coal.
80	64	47	36	30	32½	27½	23	20	16	20	20

From Chicago to Weeping Water and Omaha:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	B.	C.	D.	E.	Salt.	Hard coal.	Lumber.
90	75	50	35	30	32½	29½	23	20	16	20	20	20

From Saint Louis and East Saint Louis to Weeping Water and Omaha:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	B.	C.	D.	E.	Salt.	Coal.
70	55	40	30	25	25	22	18	15	11	15	15

Again, the rate on lumber from Saint Paul and Minneapolis to Lincoln is 28 cents per cwt.; to Atchison, Saint Joseph, Leavenworth, and Kansas City, 22 cents per cwt. The Missouri Pacific Railway hauls this freight for the latter points over their line through Nebraska.

2. The distance via the Missouri Pacific Railway from Chicago, Saint Louis, etc., to Omaha is greater than to Lincoln, also the charge per ton per mile is greater than to Omaha and Weeping Water, and again, the short haul to Weeping Water is wholly included within the long haul to Lincoln.

3. Comparison shows that existing freight schedules from Chicago and Saint Louis to Lincoln average 18 per cent. higher on the class rates, 25 per cent. higher on salt and coal, and 30 per cent higher on lumber than the rates to Weeping Water and Omaha. Based on distance, the charge to Lincoln would be 99 per cent. of the Omaha rates via the Missouri Pacific Railway.

4. The railroad in question in extending from Falls City north, establishes Omaha rates by all lines passing through that section of Nebraska. As it approaches within twenty-five miles east of Lincoln, that territory is favored with so great differentials on all classes of freight, that it diverts trade legitimately belonging to this city. For example the dealers at those stations can, with equal profit, sell lumber $1.75 per 1,000 less, and coal $1 per ton less, and all other articles of trade are similarly affected to our detriment. Again, the comparatively low rates to adjacent and competing points discourages the investment of capital at this place. Parties wishing to engage in merchantile pursuits, or erect manufactories and distribute their goods over the entire State will not do so unless they can depend upon equitable tariffs to govern in collecting their merchandise and material from the east.

5. The present differentials imposed on Lincoln are higher than those in force prior to that date. The business of this city has been fostered and developed for the last twelve years by the railways, within that time, quoting Omaha rates, openly or privately, thus establishing a precedent that should prevail in framing existing freight schedules. Also, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company have charged, and now charge, Omaha rates to Lincoln from all other points south of Saint Louis, including New Orleans, points in Arkansas, Texas, etc. Again, they charge Omaha rates from points north and west of Saint Louis, for example, Kansas City, Atchison, Leavenworth, and Saint Joseph.

6. The excessive rates from Chicago, East Saint Louis, Saint Louis, and east thereof, [illegible] the result of collusion between the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad in Ne[illegible]; and the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railroad; (owner), the Missouri Pa[illegible], the Union Pacific, and the Fremont, Elkhorn, and Missouri Valley Railways and [illegible]nections, competing lines, compromising their differences, and placing this city on [illegible] extortionate basis by unlawful combination.

7. The current freight tariffs referred to are a discrimination against this locality, and [illegible]gard the existence of similar conditions and circumstances. Lincoln is favored with [illegible]questionably superior natural advantages. She is now a city, strong in commercial [illegible]portance, striving to compete with other cities and localities in all territory west of [illegible] Missouri River. With a population of 43,000, her business enterprises include five [illegible] wholesale grocery houses, wholesale hardware houses, numerous implement, and [illegible] distributing houses in proportion; also two packing houses, and various extensive [illegible]nufactories; also, all the State institutions, including the asylums and penitentiary, [illegible]e latter containing several hundred men, engaged in convict labor—does this not [illegible]clusively establish Lincoln as a large commercial center?

Railways, in framing freight tariffs, make commercial centers rate-basing points; the [illegible]ner towns are regulated by grading between the cities to which the rate lines are [illegible]wn and the pins placed. In doing this they give each place an equitable position. [illegible] demonstrate: New York is the initial basing-point at the seaboard. Boston rates are [illegible]mewhat higher, Philadelphia rates lower, and Baltimore still less, being regulated by [illegible]e ocean rates, but it is intended to place each of these points in line for an even race [illegible].

The rates are based on Buffalo, etc., and Chicago, the latter being the great center of [illegible]ade west. Other centers are based on that point. This is true of Indianapolis (an [illegible]hird capital city, protected fully by the railways). Peoria is 108 per cent. of Chicago; [illegible]aint Louis, Hannibal, Keokuk, Quincy, and Burlington being 116 per cent. of Chicago. [illegible]ll intermediate towns are graded. The above rates are from seaboard. Now consider [illegible]e rates from Chicago to western commercial centers. The rates from Chicago to Du[illegible]que and Muscatine and points between are the same. Cedar Rapids, Iowa, 85 miles [illegible]est of Clinton, is slightly increased. For example, to Clinton, 145 miles west of Chi[illegible]go, fifth class, is 18 cents per hundred-weight; to Cedar Rapids it is 20 cents, and [illegible]Marshalltown is slightly advanced, but at all times is the same as Des Moines, because [illegible]hese two cities compete for the trade of central Iowa, and must be on the same footing. [illegible]Reaching the Missouri River, we find commercial centers from Kansas City to Omaha, [illegible]inclusive, that were started when steam-boats made the rates (a factor that disappeared [illegible]fifteen years ago, thus wiping out the river as a rate-making power). Those cities are [illegible]all placed in line to compete equally in territory beyond. Sioux City, with much less [illegible]importance than Lincoln, is based on Omaha. Minneapolis and Saint Paul were con[illegible]sidered in this connection. April 5 their rates were made 89 per cent. of Omaha, but [illegible]they have since been reduced, because the Lake Superior route, via Duluth, broke the [illegible]rate combination. The next commercial centers recognized are Denver and Pueblo; [illegible]they are placed on the same basis from the east, and given an equal show for the business [illegible]of Colorado. Finally, consider the Pacific coast. All commercial centers there are [illegible]equally favored, viz: Portland, San Francisco, Sacramento, San José, Los Angeles, and [illegible]San Diego. The question naturally arises, why has Lincoln been overlooked? Why [illegible]has she not stand in the same relation to Omaha that Muscatine does to Rock Island, [illegible]Clinton to Dubuque, Marshalltown to Des Moines, Pueblo to Denver, and San José to [illegible]San Francisco? There can be no doubt about the commercial importance of the place. [illegible]Other cities are recognized that are smaller in size, and do less business. The answer [illegible]is, the Lincoln Board of Trade is that there is an extortionate combination against [illegible]the city, formed by the railway companies, and they ask to have the same broken up, [illegible]and Lincoln placed in line with other localities and Missouri River points, so that she [illegible]may have even facilities in competing for the trade of Nebraska.

8. It is right, just, and natural that Lincoln should be put on an equal basis with [illegible]Missouri River points to compete for the commerce within the State of Nebraska. It [illegible]prevents combination and centralization, acting as an evener or equalizer. Circum[illegible]stances favor this, and the former practices of the railroad companies justify it. Lin[illegible]coln was given Missouri River rates prior to the purchase of the Atchison and Nebraska [illegible]Railway by the Burlington and Missouri River, or the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy [illegible]Railroad (also, when the bonds were voted for the building of the Missouri Pacific Rail[illegible]way to this city, it was with the tacit understanding that Missouri River rates were to [illegible]prevail). Therefore, Lincoln has a right to the continuation of those rates. Capital [illegible]has been located here, and industries established on the faith that those rates would be [illegible]continued; it is unjust to destroy these industries and this capital by a discrimination [illegible]made against this city. The volume of business, constantly increasing, demands [illegible]reduction in rates.

Your petitioners therefore pray that a hearing be had on the matters complained of, and in case that you should determine that you have not the jurisdiction, or the power to correct the wrongs complained of, that you forward the same, with the proofs thereof, to the Interstate Commission.

Complaints are made against the Burlington and Missouri River, in Nebraska, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy (owner) Railways, as follows: For unjust and unreasonable freight charges, extortionate freight rates, disregard for distance and the long and short haul, discrimination against this locality, disregard for precedent established prior to April 5 last, disregard for similar conditions and circumstances, disregard for Lincoln as a commercial center and rate-basing point, and an unlawful combination with other railways against the mercantile, manufacturing, and financial prosperity of the city of Lincoln, Nebraska.

To the honorable Board of Railway Commissioners for the State of Nebraska:

Your petitioners respectfully state that the Lincoln Board of Trade and Freight Bureau are composed of all classes of prominent business men of this city, and that the object of its organization is to promote its commercial interests by all legitimate means they are able to command.

The city, being located inland, depends entirely upon its railways for transportation accommodations. Ten distinct lines reach this place, being a greater number than to any other point within the State. They were directed and built here because this is the natural commercial center of the State.

The railways reaching the city of Lincoln can, by acting justly, encourage its growth, or if unmolested they can, by discrimination, destroy its prosperity. It is evident they have adopted the latter course, as they are favoring rival cities and depressing the business of this place. For this cause the organizations named protest against the injustice and appeal through your honorable body for relief.

Complaint is made against the Burlington and Missouri River, in Nebraska, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy (owner) Railway Companies—a direct line owned and controlled by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company from Chicago, Ill., to Lincoln, Nebr.—and the following facts are presented to support the same:

The rates charged to Lincoln from Chicago and common points by the Burlington and Missouri River, in Nebraska, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy (owner) Railway on business from those points, and originating beyond, are unjust and unreasonable compared with the rates to adjacent and competing points. For example:

From Chicago to Lincoln:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	B.	C.	D.	E.	Salt.	Hard coal.
100	84	57	41	35	40	35	28	25	21	25	25

And on lumber from Chicago, 26 cents; Clinton, 24 cents, and Minneapolis, 23 cents per hundredweight, and from other points higher or lower rates, according to the established differentials based on the Chicago rate.

From Chicago to Omaha and Louisville:

1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	B.	C.	D.	E.	Salt.	Hard coal.
90	75	50	35	30	32½	29½	23	20	16	20	20

And on lumber from Chicago, 20 cents; Clinton, 18 cents, and Minneapolis, 18 cents per hundredweight, other points taking the usual differentials based on Chicago, but al-are at least 6 cents per hundredweight higher to Lincoln than to Omaha or Louis-

3. A comparison of the existing freight schedules of said lines shows that the rates from Chicago to Lincoln average 18 per cent. on the class rates, 30 per cent. on lumber, and 35 per cent. on salt and hard coal above the rates to Louisville and Omaha.

4. The distances via said lines are from Chicago to—

	Miles.
Omaha	508
Louisville	510
Lincoln	541

5. If the mileage from Chicago to Lincoln was applied to the Louisville and Omaha rates on a proportionate basis, the rates from Chicago to Lincoln would be 106 per cent. of the rates to those points. At present said lines charge and collect more per ton per mile on freight to Lincoln, being the long haul, than the short haul to Louisville, the latter being usually included within the former.

6. The current freight tariffs from Chicago to Lincoln are a discrimination against this city, and disregard the existence of similar conditions and like circumstances, Lincoln being a city of commercial importance, competing with Omaha for supremacy in all territory west of the Missouri River, with many superior natural advantages over that point. The excessive rates to Lincoln are the result of collusion between the Missouri Pacific, Burlington and Missouri River in Nebraska; Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad; Union Pacific, and Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railways and connections, competing lines, compromising their differences, and placing this city on an unreasonable basis by unlawful combination.

7. The comparatively low rates to adjacent and competing points discourages the investment of capital at this place. Parties wishing to engage in mercantile pursuits or erect manufactories and distribute their goods over the entire State will not do so unless they can depend upon equitable tariffs to govern in collecting their merchandise and material for the East.

8. The present differentials imposed on Lincoln are higher since April 5 last than when in force prior to that date. The business of the city has been fostered and developed during the last twelve years by the railways within that time quoting Missouri River rates openly and privately, thus establishing a precedent that should prevail in framing existing freight schedules.

9. Lincoln is a large commercial center, and should be classed by the railways as a distributing point instead of being graded with the local stations from Louisville west. This city has over 40,000 population. Her business enterprises include five large wholesale grocery houses, wholesale hardware houses, numerous implement and other distributing houses in proportion; also two packing-houses, and various extensive manufactories. Again, all the State institutions are located here, including the asylums, etc., and the penitentiary, the latter containing several hundred men engaged in convict labor. Does this not make Lincoln a prominent commercial center? Railways (except in this instance) in framing freight tariffs make commercial centers rate-basing points, the smaller towns being regulated by grading between the cities. In doing this each city is given an equitable position. To demonstrate, New York is the basing point at seaboard; Boston rates are higher, Philadelphia and Baltimore lower, being regulated largely by the ocean rates, the intention being to place each of these points on an equality. Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and Chicago are rate-basing points. A large number of western cities are based on Chicago. In making the rates from the seaboard, Peoria is 10 per cent. of Chicago; Saint Louis, Hannibal, Keokuk, Quincy, and Burlington 20 per cent. of Chicago, etc. Again, rates are the same from Chicago to Muscatine, Rock Island, Davenport, Moline, Clinton, and Dubuque; also Minneapolis and Saint Paul, Minn., are equalized. In interior Iowa, Marshalltown and Des Moines are placed on the same footing. Reaching the Missouri River, we find commercial centers from Sioux City to Sioux City, inclusive, that were started when steam-boats made the rates (a factor that disappeared years ago, thus disposing of the river as a rate-making power). These cities are all enabled to compete on an equality in territory beyond. The next commercial centers west recognized are Pueblo and Denver. They are placed on the same basis from the east, so as to successfully compete in Colorado. Finally, the Pacific coast cities are equally favored, viz: Portland, San Francisco, Sacramento, San José, Los Angeles, and San Diego. The question naturally arises, why has Lincoln been overlooked? Why does this city not stand in the same relation to other points that Burlington, Davenport, and Muscatine do to each other, Clinton to Dubuque, Minneapolis to Saint Paul, Marshalltown to Des Moines, Pueblo to Denver, Albuquerque to Santa Fé, Sacramento to San Francisco? There can be no question about the commercial importance of the place. Other cities of less magnitude are recognized.

8. It is an established principle in making interstate distance and joint tariffs that as the distance increases the ratio of the rates decreases. In making the schedules to Lincoln this fact has been wholly ignored, although it is kept in view at places within 30 miles of this city. Take fifth class from Chicago, for example, to Burlington, 210 miles, 21 cents, to the rate-basing line in Nebraska, 510 miles, 30 cents, and to Lincoln, 541 miles, 35 cents. Again, from Chicago to Clinton, Iowa, 145 miles, fifth class, 15 cents; Cedar Rapids, 219 miles, 20 cents; Marshalltown and Des Moines, 25 cents; rate-basing line in Nebraska, 30 cents. Lincoln should not exceed 31 cents, even if subjected to the severest grading within reason.

9. It is right, just, and natural that Lincoln should be put on an equal basis with Missouri River points to compete for the commerce within the State of Nebraska. It would prevent centralization and combination, acting as an evener or equalizer. Circumstances favor this, and the former practices of the railways justify it. Again, Lincoln was given Missouri River rates prior to the purchase of the Atchison and Nebraska by the Burlington and Missouri River in Nebraska, or the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railroad. Therefore Lincoln has a right to the continuation of those rates. Capital was located here and industries established on the faith that those rates would be continued. It is unjust to destroy those industries and capital by discriminations in rates against this city. The volume of business constantly increasing demands equality in rates.

Your petitioners therefore pray that a hearing be had on the matters complained of, and in case that you should determine that you have not the jurisdiction or the power to correct the wrongs complained of, that you forward the same with the proofs thereof to the Interstate Commission.

NOTE.—Since October, 1883, the apportionments shown are those of the commissioner of the Trans-Continental Association. Prior to that date, the proportions shown for the Central Pacific, Southern Pacific, Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, and Texas and Pacific Companies would be subject to correction on account of any settlements which these roads may have made with other roads or with each other. Such corrections would not affect the balance of guaranty, or the Union Pacific's proportion.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

AGREEMENT TO FUND PAST-DUE COUPONS OF FIRST-MORTGAGE BONDS.

This agreement, made this 1st day of April, in the year of our Lord 1879, between the subscribers hereto, who are respectively holders of the past-due coupons of the first-mortgage bonds of the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company, now called the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, to the amount set opposite their respective names, parties of the first part, the said Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, party of the second part, and Henry Day and Oliver Ames as trustees, parties of the third part, witnesseth:

Whereas there are now existing arrears of interest upon sixteen hundred of the first-mortgage bonds of the said party of the second part of $1,000 each, from the 1st day of May, 1873, to the date hereof, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum; and

Whereas the coupons on each of said bonds representing such interest became due, one on the 1st day of November, 1873, and one half-yearly thereafter, until and including the 1st day of November, 1878; and

Whereas said party of the second part desires to defer and secure the payment of said coupons already due, and to become due, on all said bonds up to and including the 1st day of November, in the year of our Lord 1878, in the manner hereinafter stated; and

Whereas said company has agreed to acknowledge its indebtedness to the owners of said past-due coupons for the face of the same and interest thereon from the time the same became due at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum until the 1st day of May, 1879, which interest amounts to the sum of $110,880; and

Whereas this indebtedness for coupons on said first-mortgage bonds, 1,600 in number, up to and including the said 1st day of November, 1878, amounts to $528,000 exclusive of interest on the same; and

Whereas said party of the second part desires to have said coupons funded and held unpaid without prejudice to their security under the mortgage which has been heretofore made to secure said first-mortgage bonds:

Now, therefore, this agreement witnesseth—

1. That the parties of the first part, each acting in his own behalf as to the coupons by him held, do hereby agree to deposit such of said coupons of said first-mortgage bonds as they may respectively own to the number set opposite their respective names, with the said parties of the third part as trustees, to be held by them in the manner and with the effect and for the purposes and trusts hereinafter mentioned, without prejudice to the rights and security of the holders of said coupons under the mortgage made by the party of the second part to John E. Williams and B. W. Bonney to secure said first-mortgage bonds, bearing date the 1st day of May, 1865, which security shall continue and may be enforced upon the contingencies hereinafter named.

Said coupons shall be held by the said trustees uncanceled, and for the benefit and security of holders of certificates and bonds hereinafter mentioned, it being understood that all the coupons so deposited shall form one fund for the joint and equal security of all of the said certificates and funded coupon bonds issued in place of the same, and representing the said coupons and the interest on the same as hereinafter mentioned, and the interest of any one party holder of any of said bonds or certificates in the said coupons shall not attach to any specific coupon, but only to an aliquot part or proportion of the whole of the same, such proportion being the same as the par value of said funded coupon bonds and certificates herein described which he may hold shall bear to the whole issue of such funded coupon bonds and certificates, without regard to their being the specific coupons that were deposited by him.

2. Said coupons shall be held upon the trusts and agreements that whenever the whole issue of said funded coupon bonds and certificates, interest and principal, is paid by the company, the said funded coupons shall be delivered up to said company to be canceled, and subject to the further trusts hereinafter named.

3. In case said company shall fail to pay the coupons upon any of said funded coupon bonds, or interest upon any of the certificates which may represent any aliquot part of said funded coupon bonds, at the time when the same shall become due, and after the default shall have continued for the space of sixty days, then the owner and holder of any of said funded coupon bonds or of any of said certificates may present said bond or bonds, or certificate or certificates, to said trustees, who shall return or exchange for them the full amount of the same in coupons, which at their face value, together with interest thereon from the time they respectively become due until the 1st day of May, 1879, at 7 per cent. per annum, shall be equal to the amount of the face value of the said funded coupon bonds or certificates delivered up.

In case the amount of the funded coupon bonds or certificates, with the interest added, can not be evenly adjusted, and there shall be a part of a coupon unadjusted on such exchange, then such trustee shall issue a certificate to the said holder stating that he is entitled to such an aliquot part of one coupon, which with interest on the same from the time the coupon became due till May 1, 1879, will equal the amount of such last-named certificate, and that the holder of such certificate shall be entitled to an equitable and pro rata interest in the coupon remaining in their hands, and to the amounts received on the same; and the trustees shall distribute all money they shall receive on the same to the parties equitably entitled thereto pro rata according to the amount of certificates held by each.

In case of a distribution of coupons, as above named, the same shall be distributed as nearly as possible in sets of eleven coupons belonging to one original first-mortgage bond, together, and the trustees shall have the authority to make the selection of coupons which shall be returned to each party claiming the same.

4. In case said first mortgage shall be foreclosed and the property sold, the distributive share upon such sale which shall be decreed to be paid on account of the said coupons so held by the trustees and in their possession shall be received by them and shall by them be paid over to the holders of said funded coupon bonds and certificates, each of said holders receiving his pro rata and equitable share of the same.

5. Said party of the second part hereby agrees to issue bonds, to be called funded coupon bonds, in the sum of $1,000 each, and certificates in such amounts as may be required, which together shall be equal to the amount of said funded coupons, together with the interest on such coupons from the time they become due, respectively, until May 1, 1879.

Said bonds shall bear date the 1st day of April, 1879, and shall be payable on the 1st day of May, 1895, and shall bear interest at the rate of 7 per centum per annum from May 1, 1879, payable on the 1st day of November and May of each year, according to interest warrants or coupons attached.

The form of said bonds and coupons shall be substantially as follows:

$1,000. No. ———

The Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, formerly the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company.

FUNDED COUPON BOND.

This bond issued for funded interest on the first-mortgage bonds of the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company.

The Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, for value received, promises to pay to bearer $1,000 in United States gold coin (not inferior to the present standard), at its office in the city of New York, on the 1st day of May, 1895, together with interest thereon from the 1st day of May, 1879, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly, on the 1st days of November and May in each year, according to the interest warrants or coupons hereto annexed.

This bond is issued to represent an aliquot part of the amount of funded interest or coupons of the first-mortgage bonds of the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company, together with the interest on said coupons from the day the same became due, respectively, until the 1st day of May, 1879, which coupons have been deposited with Henry Day and Oliver Ames, trustees, to be held as collateral security to this bond, under and according to the provisions of an agreement bearing date the 1st day of April, 1879, made between certain holders of the coupons of the first-mortgage bonds of the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company of the first part, the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company of the second part, and said Henry Day and Oliver Ames, as trustees, of the third part, which agreement has been executed in duplicate, one copy being held by said railroad company and the other copy being held by said trustees.

Said coupons are to be held by said trustees uncancelled, with full preservation of the existing mortgage-lien therefor, but with suspension of the remedy therein as provided by said agreement; it being also agreed and provided in said agreement that in case of default in the payment of this bond at maturity thereof, or in case of a continued default in the payment of any coupon hereto attached for sixty days after the same shall have become due and payable, that then the amount of said funded coupons which, with interest thereon from the time the same became due, respectively, to May 1, 1879, shall equal the par value of this bond, shall, upon demand of the holder of this bond, be surrendered to him in exchange for this bond; and further, that in case of the foreclosure of the said first mortgage, the holder of this bond shall be entitled to an equitable and pro rata share of the amount received upon said funded coupons by said trustees.

This bond is not to be issued nor become valid without the indorsement of said trustees, Henry Day and Oliver Ames, to the effect that this bond is issued under and according to the provisions of the above-named agreement.

In witness whereof, the said Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company has hereunto affixed its corporate seal and caused the same to be attested by the signature of its president and secretary the 1st day of April, 1879.

——— ———,
President.

——— ———,
Secretary.

The coupons to be annexed to the said bonds are substantially as follows:

The Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company hereby promises to pay to bearer, at its office in the city of New York, $35, in gold coin, lawful money of the United States, of the standard of 1879, on the —— day of ———, 18—, for semi-annual interest on one funded coupon bond numbered ——.

——— ———,
Treasurer.

Said party of the first part further agrees that it will deliver to the holders of any of said coupons, who shall fund the same, an amount of said funded coupon bonds equal in par value to said coupons so funded, together with interest thereon, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, from the time they respectively become due till May 1, 1879.

In case any holder of coupons who shall make the deposit as aforesaid with the said parties of the third part shall be entitled under the provisions herein to the fractional part of a funded coupon bond, then the said company shall issue its certificate under its seal, stating that the company is indebted to the holder of said certificate to a certain portion of another bond. Said certificate shall bear interest at the same rate, and shall be paid at the same time and place as the interest on such funded coupon bond is paid. But such certificates shall be assignable only upon the books of said railroad company in the city of New York.

Any holder of said certificates amounting to $1,000 or more may at any time surrender the same to said railroad company at its office in the city of New York, and receive therefor a funded coupon bond or bonds and a new certificate representing the same amount.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
EQUITABLE BUILDING,
Boston, November 21, 1887.

GENTLEMEN: On Friday, as a result of an intimation received through Comptroller Mink, of this company, my attention was called to the fact that no sinking fund had been provided for the retirement of the $630,000 funded interest bonds of the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company. I must frankly admit that I was not before aware of this fact. Other and more pressing financial matters occupied my attention, and this fact consequently had escaped me.

I at once instructed the secretary to call a meeting of the directors of the Central Branch Union Pacific, which was held on Saturday, and a vote passed, a copy of which I inclose for the information of the commission. The original instrument providing for the funding of the unpaid coupons should, of course, have contained a provision for a sinking fund. Thanking you for calling my attention to the omission,

I remain, etc.,

CHARLES F. ADAMS,
President.

Messrs. ROBERT E. PATTISON, DAVID T. LITTLER, and E. ELLERY ANDERSON,
U. S. Pacific Railway Commission.

NEW YORK, November 19, 1887.

The executive committee of the board of directors of the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company met at room 63, 42 Wall street, New York City, at 10 o'clock a. m.

Present, Messrs. Ames, Adams, and Wetmore.

James M. Ham was appointed secretary pro tem.

The following preamble and resolutions were presented, and, on motion of Mr. Ames, unanimously adopted:

Whereas the United States Pacific Railroads Investigating Commission has called attention to the fact that no provision has been made by this company for the retirement, by a sinking fund, or otherwise, of the bonds issued under the agreement to fund past due coupons of the company's first mortgage-bonds, dated April 1, 1879, said bonds maturing May 1, 1895, of which there are outstanding $650,000; and

Whereas the directors of this company, having had their attention directed to this subject, think it desirable and equitable, in view both of the interests of the company as well as the United States, that some specific arrangement looking to the payment of said bonds should be entered into by means of which, through the operations of a sinking fund, annual or semi-annual installments of the company's income shall be set apart for the purpose of providing a fund for the liquidation at maturity of said debt:

Therefore, voted, That the officers of the company be, and they hereby are, directed to prepare an instrument, providing that the company shall make annual payments to the American Loan and Trust Company, sufficiently large in amount to discharge said debt at maturity, supposing said fund can be made to earn at least 5 per cent. interest per annum, and the sums thus paid to be held by said trust company, as trustee, as a sinking fund, and invested upon such terms and conditions as may be in said indenture provided, the proceeds arising from the operations of said sinking fund to be applied at maturity towards the payment of said bonds. And in making investments of this sinking fund, said trust company, trustee, shall give preference to said funded interest bonds.

Adjourned.

JAMES M. HAM,
Secretary pro tem.

Agreement of consolidation of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company with the Northern Nebraska Air Line Railroad Company.

Whereas the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, organized under the laws of the State of Iowa, has constructed its line of railroad from Sioux City, in the State of Iowa, to a point on the Missouri River in the State of Iowa nearly opposite to the town of De Soto, in the State of Nebraska, and desires to extend its line of railroad from the said point on the Missouri River to intersect the Union Pacific Railroad at or near Fremont, in the State of Nebraska; and

Whereas the Northern Nebraska Air Line Railroad Company, organized under the laws of the State of Nebraska to build a railroad from the said town of De Soto to Fremont aforesaid, has valuable subscriptions, lands, and franchises secured for that purpose; and

Whereas the line of railroad proposed by the said two corporations being substantially the same from Missouri River westward, it is desired by the said corporations to consolidate so that one line of road only may be built from De Soto to Fremont aforesaid; and that stockholders of both corporations may become stockholders in the one consolidated company, and the whole line of railroad from Sioux City to Fremont may be the property of one corporation, and controlled and operated as one and the same continuous line of railroad:

Now, therefore, to effect the purpose aforesaid, the said corporations, by their directors, have entered into this agreement, to wit:

ARTICLE 1. The two corporations aforesaid are consolidated, and the said consolidated company shall be known by the name of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company.

ART. 2. The business of this consolidated company shall be managed by a board of nine directors, who shall be elected by the stockholders.

ART. 3. The stockholders of both of the corporations hereby consolidated shall be stockholders in this consolidated company, and shall be required to pay within a time to be fixed by the board of directors such a proportion of the stock subscribed by each as shall make the per centum paid by the stockholders of both of the former corporations equal. Any stockholder of either of said corporations who may be thus required to pay to equalize the payments as aforesaid may at his option surrender his stock and receive back again the installments by him paid. When such payments and equalization shall have been made the stockholders of both of said corporations shall be stockholders in this consolidated company, with equal privileges in all respects.

ART. 4. All of the lands, subscription lists, and property of every kind, whether in actual possession or to be acquired and received into possession hereafter, under any law, contract, or by what means soever, which either of said corporations now has or may or could hereafter recover or receive, as well as the said railroad and the stock and fixtures thereof shall be the property of the consolidated company.

ART. 5. Until an election shall take place under these articles the present board of directors and officers of the former Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company shall be the directors and officers of this consolidated company.

In witness whereof the president of each of said corporations has hereunto set his hand and caused the seal thereof to be affixed. Done on this 15th day of September, A. D. 1880.

ADDITIONAL TESTIMONY OF MARVIN HUGHITT.

In response to questions by the Commissioner, Mr. HUGHITT furnishes the following written replies:

Q. What are the relations between the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company?—A. The Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company leased its entire line of telegraph to the Western Union Telegraph Company for a term of twenty-five years from April 1, 1871. For the consideration received by the railroad company for same, see copy of lease inclosed herewith.

Q. What revenue and expenditures have grown out of this service?—A. The railroad company received from the telegraph company (as stated in the lease) the sum of $6,420. This amount was paid by the telegraph company January 5, 1872. In addition to the above amount received by the railroad company; it receives the benefit of direct connection with the general telegraph system of the country; the privilege of doing a large amount of business over the Western Union lines free of cost; preferential rights for its messages over those of a commercial nature; the material and implements it requires in maintaining and enlarging its facilities as needed; also other important and valuable considerations. We have no means of ascertaining what the earnings of the telegraph company have been on the property in question, or what the receipts and expenditures would have been if the railroad company had continued to operate its lines. It is apparent, however, that it would have been a very difficult matter to operate the short lines of the Sioux City Railroad profitably as a distinct system, especially as the cost to the Western Union Telegraph Company of reaching principal points touched by the Sioux City would have been very small compared with the convenience and necessity of its doing so.

In response to a request to furnish copies of the annual reports of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, Mr. HUGHITT says:

The Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company has never made any printed annual reports. Since 1879 reports have annually been furnished the United States and are on file in the office of the Commissioner of Railroads at Washington. Printed copies of same can be had upon application to said office.

In response to a call for the engineer's original notes (or copies of them) on which the cost of construction of the Sioux City & Pacific road was estimated, Mr. HUGHITT says:

In answer to the inquiry for engineer's original notes would say that they are not attainable, but it is quite probable that the Commission may find them among the archives of the Government at Washington.

...TE OF NEBRASKA, Douglas County, ss:

I, John D. Ludlow, being sworn, do upon my oath say I am a clerk in the office of the freight auditor of the Union Pacific Railway Company at Omaha, Nebr.; that I compiled the statement of freight earnings of the Union Pacific Railway Company derived from interchanged traffic for the year 1886, amounting to $4,544,333.17, as shown on blank Form 250, dated May 11, 1887.

That the figures used in compiling the above-mentioned statement were obtained from the books of the Union Pacific Railway Company, in which are recorded the entire earnings of all lines operated by the said company, as obtained from its various station agents' reports of freight forwarded from and to each station, and from similar reports of such railroad companies as the Union Pacific Railway Company interchanges business with, and in which books a division of all freight revenue between the Union Pacific Railway Company and all lines operated by it is recorded in monthly periods.

That in determining the amounts of interchanged freight traffic as shown on the above-mentioned blank Form 250, freight revenue derived from traffic between stations on the same line or branch was considered local earnings, and the remainder interchange earnings; that the sums included as interchange earnings formed a part of the ordinary freight-traffic earnings of the Union Pacific Railway Company for the year 1886; that the apportionment of same was made on the regular and usual basis of division between the Union Pacific Railway Company and the lines operated by it; and that only the usual proportions of the through-freight charges allotted to the Union Pacific Railway Company as its share of the earnings on shipments between main line and branch line stations was included as its interchange earnings, and that no portion of the earnings due to other railway companies on account of business interchanged with them was included therein.

I further depose and say that in the preparation of the statement first above mentioned due care was taken to guard against errors; that the computations were carefully made and their correctness verified by balancing the sums of the local and interchanged earnings of each division as obtained with the total monthly earnings as previously determined and shown by the books referred to above; and that to the best of my knowledge and belief the said statement is correct.

JNO. D. LUDLOW.

I, Samuel J. Cutler, a clerk in the office of the freight auditor of the Union Pacific Railway Company at Omaha, Nebr., being duly sworn, do depose and say that the freight earnings of the Union Pacific Railway Company derived from interchanged traffic for the year 1886, amounting to $4,544,333.17, referred to in the above deposition of John D. Ludlow, were compiled by him under my direct supervision and instructions; that the method pursued to determine the correct amount of interchanged earnings was as stated in the above deposition; that due care was taken to guard against errors in the preparation of the statement made on blank Form 250, above referred to, and that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the same is a true and correct exhibit of the freight earnings of the Union Pacific Railway Company derived from interchanged traffic with its branch lines for the period mentioned.

SAMUEL J. CUTLER.

I, Andrew S. Van Kuran, being duly sworn, do depose and say I am the freight auditor of the Union Pacific Railway Company, and familiar with the books, reports, and records pertaining to the freight accounts, traffic, and revenue of the Union Pacific Railway Company; that I have examined the books and records from which the statement on blank Form 250, referred to in the above depositions, was compiled, and have investigated the method pursued to determine the freight earnings of the Union Pacific Railway Company derived from interchanged traffic for the year 1886 as shown therein, and believe the same was prepared as stated in the above depositions, and is a true and correct exhibit, as above stated.

ANDREW S. VAN KURAN.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence by John D. Ludlow, Samuel J. Cutler, and Andrew S. Van Kuran, respectively, this 25th day of November, 1887.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, County of Douglas, ss:

I, Thomas L. Kelton, being sworn, do, upon my oath, say I am a clerk in the office of the auditor of passenger accounts of the Union Pacific Railway Company at Omaha, Nebr.; that I compiled the statement of passenger earnings of the Union Pacific Railway Company derived from interchange traffic for the year 1886, amounting to $934,121.74, as shown on blank Form 250, dated May 11, 1887.

That the figures used in compiling the above-mentioned statement were obtained from an abstract of each report of ticket sales made by agents of the Union Pacific Railway Company, and from similar reports of such railroad companies as the Union Pacific Railway Company interchanges business with, and on which blank a division of all passenger revenue between the Union Pacific Railway Company and all lines operated by it is recorded in monthly periods.

That in determining the amounts of interchange passenger traffic, as was shown on the above-mentioned blank Form 250, only such passenger revenue derived from traffic between stations on the Union Pacific Railway Company consolidated and branch lines was used, and that the apportionment of same was made on the regular and usual basis of division between the said Union Pacific Railway Company and the lines operated by it; and that only the usual proportion of the through passenger earnings allotted to the Union Pacific Railway Company as its share of the total earnings was included as its interchange earnings.

I further depose and say that in the preparation of the statement first above mentioned, due care was taken to guard against errors that the computations were carefully made, and their correctness verified by balancing the sums of the local and interchanged earnings of each division as obtained with the total monthly earnings as previously determined and shown by the abstract referred to above, and that to the best of my knowledge and belief the said statement is correct.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, County of Douglas, ss:

W. S. Kelton, under my direct supervision and instruction; that the method pursued to determine the correct amount of interchange earnings was as stated in his deposition; that due care was taken to guard against errors in the preparation of the statement made on blank Form 250, above referred to, and that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the same is a true and correct exhibit of the passenger earnings of the Union Pacific Railway Company, derived from interchange traffic with its branch lines, for the period named.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, County of Douglas, ss:

I, Erastus Young, being duly sworn, do depose and say that I am the auditor of the Union Pacific Railway Company, and as such have general charge of the traffic accounts of the said company; that the methods of apportioning the earnings interchanged between the Union Pacific Railway Company and its branch lines as described in the affidavits of J. D. Ludlow, Samuel J. Cutler, Andrew S. Van Kuran, T. L. Kelton, and W. S. Wing are in accordance with my instructions; that the earnings derived by the said Union Pacific Railway Company from interchanged traffic with its branch lines during the year 1886, as stated in statement (Form 250) dated May 11, 1887, viz, $5,478,454.91, of which $934,121.74 was derived from passenger and $4,544,333.17 from freight, were ascertained by making an analysis of the revenue accounts of the company; that only the Union Pacific Railway Company's proportion of the earnings that were joint between it and its branch lines was included in the amount above stated, and that the sums thus included form a part of the ordinary traffic earnings of said Union Pacific Railway Company; and that to the best of my knowledge and belief the statement above referred to is a true and correct exhibit of the freight and passenger earnings of the Union Pacific Railway Company derived from interchanged traffic with its branch lines for the year 1886.

I further depose and say that earnings derived from the transportation of United States mail matter interchanged between the Union Pacific Railway and its branch lines was not included in the interchanged earnings for the reason that it was impossible to ascertain its value or the proportion due the said Union Pacific Railway Company and its branch lines except upon the basis fixed by the United States Post-Office Department, which is at a fixed rate per mile for the total service performed over each designated route.

PRESIDENT'S OFFICE, UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
Boston, November 21, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: An important question of railroad economics has arisen in the course of the investigation which the specially appointed Pacific Railroad Commission is now making into the affairs of this company—a question upon which experts only can pass. Accordingly I desire to submit the case in point to you, and ask you to confer upon me the great favor of an immediate reply.

The question at issue relates to the profit derived by the main line of the Union Pacific, from that portion of the traffic of its branch lines which is done over the tracks of the main line.

In other words, taking the Oregon Short Line as an example, the facts are specifically as follows, viz: The Oregon Short Line connects with the Union Pacific at Granger, 896 miles from Omaha. The Oregon Short Line itself, then, has 610 miles of road west of Granger, connecting with the tracks of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company at Huntington, in Oregon. So far as the Union Pacific is concerned, the business done over the Oregon Short Line is largely what is known as through business; that is, business originating from, or destined to, points east of Omaha, the terminus of the Union Pacific, and west of Granger, its point of junction with the Short Line. In this respect the Oregon Short Line, among the branches of the Union Pacific, is not peculiar. Most of the business coming to, or going from, those branches is through business, so far as the Union Pacific is concerned.

The question is: What is approximately the ratio of profit to the Union Pacific on the traffic of the Oregon Short Line, or other branches of the Union Pacific, while such traffic is moving over the Union Pacific proper between Omaha and the point of junction with the branch line, whether Granger or some other?

The average ratio of operating expenses of the entire Union Pacific system to its gross earnings has, since 1880, a period of seven years, been 53.60 per cent. So far as the Union Pacific proper is concerned, apart from its auxiliary system, the average ratio has been 48.18 per cent. It is unnecessary to point out that the business of the branch lines, being purely through business so far as the Union Pacific proper is concerned, is done by the Union Pacific at a much lower cost than its own local business. The traffic in question is mainly freight. It is received by the Union Pacific from the branch lines in full car-load or train lots, and delivered by the Union Pacific to the branch lines in the same way. There is for the Union Pacific proper, no expense of collecting, switching, handling, or delay of rolling-stock. In the case of the Oregon Short Line, for instance, some five full train-loads a day are received and delivered by the main line. The wheels of these trains, whether starting from Omaha or from Granger, are in constant motion for 896 miles of Union Pacific main line track. When this haul is completed, the cars composing the train are turned over by the Union Pacific, either to its Eastern connections at Omaha, or to the Oregon Short Line at Granger. The only cost involved is motive power and train crews.

Under these circumstances, what average profit does the Union Pacific derive from its branch-line traffic of this character? If the average profit of the Union Pacific on its general traffic is 51.82 per cent., what may be considered a fair average on its branch-line traffic?

In dealing with this question before the Commission, I used the following illustration, which I extract from the printed record:

I will now take the Union Pacific business—freight—to the Oregon Short Line, in order to show how profitable that traffic is to the main line. The Union Pacific at present delivers to the Oregon Short Line about a hundred and three cars a day of freight. That represents five full trains. Much of it is coal, which comes from Rock Springs, and goes over the Oregon Short Line to local points or to Butte, Mont.; the balance comes from Omaha. I will take the case of freight trains from Omaha to the Oregon Short Line. The trains are made up in the Omaha yard—we will say, two trains a day. Each train consists of twenty-four cars. Those cars, on an average, carry 15 tons apiece of paying freight. That freight pays three-quarters of a cent a ton per mile, or about that. It really pays more, but we will suppose three-quarters of a cent. Therefore, each car would earn 12 cents a mile; and, there being twenty-four cars in a train, the train would earn $2.88 a mile, and it would go 860 miles. In other words, that train earns, between Council Bluffs and Granger, the sum of $2,500, all of which goes to the Union Pacific. The Union Pacific, before the Oregon Short Line Company built its road, had its own complete facilities, its general staff, general expenses, and fixed charges, none of which were increased perceptibly by the new business which goes to or comes from the Short Line. The cost of hauling a train on the Union Pacific is about 55 cents a mile. Therefore it will be, in the case of a train run from the Short Line, 860 times 55 cents, or, in round numbers, $450.

Q. The cost of such a train as this?—A. Yes; such a train would cost the Union Pacific proper $450 to haul. In addition to that, I am not aware of any expense which the main line is put to, except the wear and tear of its track, which in the case of a single train is imperceptible. It is so small that we are unable to approximate it in our statistics, although we carry them down to as fine a point as we can. But we will suppose that it amounts to $250, which is a very liberal estimate. That would make $700 as the total expense to which the Union Pacific was subjected on account of a Short Line train, which earned for the Union Pacific $2,500. Upon that single train, therefore, as nearly as I can ascertain from the best figures at my command, the Union Pacific earns net $1,800.

I would like to be advised whether you, as an expert, would be disposed to confirm the results herein reached by me, to wit: that in the case and under the circumstances stated, the mother line nets in the neighborhood of 70 per cent. of the gross amount received by it on the branch-line traffic passing to and from the branch lines over its own tracks.

The comptroller of the company, in estimating the average value of the branch-line interchange traffic to the mother line, computed it at 40 per cent. of the gross value of such traffic. The conclusion reached by him does not materially differ from that reached by me in the foregoing extract from my evidence. This result is questioned by certain of the Commissioners. As bearing upon the doubts which may exist in their minds, I would call your attention to the marked passage on page 11 of the printed testimony which I herewith send you.

It is of great importance to this company that the opinion of experts of unquestioned authority should be obtained upon the point involved. I therefore take the liberty of writing to you, and in conclusion, would merely add, that, to be of value, an answer to this communication will have to reach me as soon as possible after its receipt.

I remain, etc.,

CHARLES F. ADAMS,
President.

NEW YORK, November 23, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 21st is just received. You ask my opinion, as an expert in railroad management, as to the average profit derived by the Union Pacific Railroad from its branch-line traffic, and whether I will be disposed to confirm the statements and estimates given in your testimony on that point before the Pacific Railroad Investigating Committee, a copy of which you submit.

In reply I have no hesitation in affirming that your estimate that 70 per cent. of the gross receipts of the Union Pacific from its branch-line traffic is profit, is entirely reasonable and moderate. By "profit" I mean money left in the treasury after payment of all expenses incurred in doing the work, which would not have been incurred if that traffic did not exist. Doubtless the proportion of profit will vary on different branches. It will be less on those which join the main line near its eastern terminus, and therefore give it but a short haul, and less on those which reach competitive points and bring low-rate traffic. It will be greater on lines which are in and about the Rocky Mountains and give the main line very long hauls, and greater on those which bring non-competitive freight. From my personal knowledge of your system and character of your traffic, I feel confident that the "profit" in many cases would exceed 75 per cent. of the receipts by the main line.

The principle involved is as far beyond question as the multiplication table, and it is exemplified by the history and present situation of the railroad property now under my charge, the Central Railroad and Banking Company of Georgia.

Twenty-two years ago the rival southern ports of Savannah and Charleston had each a road reaching into the interior of about the same mileage (say 200 miles)—the Central from Savannah and the South Carolina from Charleston. Each road had been torn up by Sherman's army, and had nothing left but its road-bed.

The Central Railroad began immediately to acquire and control branch lines and feeders by lease, purchase, and construction. It to-day owns in fee simple three steamship lines (Savannah to Philadelphia, New York, and Boston) and 1,108 miles of railroad, and controls nearly 1,300 more miles by part ownership, acquired generally through aiding in their construction. Its stock is selling at 125, and it is earning over 10 per cent. net, and is paying its stockholders 8 per cent. dividends. The South Carolina is running only its original 200 miles of road, and has been, meanwhile, sold out and reorganized. It is now so hemmed in by other large systems that it will probably finally be absorbed by one of them. It has never paid any dividends.

But the point of the whole matter is this: Comparatively few of the Central's auxiliary lines are profitable in themselves. In my recent report to the stockholders I state that the auxiliary system as a whole is but little more than self-supporting, though it is hoped that parts of it will eventually become profitable.

But in the struggle for existence among the railroad systems of our section, the Central has survived and flourished and taken a leading position by providing itself with feeders and protection, and we are still vigorously pursuing the same policy. I am to-day building and preparing to build four or five more roads and extensions, only one of which will probably pay directly the interest on its cost. The others are feeders, or for protection, or both.

So as the road I am now operating is to-day flourishing on the results of a "branch line policy," and is not at all a solitary example of its kind, I think the wisdom—I may say, the absolute necessity—of such policies, judiciously carried out, is an amply demonstrated fact.

Very truly, yours,

E. P. ALEXANDER.

CHARLES F. ADAMS, Esq.,
President Union Pacific Railway Company, Boston, Mass.

WILMINGTON, November 24, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of November 21, I beg to say that I have been for the last fifteen years engaged in the construction and management of railroads and in the study of all practical and economic questions connected therewith.

I have read your testimony before the Pacific Railroad Commission on in regard to the system of constructive mileage in use between the Union Pacific Railroad and its branch lines, and have pleasure in saying that the practice, as explained by you, is not only fair and liberal, but is the same in principle that is everywhere applied in this country for the division of earnings between main lines and their controlled branches where different ownership exists, and also between lines which are independent of each other and are merely working together for mutual convenience and profit.

I have carefully considered the testimony in reference to the origin of this system and the justice of its application to the Union Pacific and its branches, and must say that the reason for the practice has been very mildly stated. In my judgment the branch lines, irrespective of ownership, are entitled to all the advantages of their position; and in the division of traffic, this would in many cases give them a mileage allowance on joint traffic equal to the amount the traffic would have to pay if it were hauled by ox or mule teams or carried upon the backs of pack-animals. And if the branch lines were owned by different stockholders from those of the main line, and they were otherwise protected and free to act for their own interests alone, it may be safely assumed that they would apply this rule most rigidly. This would be literally taking all the traffic would stand, and the only question left in that case for the management of the main line to consider would be, Can we get enough out of this business to pay us the actual cash cost of handling it? If so, the decision would most certainly be to take it, in the hope that ultimately the business of the branch line and of the country adjacent, would be so increased, and the conditions become so changed, that the main line would be ultimately enabled to draw a fair profit from them.

As to the application of the practice to the case of the Oregon Short Line, I submit the following remarks: I am familiar with the vast region tributary to the Columbia River, having served in it as an officer of the Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, in 1860–'61, and having three years ago revisited it, for the purpose of refreshing and extending my knowledge in regard to it. So profoundly was I impressed, during the latter visit, with its varied and vast resources, and with the certainty of its becoming at no distant day the home of a dense and prosperous population, that I took the liberty, as you may recollect, of urging you by letter to push your lines into it as fast as possible, by lease, purchase, and construction, as might from time to time be necessary.

It was then and is now my deliberate judgment that it would have been wise for you to carry out this policy, if it had been certain that your main line from Omaha to Granger would not receive one dollar of direct profit from the traffic thus secured in ten years. Let me make my meaning clear. The Columbia River country, by which I mean the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, is for all human uses the best that anywhere touches the borders of the Pacific Ocean, and will one day abound in untold wealth. Its railroad and ocean-borne traffic will be of incalculable value, and will necessarily grow up most rapidly along the lines first connecting it with the Territories and States east of it. If in order to control such lines it had been necessary for your company to agree to give to the companies owning them complete control over their own properties, a guaranty of all their fixed charges, and all the profits of their own business, and of the joint business with your main line for ten years, it would have been wise and justifiable for you to enter into the agreement, provided, always, that you could not have secured the same end and advantages under more advantageous terms.

But as a matter of fact, it is certain, without going into details, that you have secured much better terms, as will appear from my answer to the specific question which you submit for my consideration, namely:

What average profit does the Union Pacific derive from the traffic of the Oregon Short Line or other branches, while such traffic is moving over the Union Pacific between Omaha and the branch-line junction?

From the statement of the mileage allowances which is set forth in the testimony before the Commissioners, and the case as stated by you, I do not hesitate to express the belief that full 50 per cent. of the compensation allowed to the main line, even where the rate is the lowest, is clear profit; and instead of taking your figures of 55 cents as the cost of moving full train loads, per freight train mile, as I might very properly do, I take the average cost for the last seven years, which, as shown by your report for 1886, was a fraction less than $1.0 per "revenue train mile." This average includes every possible expense connected with the operation of the road, from general expenses to taxes, and applies to both passenger and freight train mileage, and is, therefore, manifestly much in excess of the average cost per freight train mile, for any given volume of new business.

According to your statement the average receipts for Short Line freight business, at the low figure of three-fourths of a cent per ton per mile, are $2.88 per freight train mile, and hence the average profit is at least $1.48 per mile, which in the case of a full train of 25 cars, between Omaha and Granger, would be something over $1,250, and in case of any new business the figures would not fall below $1,800, and would probably reach $2,000.

The case is so clear, so simple, in fact, that it is difficult to see how it can be controverted, or what further statement or argument can be brought to bear upon it. It is of course within the range of railroad accounting to approximate very closely to the actual cash outlay due to running one or more additional freight trains over an established railroad, but the figures would be difficult for any one but an expert to understand, and hence I refrain from giving them.

For the purposes of this letter it is sufficient to say that under favoring circumstances, I do not doubt that 35 cents per train mile will pay all expenses directly incurred in running such trains, of 25 car-loads each, solid, from Omaha to any important branch junction, and that all the revenue received above that amount per mile by the main line, will go towards paying regular operating expenses, and reducing the erage cost of running the other trains. In all such cases the profit, will be seen at a glance, will be considerably more than 70 per cent. the mother or main line.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES H. WILSON.

PHILADELPHIA, WILMINGTON AND BALTIMORE RAILROAD COMPANY,
Philadelphia, November 25, 1887.

MY DEAR MR. ADAMS: I have read with much interest the report of the testimony which you gave to the Pacific Railroad Investigating Committee, and I most heartily indorse what you said in respect to "feeders," which, because they do not per se earn much and often fail to earn their operating expenses, are pronounced to be "suckers." For nearly twenty-three years I have been president of this company, and have studied carefully this question of feeders. I still hold steadfastly to opinions upon this subject formed before 1867, viz, that the success of a main line depends very much upon the fostering of feeders, even though those feeders are, to people who have had no experience in railroad management, a burden to be shaken off as soon as possible. This company has been aiding and supporting for over twenty years, by mileage concessions, drawbacks, subsidies, etc., roads that even to day fail to earn their operating expenses. Four branches have been operated by this company in 1886 whose operating expenses exceeded their gross receipts by over $100,000, yet so sure are we of their value as feeders that we continue to operate them, and could not be induced to part with them. This company for twenty-three years has paid in dividends never less than 8 per cent. per annum, and sometimes 10 per cent., while paying 2 per cent. of net earnings, on an average, for improvements which have been charged to expenses, and have not caused an increase of construction account. I am fully satisfied that this result could not have been attained without the profit derived from our branches, many of which are of themselves a burden to us, but from whose traffic given to us for longer haul we realize handsome profits. In your testimony I think that you did not call attention to the fact that from a natural growth of business, wisely fostered by the main line, these branch roads become stronger year by year. Upon one of our branch lines there was in 1882 a deficit of about $6,000 in operating; in 1883 the deficit was over $15,000; in 1884 the deficit was nearly $7,000; in 1885 there was a surplus of nearly $35,000; in 1886 the surplus was over $20,000, and the accounts now being made up for 1887 will, I am told, show a still larger surplus.

Owing to the absence of my secretary on 23d instant and to-day I delayed this letter, and now must leave it unfinished, but hope to send the residue on 26th instant if my secretary returns to give me papers which he has in custody.

Yours, very truly,

ISAAC HINCKLEY,
President.

PHILADELPHIA, November 26, 1887.

MY DEAR MR. ADAMS: In continuation of my letter of yesterday in respect to branch roads, I will give you facts as to the Delaware Railroad, our most important feeder.

Recognizing the importance of this road as a feeder we many years ago took a lease of it (terminable in 1897), paying as rental that company's fixed charges and 6 per cent. dividends on their stock, agreeing to stock and work their road at cost. Anticipating losses in working the road and paying the rental, we made it a condition of the lease that if during its duration the net earnings should exceed the rental, three-quarters of the surplus should be paid to us to re-imburse us for past losses in operating, and one-quarter as a bonus. We also provided that if ever our past losses had been made good (no interest allowed) thenceforth any surplus should be paid to us one-half, and the other half to make a sinking fund to be used pro tanto in reducing the bonded debt of the Delaware Railroad Company, thus incidentally reducing the rental.

At one time there had grown up a deficiency of nearly $292,000 in net earnings to meet rentals. This year the whole deficiency has been repaid, and we have begun to take one-half of surplus of net earnings over rentals to ourselves, and to pay one-half to Delaware Railroad Company sinking fund.

When we had sunk nearly $292,000 for operating expenses over and above net earnings, I computed our profits upon the business given us by this feeder, and calling those profits 36 per cent. of receipts like those upon our main line at the time, we found that while apparently losing $292,000 in operating, our profits on the additional business given us by this feeder was $1,400,000. This was eleven years since, and while we have recovered our losses in operating, plus one-fourth of surplus of net earning over rentals, we have made several millions of profits from business given us by this feeder, which was often alluded to by some of our directors as a "sucker."

The prospective value of feeders ought not to be lost sight of.

Yours, very truly,

ISAAC HINCKLEY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 3, 1887.

Early in November additional letters calling for further information were addressed to the Treasury, War, Navy, Interior, and Post-Office Departments. These letters, with the answers of the respective Departments, and the exhibits accompanying the same, are as follows:

UNITED STATES PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION,
10 Wall Street, New York, November 5, 1887.

SIR: The United States Pacific Railway Commission, which has been charged by Congress with the duty of furnishing information respecting the working and financial management of the bond-aided Pacific railroads and their relations to the Government, request that you will kindly cause to be furnished to it information on the following points; the particulars asked for being necessary for the preparation of complete answers to the interrogatories set forth by Congress in the act creating the Commission:

By section 6 of the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," the bond-aided roads were required to transmit dispatches over their telegraph line, and to transmit mails, troops, and munitions of war, supplies, and public stores on said railroad for the Government whenever required to do so by any Department thereof. They were further obligated to give the Government at all times the preference in the use of the same at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amount paid by private parties for the same kind of service. They were also required to apply annually out of the net earnings a given percentage toward the payment of the bonds and interest.

By section 6 of the act of 1878, commonly known as the Thurman act, the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific Railroad companies were prohibited from paying dividends when in default of payment to the Government on bond and interest account or sinking-fund account, or interest on any lien prior to that of the Government.

By section 9 of the same act they were required to settle obligations with the Government and to perform all the requirements of that act within six months after such performance might be due, under penalty of forfeiture.

By the act of March 3, 1873 (sec. 4), the Union Pacific Railroad Company was required to keep its books, records, correspondence, and all other documents open to inspection by the Secretary of the Treasury, or to such persons as he may delegate for that purpose.

Will you kindly inform us whether the obligations herein enumerated have been fully complied with; also whether the companies have been in default on bond and interest account or sinking-fund account, or failed to conform to section 9 of the act of 1878 referred to.

It has been charged by the bond-aided railroad companies that the Government has improperly withheld payments due to them on account of half transportation and on account of transportation on non-aided lines.

Will you kindly furnish us with all the facts in your possession with regard to that matter, and with a copy of the circular of the Secretary of the Treasury dated September 11, 1885, relative to withholding compensation from such railroads; also a statement of the total cash payments by the Government to bond-aided companies for half transportation; also copies of circulars of instruction or direction to accounting officers relative to settlements of said companies.

In the course of the investigation made by the Commission complaint was made by the officers of the Central Pacific Railroad Company that the Government had been carrying credits for the transportation of non-aided lines to bond an interest account, which was a flat payment, and not to other accounts where they might obtain interest on their credits. The Commission would be glad to know whether that statement is in accordance with the fact, and, if so, the grounds on which the Department proceeded in the matter.

The Commission also desires information as to whether any rebates or deductions have been made by the bond-aided railroads from full tariff rate in transportation services rendered for the Government, the companies having granted rebates in large numbers and for large amounts to private shippers.

At Omaha it was stated to the Commission that by the act of 1866, which authorized the construction of railway bridges across navigable streams and regulates the use thereof, the railroad companies operating such bridges are required to make no higher charge for the transportation of freight or passengers for the Government over such bridges than is charged as mileage rate going or coming over the road adjoining the bridges. It was stated by Edward Rosewater, a witness before the Commission, that the mileage rate on the railroad adjoining the bridge at Omaha was 5 cents per mile for quite a long time over the Union Pacific Railroad, and that while the bridge did not really measure more than 2 miles in length (though, with its approaches, it was claimed by the company to measure 3.7 miles), yet the charge for transportation to the public has been 50 cents for each person and $10 per car load for freight, the charge for coal amounting to $1 per ton. The Commission would like to be informed whether the rates charged to the Government for transportation over this bridge were or were not computed on the basis of the mileage rate on the road adjoining the bridge.

It was also charged by the same witness that coal transported for the Government from Rock Springs to Omaha cost the Government $14 per ton, while citizens of Omaha obtained the same coal for $10.50 per ton.

At Cheyenne it was stated to the Commission that while (between February, 1879, and September, 1881) coal from Rock Springs was sold at Cheyenne for $5.50 per ton, the same coal delivered to Camp Carlin was charged to the Government at the rate of $8.50 per ton. Is there any information in the possession of your Department bearing on this matter? If so, will you kindly furnish it to the Commission?

The Commission also desires your Department to compute the value as of July 1, 1888, of the respective obligations from the bond-aided railways to the United States, including all interest accrued and to accrue to the maturity of the debt, crediting to interest payments on the bond and interest account, discounting the aggregate at 3 per cent. per annum, and crediting against the result the amount now held in the sinking fund.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT E. PATTISON,
Chairman.

Hon. C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., November 26, 1887.

SIR: In answer to your communication of the 5th instant, requesting certain information necessary for the preparation of complete answers to the interrogatories set forth by Congress in the act creating the Pacific Railway Commission, I have the honor to state that the compensation from time to time found due for services performed for the Government over the bond-subsidized Pacific railroads is disposed of as follows:

UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

One half of the service over the aided lines of this company is credited to bond and interest account, and the other half to the sinking-fund account created by the act of May 7, 1878. The whole of the compensation for service over the non-aided lines is also withheld, and, with the company's consent, applied to the sinking-fund account.

KANSAS PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

The whole of the aided service is applied to bond and interest account, and the whole of the non-aided service is applied to the sinking fund account of the Union Pacific Railway Company.

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Compensation due for service over the aided lines of this company is withheld and applied as in the case of the Union Pacific Company—one-half to the bond and interest account and one-half to the sinking fund account. The company claiming payment in money for service over the non-aided or leased lines, no disposition has for some time past been made of amounts found due for such service. The amount so suspended at this date is not definitely known as reports have not been received from all the Departments, but it is believed that it will not exceed $400,000.

SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

One-half of the aided service is credited to bond and interest account, and the other half, with the whole of the non-aided service, is suspended, as in the case of the Central Pacific.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC COMPANY.

The whole of the aided and non-aided service is withheld and applied to bond and interest account.

The reasons for withholding payment for non-aided service are fully set forth in circulars issued by the Department September 11, 1885, and June 23, 1887, copies of which are inclosed.

I also inclose a copy of a communication from the Third Auditor of the Treasury with reference to the tariff rates of these companies, and other matters in relation thereto; also a communication from the Government actuary, containing computations on the basis submitted by you of the value, as of July 1, 1888, of the respective obligations of these roads.

The cash payments by the Government to these companies for half transportations, under the acts of 1862 and 1864 and subsequent rulings of the Department, are as follows:

Union Pacific	$2,362,646.29
Kansas Pacific	1,144,913.19
Central Pacific	837,569.42
Sioux City and Pacific	51,605.26
Central Branch Union Pacific	37,731.87

The amounts paid by the Government for interest accruing on bonds issued in aid of the construction of these roads, and the amounts respectively repaid by the companies to November 1, 1887, are as follows:

Name of road.	Paid by United States.	Repaid by companies.
Union Pacific	$31,494,613.29	$11,901,642.63
Kansas Pacific	7,642,053.09	3,539,249.31
Central Pacific	29,664,984.07	6,194,012.35
Western Pacific	2,141,183.34	9,367.00
Sioux City and Pacific	1,835,094.29	131,923.63
Central Branch Union Pacific	1,933,868.26	316,124.12
Total	74,731,736.34	22,092,319.03

With regard to the obligations laid upon the Union Pacific and Central Pacific companies by the act of May 7, 1878, I have to state that payment of the amounts found due by the Court of Claims and by the United States Commissioner of Railroads have been made as follows:

UNION PACIFIC COMPANY.

Deposited with assistant treasurer at Boston, July 26, 1881, $69,358.83 on sinking-fund account for the year ending December 31, 1880.

Deposited with assistant treasurer at Boston, June 21, 1884, $718,-814.60 on sinking-fund account for the year ending December 31, 1883.

These amounts were adjudged by the Court of Claims to be due under the sinking-fund act from July 1, 1878, up to the close of the calendar year 1884.

Deposited with assistant treasurer at Boston, December 4, 1886, $135,246.59 on bond and interest account for the year ending December 31, 1885.

CENTRAL PACIFIC COMPANY.

Deposited in the Treasury November 26, 1879, $181,329.51 on sinking-fund account for six months ending December 31, 1878.

Deposited in the Treasury April 30, 1881, $144,436.74 on sinking-fund account for the year ending December 31, 1880.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 12, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the extract co of a communication addressed by the chairman of the United Stat Pacific Railway Commission to the Secretary of the Treasury on t instant. It will be understood that my report relates only to su kinds of transportation service as are settled in this office.

(1) Copies of all tariffs, orders, classifications, or other publicatio in which the Pacific railroad companies purport to set out their ra and charges to the general public are procured by this office, and a its basis for settlement for transportation service rendered to the Uni States. Whenever the companies offer special or "cut" rates to t public the accounting officers, of course, apply such rates to Uni States transportation. It has not been the practice of these compan to make rebates or deductions in favor of the United States; they ha uniformly demanded the full rates which their tariffs, etc., purport to their charges to the general public.

I have no knowledge to what extent, if any, these companies ma rebates or deductions to private shippers. Information of such i stances would not reach the accounting officers, unless by pure chan and then in no number affording ground for an opinion whether a co pany sought to make the exception the rule and the rule the exce tion. To elicit information of that kind would require a searching i vestigation into all dealings between the companies and private pa ties; and that investigation could be successfully made only by so commission or officer clothed with special authority. The accounti officers have neither the opportunity nor the legal authority to make

(2) Omaha Bridge rates.—For many years the Union Pacific Rail Company has made in its tariffs special rates upon the section, nearl miles, which includes the bridge and its approaches, viz: 50 cents per p senger, and 5 cents per 100 pounds on freight, being much higher than any other 4 miles of its road. The accounting officers considered that t act of February 24, 1871 (16 Stats., 430), brought this bridge within t provision, made in the act of July 25, 1866 (14 Stat., 244), which forba higher charges for United States transportation on the several bridges which the act related than are charged per mile on the roads leading to bridges. Hence they refused to allow higher rates on the Omaha brid section than were charged for equal distances on other parts of the ro the company, being indisposed to accept this construction, refrained for several years from presenting for settlement any accounts covering service on the bridge section. When it resumed presentation of such accounts, it was again met by this construction. Thereupon it carried the question into the Court of Claims, where the point was ruled in the company's favor. The Government took the case, on this point, to the Supreme Court, where also the decision was in the company's favor. (Vide 20 C. Cls. R., 77; 117 U. S. R., 359.)

The Supreme Court having decided that the company is entitled to charge the Government the same bridge-rates which it charges the general public, the accounting officers, of course, follow that rule.

(3) Coal rates Rock Springs to Omaha.—The public tariff-rates of the Union Pacific during the period indicated were $14 per ton, and the Government paid those rates. I have no information what rates were actually paid by private parties at Omaha.

(4) Coal rates to Camp Carlin and to Cheyenne.—After five days' search through immense masses of settled accounts of the Central Pacific without finding a single shipment of coal, or any other supplies, bound for Camp Carlin, inquiry was made at the Adjutant-General's office whether there ever was a post at that place, and if so, when established, etc. Information is verbally given by that office that a post never was there established. At the Quartermaster-General's office it is said that it was once proposed to establish a post there, but the recommendation was not approved; that, if troops were ever there, it was merely as at a temporary halting-place, and not to make it a point to which supplies were shipped. At all events, an immense search in the Central Pacific accounts covering the period indicated has not brought to light a single instance of any kind of shipment for that point.

During the period indicated in the chairman's communication, the tariff-rate of the Union Pacific coal, from Rock Springs to the town of Cheyenne, was $7 per ton. The Government coal, however, was not shipped to the town, but to Russell (Cheyenne Depot), which is on a branch road, and 3.3 miles beyond the town of Cheyenne. The tariff charge on the branch road (Cheyenne to Russell) was $1 per ton. The Government paid $8 per ton from Rock Springs to Russell.

Very respectfully,

JNO. S. WILLIAMS,
Auditor.

Hon. C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Secretary of the Treasury.

UNITED STATES TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., November 19, 1887.

After crediting this amount to the railways a balance remains of $156,312,440.47. Discounting this at 3 per cent. per annum to the dates of maturity gives $122,488,057.75. Crediting the sinking fund as it now is (November 1, 1887), $8,862,720.58, gives as the value for July 1, 1888, $113,625,337.17.

The interest accrued and to accrue to the maturity of the debt is $59,304,778.94, and the principal to be paid at maturity is $33,539,512, making a total for these companies of $92,884,290.94.

Payments on the bond and interest account by these companies to November 1, 1887, are $15,444,891.94; estimated payments to be made on said account from November 1, 1887, to July 1, 1888, are $335,400, together making a total of $15,776,291.94. After crediting this amount an aggregate remains of $77,067,999. Discounting this at 3 per cent. per annum to July 10, 1897, the average date of maturity, gives $23,647,645.39.

Crediting the sinking fund as of November 1, 1887, $6,152,688.82, gives as the value July 1, 1888, $54,494,961.48.

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

After crediting this amount the remaining aggregate will be $70,766,425.06. Discounting this at 3 per cent. to December 9, 1897, the average date of maturity, gives $55,150,611.18. Crediting the sinking fund as of November 1, 1887, $2,710,036.76, gives the value as of July 1, 1888, $52,440,575.94.

Discounting this amount at 3 per cent. per annum, to October 19, 1896, the average date of maturity, give $3,285,575.90, which would also be the value as of July 1, 1888, as this company has nothing to its credit in the sinking fund.

[Circular.—Pacific Railroad earnings.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., September 11, 1885.

The following decision of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, in regard to compensation due the Central Pacific Railroad Company for services rendered for the Government, is published for the information and guidance of all concerned:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE.
Washington, D. C., August 28, 1885.

In the matter of the motion of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, before the Secretary of the Treasury, for a revocation or modification of Department order or circular of January 12, 1884, with reference to the disposition to be made of the earnings of the company for Government transportation.

REPORT.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company was originally incorporated under the laws of the State of California, prior to July 1, 1862, but its corporate powers were enlarged by an act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes;" and further corporate rights and privileges were conferred upon it by an act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend the act of

The company accepted of all the conditions imposed and benefits conferred by these enactments, and is, therefore, to that extent to be regarded in the same light as if originally incorporated by act of Congress.

By the provisions of these acts Government aid was extended to the construction of its road to the extent of a free grant of a right of way through the public lands, together with ten alternate sections per mile on each side of the road on the line thereof, within the limits of 20 miles, and a loan of $16,000 per mile in Government bonds for each mile of the completed road, which, by the act of 1862, was made a first lien upon the property of the company; but by the act of 1864 the lien was postponed to that of a mortgage of an equal amount executed by the company.

By section 6 of the act of 1862, it was provided that the grants made to the company were upon the condition that the company should pay the bonds at maturity, and should at all times transmit dispatches over their telegraph line, and transport mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon their railroad line for the Government whenever required to do so by any department thereof, and that the Government should have the preference in the use of the same for all purposes at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind of service, and it also provided that "all compensation for services rendered for the Government shall be applied to the payment of the bonds and interest until the whole amount is fully paid."

Section 5 of the act of 1864 so far modified this provision as to require "that only one-half of the compensation for services rendered for the Government by said company shall be required to be applied to the payment of the bonds issued by the Government in aid of the construction of said road."

Section 6 of the act or 1862 also provided that after the road was completed, and until the Government bonds and interest were paid, "at least five per centum of the net earnings of said road shall also be annually applied to the payment thereof."

The road was completed to Ogden and a junction there effected with the Union Pacific road in or about the year 1869. The number of miles constructed by aid of land grants and Government loans was 864.

About the time of the completion of its road the company adopted the policy of leasing or constructing branch and parallel lines, in aid of some of which land grants were issued, pursuant to various acts of Congress, and this policy was carried out to such an extent that in 1884 the company operated about 2,800 miles, of which it owned in round numbers 1,250 miles and leased 1,550 miles. Of the 2,800 miles operated by the company, 1,600 miles were what were termed land-grant roads.

Very soon after the completion of its road, the question came before the accounting officers in the Treasury Department as to the basis upon which compensation for Government services was to be computed and retained for the payment of its bonds and interest, under the acts of 1862 and 1864—that is, whether one-half of the compensation earned by the company in the service of the Government upon its entire system of roads, including non-aided as well as aided lines, should be retained by the Secretary of the Treasury and applied in payment pro tanto of the interest falling due annually upon the bonds of the United States issued in aid of the company, or whether these earnings should not be apportioned pro rata between the bonded and the non-bonded portions of the company's roads, and only one-half of the amount earned upon the bonded portion be retained for the purposes aforesaid.

It was then held by the accounting officers that one-half of the entire earnings of the company in the Government service, without reference to any discrimination between aided and non-aided lines, should be retained and applied as aforesaid.

This construction of the acts of 1862 and 1864 was acquiesced in by the company, and, so far as I can learn, no objection or protest was made or entered against the action of the accounting officers.

The entire Government loan being upwards of $27,000,000, and the interest upon it being over $1,600,000 the amounts to be applied under this construction of the law proved to be entirely inadequate to extinguish the interest annually falling due upon the bonds of the Government issued to the company; and in 1873 interest had accrued thereon, and remained unpaid, to the amount of several millions of dollars which the revenues due to the company from the United States, under the acts of 1862 and 1864, were insufficient to liquidate. This evidently led to the passage of the act of 1873, the second section of which, subsequently incorporated in the Revised Statutes, section 5260, directed the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold all payments to any railroad company and its assigns on account of freights or transportation over their respective roads of any kind to the amount of payments made by the United States for interest upon bonds of the United States issued to any such company and which shall not have been reimbursed, together with the five per centum of the net earnings due and not applied as provided by law. And a subsequent section provided that the company might bring suit in the Court of Claims to recover the price of such freight or transportation, and in such suit the right of the company to recover the same upon the law and the facts of the case should be determined and also the rights of the United States upon the merits of all the points presented by it in answer thereto.

It was apparently the view of Congress that the unpaid accrued interest upon the Government subsidy bonds constituted a debt of the company to the United States which was then due and payable, and which might be offset against the one-half of the earnings of the company for Government transportation which the act of 1864 required to be paid to the company; and that by directing the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold payment and compelling the company to resort to the Court of Claims to recover the moneys due it, under the act of 1864, this set-off might be made available.

But the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case against the Union Pacific Railroad Company, decided in October, 1875 (91 U. S., 72), held that the company could not be required to pay the interest annually accruing upon its bonds until the maturity of the principal, which would not occur until 1897, and the object which the Federal legislature sought to accomplish by the passage of the act of 1873 was thereby frustrated.

Meanwhile the accrued interest upon these bonds was accumulating at a rapid rate and in 1878 amounted to more than $13,500,000; and Congress again undertook to provide some security to the Government against future loss from this source; and on May 7, 1878, passed what is commonly known as "the Thurman act," and which, in brief, was entitled "An act to alter and amend the act of eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and also to alter and amend the act of eighteen hundred and sixty-four," the first section of which provided that the net earnings mentioned in the act of 1862 should be ascertained by deducting from the gross amount of the earnings of the company certain items of expenditure enumerated and excluding certain other items named, and that this section should take effect June 30, 1878, and be applicable to all computations of net earnings thereafter.

The second section provided "that the whole amount of compensation which may, from time to time, be due to said several railroad companies, respectively, for services rendered for the Government shall be retained by the United States, one-half thereof to be presently applied to the liquidation of the interest paid and to be paid by the United States upon the bonds so issued by it as aforesaid to each of said corporations severally, and the other half thereof to be turned into the sinking fund, hereinafter provided, for the uses therein mentioned."

Section 3 established a sinking fund, and section 4 provided "that there shall be carried to the credit of said fund on the first day of February in each year the one-half of compensation for services hereinbefore named rendered for the Government by said Central Pacific Railroad Company not applied in liquidation of interest; and, in addition thereto, the said company shall, on said day of each year, pay into the Treasury, to the credit of said sinking fund, the sum of one million two hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary to make the five per centum of the net earnings of said road, payable to the United States under said act of eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and the whole sum earned by it, as compensation for services rendered for the United States, together with the sum by this section required to be paid, amount in the aggregate to twenty-five per centum of the whole net earnings of said railroad company, ascertained and defined as hereinbefore provided, for the year ending on the thirty-first day of December next preceding."

Subsequent sections of the act make provision for the final disposition of the sinking fund and for its application eventually to the liquidation of the debts of the company, especially those which had priority over the lien of the bonds held by the United States. At the time of the passage of this act the company was operating as one system over 2,200 miles of road, being over 1,336 miles in excess of the 864 miles originally constructed by Government aid.

After the passage of the Thurman act the accounting officers adjusted the accounts of the Central Pacific Railroad Company for transportation services rendered by it over any and all portions of its various lines, without reference to the fact whether the same had been built by Government aid, and the whole amount of the earnings of the company for such transportation was covered into the Treasury and applied in the manner required by the provisions of that act. And this practice continued until May 24, 1883, when the then First Comptroller of the Treasury, upon appeal from the decision of the Sixth Auditor as to the right of the Utah and Northern Railway Company to payment for its services in carrying the mails of the United States, held that payment must in that instance be made by the Government to the railway company. The Utah and Northern Railway Company was neither owned nor leased by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, but, in the language of the decision (see 4 Lawrence, page 188), was "controlled" by that company.

While the First Comptroller discussed many questions which were not pertinent to the decision of the appeal then under consideration, and indicated his views thereon, yet, in a concluding paragraph of the opinion, he declares that "it is not intended to decide any question beyond that presented by the facts of this case."

This decision of the Comptroller seems to have been regarded by the then Secretary of the Treasury as deciding that the Government had no right, either under the act of 1873, or the Thurman act, or the supplementary act of March 3, 1879, to withhold payment from the Pacific Railroad Companies for transportation services performed for the Government, except over such portions thereof as had been built by aid of Government bonds; and a circular order or letter to that effect was promulgated by the Treasury Department June 27, 1883.

The Second Comptroller, however, who had the adjustment of the accounts of the War and Navy Departments and of the Indian service, took a different view of the question, and held that it was the duty of the Secretary to withhold payment of all moneys due these companies for Government transportation, and adjusted the accounts of the companies of which he had jurisdiction in accordance therewith.

The Secretary of the Treasury seems to have become dissatisfied with the circular letter of June 27, 1883, and on January 12, 1884, issued another letter upon the subject, which recites that it is deemed advisable to submit the question to Congress, and that thereafter all balances ascertained by the accounting officers to be due for these services should be certified, without suggestion as to the mode of payment, and thus reported to the Secretary subject to the future disposition of Congress. That body was then in session, but took no action in the premises, and again met and adjourned without providing any solution of the question.

Since January 19, 1884, these accounts have been adjusted and certified in accordance with the provisions of the circular of that date; and, so far as they relate to the earnings of the Central Pacific Company upon the non-aided portions of its lines, the moneys earned in the Government service have neither been covered into the Treasury and applied as required by the provisions of the Thurman act, nor has the company been paid or received any credit for them whatever. This motion has therefore been made, in which the company seek, in effect, to have the order of January 19, 1884, revoked, and that of June 27, 1883, revived and enforced. The motion has a very wide scope, and its proper determination involves the true construction of those provisions of the Thurman act which require that all compensation due the company for services rendered the Government shall be retained by the Secretary of the Treasury and applied as therein directed.

It is insisted by the counsel for the company that this act is in terms, or by necessary implication, limited in its operation in this respect to the earnings for Government transportion over those portions of the company's lines in aid of which subsidy bonds had been issued, and that both the Supreme Court of the United States and the Court of Claims have so held in repeated adjudications upon the subject. I am unable to assent to this proposition; but if the Federal judiciary have so decided, it should foreclose all discussion of the point by the executive branch of the Government. I have examined all of the authorities cited by counsel, and I do not find that in any of them was the precise question here presented considered or decided. The cases most confidently relied upon by the company are the United States v. Kansas Pacific Railway Company (99 U. S., 455; 12 C. Cls., 237); Same v. Denver Pacific Railway Company (99 U. S., 460; 13 C. Cls., 302). But both of these cases arose before the passage of the Thurman act, and the construction of that act was not, and could not have been, the subject of judicial determination.

In the former case the principal question decided was, that the subsidy bonds issued by the Government were only a lien upon that portion of the road which had been built by the aid thereof; and in the latter case it turned out that the railroad company had not been the recipient of any subsidy bonds at all.

In the former case there was some discussion as to what constituted net earnings under the acts of 1862 and 1864, and the court reiterated the rule laid down by it in the case of The Union Pacific Railroad Company vs. The United States, (99 U. S., 402;) and while that case also arose before the Thurman act, it will be observed that the court, at page 419, when undertaking to define net earnings under the acts of 1862 and 1864, says, "These earnings, however, must be regarded as embracing all the earnings and income derived by the company from the railroad proper, and all the appendages and appurtenances thereof, including its ferry and bridge at Omaha, its cars, and all its property and apparatus legitimately connected with its railroad." And in the Denver Pacific Railway case, the court, in a foot-note, says that the exemption of the road from all liability to have its compensation for Government transportation withheld is based upon the fact that the company was not indebted to the United States; and Attorney-General Devens, in an opinion dated June 18, 1880, (16 Opinions, 517,) advised the retention of all compensation to the Central Pacific Company, upon all its lines and branches, until the question could be judicially determined, holding that it was not disposed of in either of the cases referred to. But the Supreme Court, in later cases, known as "The Sinking-fund Cases," (99 U. S., 700,) where the validity of the Thurman act was directly assailed, explicitly declared that the question was still an open one. They confirm the constitutionality of the Thurman act, and hold that the establishment of the sinking-fund created by it is a reasonable regulation of the administration of the affairs of the companies, promotive alike of the interests of the public and of the corporators, and is warranted under the authority which Congress has, by way of amendment, to change or modify the rights, privileges, and immunities granted by it; and at page 731 the Chief-Justice says, "It is not necessary now to inquire whether, in ascertaining the net earnings of the company for the purpose of fixing the amount of the annual contributions to the sinking fund, the earnings of all the roads owned by the present corporation are to be taken into account, or only of those in aid of which the land grants were made and the subsidy bonds issued. The question here is only as to the power of Congress to establish the fund at all. If disputes should ever arise as to the manner of stating the accounts, they can be settled at some future time."

It is not probable that such language would have been used at the very term at which the decisions of the Kansas Pacific and the Denver Pacific cases were handed down, if the court had regarded those decisions as settling the question of the extent to which the Government had the right to withhold compensation under the Thurman act.

The only remaining decision to which my attention has been called is that of the Pacific Railroad cases in 16 Court of Claims, 353. It was there held that the Thur-

this act did not extend to earnings by the Union Pacific Railway of the Kansas Pacific Company, which had become consolidated with it on the 24th of January, 1880, and the decision was based upon the ground that the consolidation had taken place after the passage of the Thurman act, and that the Kansas Pacific was nowhere referred to in that act; and the court, at page 360 says, "We are therefore led to the conclusion that section 2 of the act of 1878 was intended to apply only to the Union Pacific and Central Pacific roads as they then stood, and to their respective liabilities to the Government based on the bonds issued to them, respectively, by the Government."

Under this ruling the Government would have the right to retain the earnings of the Central Pacific for transportation over those roads which comprised its lines on the 7th day of May, 1878, when the Thurman act was passed, which will be found to have included nearly 2,200 miles of its roadway.

If the language employed in the Thurman act is to be given its ordinary and obvious meaning, there would seem to be but little room for doubt that it was the intention of Congress that the United States should retain the whole amount of compensation which might, from time to time, be due to the company from the Government, and that no separation or apportionment of its earnings between the aided and non-aided lines of the company was contemplated by the law-making power.

It would be difficult to employ words more pointed or explicit in this respect than those in which the second section of the act is expressed. And here it may be observed that it does not necessarily follow that if the net earnings referred to in the first and fourth sections of the act should be limited to the income of the company derived from the operation of the subsidized portion of its lines, the same limitation must be applied to the compensation to be retained under the second section.

Upon whatever basis the net earnings might be computed, and whether the compensation due the company from the United States exceeded the 25 per cent. of the net earnings provided for in section 4 or not, there were manifest reasons of propriety and sound public policy which required that the United States should be prohibited from making any money payments to the company on account of its Government service.

The company then owed the United States more than $13,500,000 of accrued interest, and without charging the company any interest upon the interest from the time when the Government was compelled to liquidate it, yet the interest was accruing annually upon the principal of the Government subsidy bonds at the rate of over $1,600,000.

It was not probable that the annual earnings of the company upon all its lines, of every character, in the Government service would ever equal this sum, to say nothing of the amount which must annually be reserved in order to extinguish the accrued interest upon the maturity of the bonds. This would require, in any view of the question, the reservation by the United States of the sum of $2,300,000 annually, but as a matter of fact the total compensation due the company from the United States, in any one year, has not exceeded one-half of that sum.

Take, for example, the earnings of the company as shown by the railroad commissioner's report for the year which ended June 30, 1884, and we find that the charges of the company for Government transportation amounted to $918,478.26, which if prorated over the aided and non-aided lines, gives $403,241.26 as the share of the former, and $515,237 as that of the latter. The net earnings of the aided line were $2,646,122.76, 25 per cent. of which is $661,530.69.

If the position of the company is tenable, the United States could not retain more than this amount from the moneys due from the Government to the company, but would be compelled to pay to the company, in cash, $256,947.57, although there was still due the United States from the company, for interest which had accrued in that year, the sum of $1,000,000, which was unprovided for.

It is not probable that Congress, which was charged with the duty of protecting the public funds from loss or waste, ever intended any such consequences to flow from an enactment the declared purpose of which was to provide adequate security for the Government.

One of the plain objects of the Thurman act was to put a stop to the further payment by the Government of money to a corporation which was largely its debtor. It had undertaken to accomplish this by the passage of the act of 1873, section 5260 of the Revised Statutes, but under the decisions of the Court of Claims this statute afforded no adequate remedy, and Congress was again called upon to legislate upon the subject, and the result was the passage of the act in question.

The change of language or form of expression from the act of 1862 is also significant. In section 6 of that act, which relates to the Government service and compensation therefor, and also to the retention of 5 per cent. of the net earnings, the reference in each case is to the road built by Government aid, while the reference in section 2 of the Thurman act is to the amount of compensation which may be due to the company from the United States.

There are also other internal evidences, furnished by the act of 1878, which lead to the same conclusion. The fourth section speaks of the earnings in the Government service as "the whole sum earned by it (the company) as compensation for services rendered for the United States." It also provides as the maximum amount to be contributed by the company to the sinking-fund the sum of $1,200,000, which, with the whole sum earned in the Government service and the 5 per cent. of net earnings, was designed to make up in the aggregate 25 per cent. of the net earnings of the company. But no such sum would have been necessary if the present contention of the company is well founded, for the reports of that year show that, computing the amount due the company from the United States and the 5 per cent. of net earnings upon the basis which the company now insists upon, they would amount to within $62,000 of the 25 per cent. of the net earnings of the subsidized portion of the road.

Congress apparently contemplated that the full sum of $1,200,000 might be required to make up the 25 per cent. of net earnings referred to in the act; but this could only happen in case the entire earnings of the company were intended; and, by making the necessary computations, it will be found that in each year subsequently the amount so required falls but little short of the sum named in the act.

The recitals in the act are also proper to be considered in determining its meaning and scope. In this act we find various recitals, by way of preamble, and among others, the declaration that the Western Pacific Railroad Company has since its incorporation, and since the original incorporation of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, become merged in and consolidated with the latter under the name of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and that "divers other railroad companies have been merged in and consolidated with said Central Pacific Railroad Company."

Congress was legislating, not with reference to the Central Pacific Railroad Company as primarily organized, consisting only of that line of road which had been constructed by the aid of Government bonds, but it was dealing with a company which had already absorbed many other companies, and which had taken on a new character and incorporated into its railway system so many lines of connection that its mileage had increased nearly threefold; and whenever, in the act, it speaks of the earnings of the company, or of the compensation due to the company from the United States, the language must be construed with reference to the existing status of the corporation at the time the earnings are realized or the compensation becomes due. Unless this construction is adopted, it will be difficult to determine what the net earnings of the aided portions of the company's lines are, or what proportion of the compensation due it for Government service has been earned upon the aided lines, for the system is managed by the company as an entirety, the earnings and expenses going into a common pool, and no separation can be made which must not depend in a measure upon arbitrary rules to be adopted by the company.

If mileage is to be adopted as the standard by which the earnings of the subsidized portion of the road are to be measured, it would be within the power of the company to absorb other connecting and parallel lines in which its stockholders may be interested, and the operation of which might be less profitable than that of the original line of the company to such an extent as to reduce the share of the subsidized portion to a minimum, or, if the company owned and controlled parallel lines, it might divert the transportation in the Government service over those lines, and thus leave nothing due to be retained under the Thurman act.

The Auditor of Railroad Accounts, in his report to the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1879, at page 40, appreciating the consequences detrimental to the interests of the Government which would result from such a construction of the statutes, and after demonstrating, by reference to the reports of the company, that the net earnings per mile had been reduced from $6,509.37 in 1874 and 1875, to $4,332.42 in 1877 and 1878, by an increase of the mileage of the company's roads, says that, "If the Government 5 per cent. is to be computed on the amount of net earnings ascertained on the basis of mileage pro rata, these railroad companies have only to lease enough unprofitable lines, of which they may be themselves the owners, to reduce the Government 5 per cent., or 25 per cent. even, to a mere pittance.

There can be no question that under section 5260 of the Revised Statutes all the moneys due the company on account of freight or transportation were to be withheld to the amount of payments made by the United States for interest upon bonds issued by them to any such company, in addition to the 5 per cent. of net earnings which the act of 1862 authorized to be retained, and that Congress understood that the act of May 7, 1878, was not intended to permit the payment of any sums directed to be withheld by section 5260 is evidenced by the provision in chapter 183 of the laws of 1879, which directs the manner in which the Secretary of the Treasury shall make the entries upon the books of the Department in the adjustment of the accounts of the Pacific railroad companies. It is there provided that, for the proper adjustment of the accounts of the Central Pacific Company, and other companies enumerated, for services which have been or might thereafter be performed for the Government for transportation of the Army and of the mails, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to make such entries upon the books of the Department as will carry to the credit of said companies the amount so earned, or to be earned, by them during each fiscal year and withheld under the provisions of section 5260 of the Revised Statutes and the act of Congress approved May 7, 1878. The reference here is to the entire earnings of the company for Government transportation, without limitation or apportionment, and the direction to the Secretary is explicit and unequivocal that the whole amount due the company from the United States shall be carried to its credit under the acts aforesaid. And so in the deficiency bill passed April 30, 1878, seven days before the passage of the Thurman act, in the clause making an appropriation for the transportation of the Army, there was inserted a proviso that no part of this sum should be paid to any railroad company, or to its assigns, on account of freight or transportation over their respective roads, unless there be an excess due such company after charging the amount of payments made by the United States for interest upon the bonds of the United States issued to any such company; but the same shall be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be by him withheld, as directed by existing law. In this condition of the statutes, and the decisions of the courts upon the subject, a due regard for the protection of the public interests would seem to require the Secretary of the Treasury to follow the letter of the law and withhold payment of all moneys due the company for Government transportation. No injustice will be done, and no loss will accrue to the company in consequence of the adoption of this course, for all of the moneys withheld will be carried to the credit of the company, and either presently applied in the extinguishment pro tanto of the interest upon the subsidy bonds, which it is obligated to pay, or else safely invested for the benefit of the company, to be ultimately devoted, with its accumulation of interest, to the payment of the obligations of the company when they mature. The debtor company is in no wise harmed, while the Government, as a creditor, is, to this extent, made more secure.

With reference to the order of the late Secretary of January 12, 1884, it is difficult to see how it can longer be upheld. It was evidently intended only to be temporary in its operation, and it anticipated that some explanatory or remedial legislation by Congress would be had. But two sessions have since passed, and that body has manifested no disposition to further legislate upon the subject. Under this order, an approximate estimate shows that over nine hundred thousand dollars are now held in suspense, having been neither paid to the company nor credited to them under the Thurman act. It is clear that the Government can not properly refuse to act at all in the matter. It should either pay this money over to the company, or else it should be covered into the Treasury and invested and applied as required by the act of 1878. As the result of this review of the statutes and decisions upon the subject, I would respectfully submit the following recommendations:

First. That the circular letter or order of the Secretary of the Treasury of June 27, 1883, and that of January 12, 1884, be both revoked.

Second. That the amount of compensation due the company for Government service, heretofore audited by the accounting officers and not applied because of the directions in said order of January 12, 1884, should be covered into the Treasury, and one-half thereof applied to the extinguishment of interest which has meanwhile accrued on the Government subsidy bonds, and the other half credited to the sinking-fund, as required by the Thurman act.

Third. Hereafter the accounting officers of the Treasury adjust the accounts of the company for compensation due it for Government transportation, and direct that the whole amount of such compensation be retained by the Secretary of the Treasury and applied in the manner pointed out by that act.

Fourth. No decision of the Supreme Court of the United States affecting the question having been made since the opinion of Attorney-General Devens, dated June 18, 1880 (16 Opinions, 517), was rendered, a further reference of the questions here involved to the Department of Justice would seem to be unnecessary.

I. H. MAYNARD,
Second Comptroller.

Department Circular No. 83, of June 27, 1883, and circular letter of January 12, 1884, are hereby revoked, and all compensation now due or which may hereafter become due the Central Pacific Railroad Company for services rendered for the Government will be withheld and applied as indicated in the above decision.

DANIEL MANNING,
Secretary.

UNITED STATES PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION,
19 Wall Street, New York, November 5, 1887.

SIR: The United States Pacific Railway Commission, which has been charged by Congress with the duty of furnishing information respecting the working and financial management of the bond-aided Pacific railroads and their relations to the Government, request that you will kindly cause to be furnished to it information on the following points—the particulars asked for being necessary for the preparation of complete answers to the interrogatories set forth by Congress in the act creating the Commission.

In the course of the investigation of the Commission, complaint has been made by the bond aided companies, especially by the Central and Union Pacific Companies, that the War Department has discriminated against them by sending troops and munitions of war over other roads when they could have been transported as well or better over the bond-aided lines.

At Kansas City, Hon. John P. Usher charged that in 1886 coal had been sent to Fort Riley, Kans., over the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road, and that the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company should have been given the transportation of the coal.

Will you kindly inform the Commission as to the policy of the War Department with reference to such transportation, and if such diversions have occurred, will you kindly specify the instances, the amounts involved, and the reasons therefor.

By section 6 of the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," the bond-aided roads were required to transmit dispatches over their telegraph lines, and to transport mails and munitions of war, supplies and public stores on said railroad for the Government whenever required to do so by any department thereof. They were also required to give the Government the preference in the use of the same at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amount paid by private parties for the same kind of service.

The Commission would be glad to know whether so far as your Department is concerned, those provisions of law have been complied with. The Commission is also required by act to ascertain "the average cost per annum of Government transportation in the region now traversed by the Pacific Railroads between the year 1850 and the completion of said roads, also the average cost since such completion." If there are any records in your Department which will furnish this information or any part of it, we will be obliged if you will present it in such form as will enable the Commission to answer the question.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT E. PATTISON,
Chairman.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, November 9, 1887.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 5th instant, requesting certain information in regard to the relations between the bond-aided Pacific railroads and the War Department, I beg to inclose a letter of the 7th instant from the Quartermaster-General upon the subject, which, it is believed, together with its accompanying papers, also inclosed, will be found to contain the desired information.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. ROBERT E. PATTISON,
Chairman U. S. Pacific Railway Commission,
10 Wall Street, New York, N. Y.

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 7, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the communication of the chairman of the United States Pacific Railway Commission of November 5, 1887, requesting information regarding certain matters pertaining to the relations between the bond-aided Pacific Railroads and the War Department.

With reference to the inquiry of the Commission as to the policy of the War Department in the matter of alleged discriminations against the railroads in sending troops and munitions of war over other roads when they could have been transported as well or better over the bond-aided lines, it is respectfully reported that the preference is in all cases, so far as known to this office, given to the bond-aided railroads, as required by the order of the honorable the Secretary of War of July 10, 1885, a copy of which, with the correspondence upon which it was based, is herewith inclosed.

Regarding the charge made by the Hon. John P. Usher, that coal had been sent to Fort Riley, Kans., over the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, and that the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company should have been given the transportation of the coal, the Quartermaster-General begs leave to differ from the opinion of the Hon. Mr. Usher, for the following reasons:

The Missouri, Kansas and Texas Division of the Missouri Pacific Railway from Junction City, Kans. (a point 3 miles from Fort Riley, Kans.), to the southern boundary of Kansas (182.75 miles), is a land-grant railroad of that class which, by the terms of the act of Congress granting the lands to aid in its construction, is required "at all times to transport troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon its road for the Government of the United States, free from all cost or charge therefor to the Government." (See General Orders A. G. O., No. 89 of 1885, pages 16 and 44, copy herewith.)

It is, therefore, apparent that the transportation of coal for the Government and all other public property over the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad costs the United States absolutely nothing; and it is considered that an officer of the Government would be derelict if in forwarding freight to Fort Riley from any point where the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad could be conveniently used, he should select the Kansas Pacific route for the transportation, and thereby incur an indebtedness to be settled by the Government.

With reference to the inquiry of the Commission whether, so far as the War Department is concerned, the law has been complied with which requires the bond-aided roads to give the Government the preference in the transmission of telegrams over their telegraph lines and in the transportation of troops and supplies, and at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amount paid by private parties for the same kind of service, it is respectfully reported that, so far as known to this office, these railroad companies have not declined to give the Government the preference in such cases.

As to the charges made for telegraph service, it is remarked that these railroad companies hold that they are not subject to the law of July 24, 1866, empowering the Postmaster-General to fix annually the rates to be paid by the Government for telegraphic messages, and that they claim the "commercial rates" for such service; that is, the rates paid by the public generally.

No judicial decision upon this point is known to have been rendered; the decisions of the accounting officers of the Treasury upon the question do not seem to be uniform. Settlements have been made at the high commercial rates, but it is thought at present the Government rates only are allowed, and the whole matter is in an undefined state, owing to a claim upon the part of the Government that payment for all messages which pass over the lines of telegraph constructed along these roads, whether owned and operated by the railroad companies, the Western Union Telegraph Company, or any other company, should be withheld and applied upon the indebtedness of the respective railroads for bonds issued in their behalf. This claim on the part of the Government has resulted in the accumulation of a large number of unsettled and unadjusted accounts for public telegrams sent along the lines of these railroads.

As to the rates charged by these railroad companies for the transportation of United States troops and property, it is remarked that the rule has been to allow those rates for similar service which appear in the published tariffs of the railroad companies, supplemented by the certificate of the auditor of the company upon each account that the rates charged were the current and lowest rates charged the public at time of service.

Complaints have reached this office that these railroad companies discriminate against the United States in favor of private shippers, and in such cases an investigation of the subject has been made, and the facts reported to the accounting officers of the Treasury in transmitting the accounts for settlement. In connection with this subject attention is especially invited to Senate Report No. 504, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, wherein will be found the opinion of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and various reports of the Quartermaster's Department upon this subject.

With reference to the request of the Commission for assistance to enable it to report upon "the average cost per annum of Government transportation in the region now traversed by the Pacific Railroads between the year 1850 and the completion of said roads, also the average cost since such completion," I have the honor to invite attention to the inclosed copy of a report of the Quartermaster-General made September 29, 1884, to the honorable the Secretary of War, upon a request of the Commissioner of Railroads for similar information. The mass of information contained in this report was carefully collected at the time from the records of this office. The record has been carried to the year 1887, and is respectfully submitted for the information of the Commission.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. HOLABIRD,
Quartermaster-General, U. S. Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, EQUITABLE BUILDING,
San Francisco, Cal., May 23, 1885.

DEAR SIR: I desire to call your attention to a matter of considerable importance to the Union Pacific Railway Company, in which the United States is a very large creditor. This company finds itself at many points in competition with other lines for the transportation of Government freights, the greater part of which, I am informed, are moved under orders from your Department. The rates at which these shipments go forward are, under the laws of competition, the same over the lines of this company as they are over the lines of its rivals. The first impression, therefore, is that it is as economical for the Government to offer its shipments to one line as to another. This, however, is a mistake. The Union Pacific Company, as you are doubtless fully advised, has received from the United States upwards of $33,000,000 in 6 per cent. bonds, the amount of which it is under obligations to repay, together with the interest which may accrue thereon, at their maturity, some time between 1895 and 1899.

By judicial construction of the company's charter the principal of these bonds and and the accumulated interest thereon have been held to be not repayable by the company until the maturity of the bonds, except in so far as the application of certain sums contingent upon the amount of Government transportation and the amount of the company's net earnings are concerned.

Under the company's charter, and under the provisions of the Thurman act, one-half of the entire amount earned by this company from the transportation of Government freight, troops, mails, etc., is retainable by the United States and presently applicable to the extinguishment of the debt and the accrued interest. The United States, in engaging the Union Pacific to perform its transportation, therefore, not only strengthens the company in its ability to discharge its obligations to the United States, but it exercises an option, reserved under the charter, of declaring to be presently due a part of the debt equal to one-half of the total earnings derived from the Government transportation. In other words, the Government is at liberty to immediately apply on the debt 50 per cent. of these transportation charges, when in the absence of such application payment of the amount thus applied would be postponed until the maturity of the debt, some thirteen years hence.

From a computation which I have caused to be made it appears that on each $1,000 thus earned by the company from Government transportation and retainable by the United States on account of the debt and on the increased net earnings resulting from that transportation, there will accrue to the United States as interest (reckoning the funds as worth 3 per cent. per annum) $214.50. This accumulation of interest inures entirely to the benefit of the United States, as it is independent of the accumulations of interest on the sinking fund established under the "Thurman act," which latter inure to the benefit of the company. Thus, while a service valued at $1,000 when rendered by a rival company requires the payment by the United States of that amount in cash, the performance of the same services by the Union Pacific Company enables the Government to retain and at once apply to the extinguishment of the debt an amount which would not otherwise be applicable until 1898. It may therefore be said that under the charter relations existing between the United States and this company the company's charges to the Government are about 20 per cent. less than are the charges of its competitors, although apparently the same.

Possibly the importance of these considerations has not been fully recognized in the Departments. They present themselves to me as having force and character, and such as your Department may desire to entertain. It is, of course, wholly in the interest of the company that I address you in relation to these matters. Any increase, however, in the company's business which may come from an increase in its services for the United States must be, as I have pointed out, to the mutual advantage of both parties.

I remain, very respectfully, yours,

CHARLES F. ADAMS, Jr.,
President.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

[First indorsement.]

Respectfully referred to the Quartermaster-General for remark.
By order of the Secretary of War.

JOHN TWEEDALE,
Chief Clerk.

WAR DEPARTMENT, June 6, 1885.

[Second indorsement.]

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1885.

Respectfully returned to the honorable the Secretary of War, inviting attention to the inclosed copy of report of the Quartermaster-General, dated February 2, 1885, and to the decision of the Secretary of War thereon, dated February 6, 1885, in which the question is discussed whether the United States should use an indebted railroad instead of one not indebted, charges being the same.

S. B. HOLABIRD,
Quartermaster-General, U. S. A.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the inclosed communication of the shipping quartermaster at Portland, Oregon, making the following inquiry:

"In making shipments from this city to points east of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers, such as Chicago, New York, Washington, etc., shall I issue bills of lading over the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company and Northern Pacific Railroad to Saint Paul, or over the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company and Union Pacific, say, to Omaha?"

The extension of the Oregon Short Line, a road owned and operated by the Union Pacific (Bonded) Railway, to a junction with the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company's railroad at Huntington, has opened a new route of traffic between Oregon points and points east of the Mississippi River, and has brought the Union Pacific Railway into sharp competition with the Northern Pacific Railroad for this business.

As a matter of fact, the Quartermaster's Department, by taking advantage of this new route, via the Union Pacific Railway, would save a large amount of money to the appropriation "Transportation of the Army," because in transporting United States troops and military supplies, say, between Portland, Oregon, and Chicago, Ill., the only payments to be made out of that appropriation would be for the transportation from Portland to Huntington (404 miles), and from the Mississippi River to Chicago (183 miles).

From Huntington to Granger (540 miles), over the Oregon Short Line, the money value of such transportation is withheld for future disposition by Congress, under decision of the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury, of January 18, 1881, relating to settlements with railroads owned, leased, and operated by the bonded Pacific railroads.

From Granger to Council Bluffs (880 miles), over the main line Union Pacific Railway, the money value of such transportation is applied to the debt of that railway company to the United States, under the provisions of the act of May 7, 1878 (Thurman law).

From Council Bluffs to the Mississippi River, say, Davenport, Iowa, over the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad (317.75 miles), 50 per cent. of tariff rates is paid out of a special appropriation for land-grant railroads made by Congress.

Compare these facts with those arising out of the use of the Northern Pacific Route for transportation between Portland and Chicago, and the following result is reached:

From Portland, Oregon, to Brainerd, Minn. (1,774 miles), over the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company and Northern Pacific Railroad, full tariff rates must be paid out of the appropriation "Transportation of the Army." Although the Northern Pacific is a land-grant railroad, yet, under the law, no deduction is made from its accounts for military transportation.

From Brainerd, Minn., to Watab, Minn. (55 miles), over the old Western Minnesota Railroad, now operated by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, 50 per cent. of tariff rates is paid out of the special appropriation for land-grant railroads made by Congress.

From Watab to Minneapolis, over the Saint Paul and Northern Pacific Railroad (74.55 miles), operated by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, full tariff rates must be paid.

From Minneapolis to 11 miles south of Warrens, Wis., 185 miles, over the Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad, and the Chicago, Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railway, 50 per centum of tariff rates is paid out of the special appropriation for land-grant railroads.

From 11 miles south of Warren to Chicago (238 miles), over the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, full tariff rates must be paid.

Thus by the Union Pacific Railway route, Portland to Chicago (2,324 miles), the transportation over 587 miles only is payable out of the Army transportation appropriation, and for the transportation over the remaining 1,737 miles, settlements are made as explained above.

While by the Northern Pacific route between the same points, 2,322 miles, the transportation over 2,087 miles is payable out of appropriation for Army transportation, and for the transportation over the remaining 235 miles, settlements are at 50 per cent. of tariff rates, as explained above.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company was paid by the Quartermaster's Department for transportation services during the year 1883-'84, $166,358.06 out of the appropriation "Army Transportation." The Union Pacific Railway was paid nothing for such service over the Oregon Short Line, and the main line of its railway. It is therefore apparent that there would be a great saving by the use of the Union Pacific route in this case, and as pertinent thereto the following directions of the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury, of June 27, 1883, are quoted:

"Whenever practicable, and more economical to do so, it is desirable that shipments of Government freight be made over railroads which have received aid in bonds or lands from the United States."

This Union Pacific route has been opened for a few weeks only; its transportation rates have not been received at this office; a definite comparison of rates cannot therefore be made.

It may be assumed, I think, that the rates over both routes to Eastern points are the same. A difference of but 2 miles in the relative distances by each route between Portland and Chicago, indicates that the time and rate schedules will be about the same over both routes.

It may be stated as a rule the Quartermaster's Department distributes its business impartially among the railroads. Where two roads, one land-grant, the other non-land-grant, run between the same points, the non-land-grant railroad is not boycotted, and the work all given to the railroad already subsidized by the Government; the usually traveled, least expensive, route is the guide of the department; and non-subsidized roads generally drop their rates to equal those of the subsidized roads in military transportation.

But competition between a bonded and non-bonded railroad opens other questions; the amounts withheld from bonded railroads are placed to their credit; virtually they are payments to the railroad, and in a broad view the United States pays to these bonded roads for their work a full equivalent of the cash money paid to non-bonded roads for like service.

Practically these very bonded railroads view this matter in this light, for they make every effort to secure Government business, knowing that they will not receive cash.

The question is respectfully submitted to the honorable the Secretary of War for any instructions he may wish to give.

Should he not give instructions, a division of the business will naturally be made, provided the ultimate cost to the United States shall be the same; all other conditions made the same.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. HOLABIRD,
Quartermaster-General U. S. Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

[First indorsement.]

It appearing that the actual cost to the Government is the same, whether cash is paid out or a credit of equal amount given, no reason is seen to change the practice of the Quartermaster's Department as indicated by the Quartermaster-General.

By order of the Secretary of War.

JOHN TWEEDALE,
Chief Clerk.

WAR DEPARTMENT, February 6, 1885.

WAR DEPARTMENT, July 10, 1885.

[Third indorsement.]

As between a railroad which has received aid in bonds from the United States and a non-bonded railroad, it is undoubtedly to the interest of the War Department to use a bonded railroad, for a great saving thereby results to the Army appropriation, the charges for transportation over such roads not being payable from appropriations under control of the War Department. It is evident also that it is to the interest of the Government to use a bonded railroad, for although, in the language of my predecessor, "the actual cost to the Government is the same whether cash is paid or credit for an equal amount given" (if the question of interest is not considered), still as the indebtedness of the road to the Government is reduced by the amount of the transportation service performed for the Government, the eventual payment of the debt is thus rendered more certain; and therefore when the question arises the preference will be given to the bonded railroad, and this decision is the more readily made as it is in accordance with the directions of the Secretary of the Treasury of June 27, 1883, referred to in the inclosed report of the Quartermaster-General of February 2, 1885, as follows:

"Whenever practicable and more economical to do so, it is desirable that shipments of Government freights be made over railroads which have received aid in bonds or lands from the United States."

By order of the Secretary of War.

JOHN TWEEDALE,
Chief Clerk.

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., September 29, 1884.

SIR: The letter from the office of the Commissioner of Railroads, dated August 29, 1884, requesting information concerning the rates and cost of transportation of United States troops and military supplies from 1860 to 1883, inclusive, referred to this office for report, is herewith respectfully returned.

As a compliance with the request, so far as the data at command of this office will permit, I have the honor to inclose:

Statement showing the amount of transportation provided by the Quartermaster's Department in the movement of United States troops and military property by rail, water, wagon, and stage, and the cost of the service for each fiscal year from 1884 back to 1866, including the service of the bonded Pacific Railroads, of which a supplemental report is appended. Supplemental report showing the amount of transportation provided by the Quartermaster's Department in the movement of United States troops and military property over the bonded Pacific railroads, their branches and leased lines, and the cost of the service for each fiscal year from 1884 back to 1866.

Statement showing cost of transportation of military supplies from Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to Fort Union, N. Mex., per 100 pounds entire distance, 750 miles, from 1860 to 1870, inclusive, before the establishment of railroad communication.

Statement showing rates paid for the transportation of United States troops by stage between points of the Mississippi River at various times between 1860 and 1867, before the establishment of railroad communication (selected from accounts paid by the Quartermaster's Department.)

Statement showing rates for passenger and freight paid in currency by the Quartermaster's Department for the transportation of United States troops and military supplies between New York City and San Francisco via the Isthmus of Panama (selected from accounts paid by the Quartermaster's Department).

Statement showing rates paid in currency by the Quartermaster's Department for the transportation of United States military stores between New York City and San Francisco via Cape Horn, from 1855 to 1864 (selected from accounts paid by the Quartermaster's Department).

Statement showing rates for passengers and freight paid in currency by the Quartermaster's Department for the transportation of United States troops and military stores between New York City, or Omaha, and San Francisco, via the Pacific Railroads from the date of their opening for transportation to 1884.

Report of post quartermaster, New Orleans, La., September 23, 1884, respecting shipments from that port to San Francisco before the establishment of railroad communications.

Letter of Thomas A. Scott, Assistant Secretary of War, and general manager United States military railroads, July 12, 1861, establishing rates of military transportation by railroads.

Report of committee of convention of railroad managers, called by the Secretary of War in April, 1862, fixing rates of military transportation during the war.

General Orders No. 9, Quartermaster-General's Office, February 22, 1867, abolishing from March 1, 1867, military rates prescribed by the convention of railroad managers in 1862, and authorizing settlements at railroad tariff rates for all services from that date, unless special arrangements more favorable to the Government can be secured.

It is remarked that since March 1, 1867, the Quartermaster's Department has on the whole paid little, if any, in excess of the military transportation rates by rail in effect during the war, except for service west of the Mississippi River, where railroad rates are probably three times higher than those east of that river.

Stage rates all over the country will average about 15 cents per man per mile.

Wagon rates on freight hauled 100 miles or over on routes west of the Mississippi will average about 25 cents per ton per mile.

Water rates can not be intelligibly averaged, involving, as they do, ocean, lake, river, and bay transportation, the use of sails and steam, and distances varying from a few miles to thousands.

It was never customary before the establishment of railroad communication to ship troops and stores overland from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean; they were first sent to New York city and thence via Panama or Cape Horn.

The information in these statements is in some degree not exact, having been gleaned from records of the office not kept with the view of tabulation for such purposes, but may be considered approximately correct.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. HOLABIRD,
Quartermaster General U. S. Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

From Baltimore, 90 cents per cubic foot, $4.50 per flour barrel.

From New York, $3.70 per barrel for flour, 60 cents per cubic foot for other packages.

Same rates apply to camp and garrison equipage and clothing, as all such freight by sea-going vessels is charged for by the cubic foot.

QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
New Orleans, La., September 23, 1864.

GENERAL: In reply to your communication of the 19th instant I have the honor to state that there has been no regular line of steamers or sailing vessels between this place and San Francisco, either via the Isthmus or Cape Horn since 1858. In that year a company started a steamship named the Costacoalcos between here and the Isthmus, but only two or three trips were made. I can not learn what the charges were for either freight or passage, as there is no trace of said company now in existence.

With the exception of the above, up to and including 1860, the only route of travel and freight from here to San Francisco was via New York or Havana where connection was made with the Greytown or Aspinwall steamers; but neither at that time nor since have any through rates from here been in operation.

The rate of passage from Saint Louis to New Orleans in 1860 was	$25.00
Freight for 100 pounds	1.00
From the opening of the Mississippi River to the 30th of June, 1864, the regular rates have been:
For passage	20.00
Freight per 100 pounds	.50

Private boats, such as the Great Republic in 1859 and the Natchez later, charged $25 for passage, and in times of "opposition" rates were much lower, but the above were those charged by regularly organized companies.

The Atlantic and Mississippi Steamship Company failed in 1870. The Saint Louis and New Orleans Packet Line and the Merchants' Southern Packet Line ran their boats from 1871 to 1878, and the Anchor Line, organized in 1878, is the only one now in existence.

There are no records of the old lines now in this city, and the foregoing information was obtained from the agent of the Anchor Line and from the steam-boat men who have been running on the Mississippi River for thirty years.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. W. SCULLY,
Major and Quartermaster U. S. Army.

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL, U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington. July 12, 1861.

DEAR SIR: In making settlements with railroad companies for transportation of troops and supplies, please observe the following as a general basis:

Per passenger per mile, 2 cents for distance moved.

Equipments, munitions, and supplies, accompanying regiments, first-class local rates, which will average about as follows:

	Cents.

150 miles, do	40
200 miles, do	50
300 miles, do	75
350 to 400 miles, not exceeding, do	90

For transportation of horses in small lots, the following are the usual estimated weights of railroad companies:

	Pounds.
Single animal	3,000
2 animals	4,000
3 animals	5,000
4 animals	6,500
5 animals	8,000
6 animals	9,000
7 animals	10,000
8 animals	11,000
9 animals	12,000
Full car-loads, thirteen or fourteen horses, usually charged	18,000

All other supplies forwarded by freight trains, all charged local rates according to classification of property, which will usually average, on provisions and heavy freights, 2 to 3 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds per mile. Dry-goods, clothing, and light goods will average 3 to 5 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds per mile.

Respectfully, etc.,

THOMAS A. SCOTT,
General Manager.

Major SIBLEY,
Quartermaster's Department.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

Resolved, That the rates offered to the Government for the transportation of passengers shall be 2 cents per mile, allowing to each soldier not exceeding 80 pounds of luggage—this to include those things ordinarily carried by a soldier in heavy marching order, and tents.

Resolved, That the rates for the transportation of freights shall be (under the four classifications last made by the four Atlantic trunk lines, with the additions hereunto annexed) the same as for the time being are charged for general transportation either local or through; but upon these rates, both local and through, there shall be made a reduction of 10 per cent. upon all transportation ordered by the Government through its proper officers; Provided, That, the rates for 50 miles or less shall not exceed on first class, 5 cents; on second class, 4½ cents; on third class, 4½ cents, and on fourth class, 4 cents per ton per mile; and that on distances above 50 miles the rate shall not exceed on first class, 3 cents; on second class, 2¾; on third class, 2½ cents, and on fourth class, 1¼ cents per ton per mile; and that whatever the distance ordered, the full length so ordered shall govern the rate whether the freight passes over one or many roads: And further provided, That in the application of the maximum rates to distances over 50 miles no increased distance shall be charged a less price, and the distance shall be estimated on both freight and passengers by the shortest lines, allowance being made for intermediate distances between terminal stations of connecting lines. It shall be the duty of each company to furnish the Secretary of War and to the Quartermaster-General copies of their through and local tariffs, and when changes are made to notify them of the same.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this convention that the Secretary of War should make such compensation as will be equitable to those roads whose expenses are enhanced by reason of being in or near the seat of war.

Resolved, That Hon. Erastus Corning, Samuel M. Felton, and Thomas L. Jewett be a committee on the part of this convention to confer and co-operate with the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster-General from time to time, with authority to take such action as may be necessary to produce harmonious and satisfactory results in the business relations of the Government with the railroads of the United States.

SPECIAL CLASSIFICATION.

First class.—Drums (twice first class), haversacks, canteens, camp kettles, and mess-pans, wagon covers, furniture and camp stools, hard bread, powder in barrels, buckets, clothing.

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 9. }

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 22, 1867.

By authority of the Secretary of War the military rates prescribed by the circular of the Quartermaster-General of May 1, 1862, will cease to apply in settlement for railroad transportation services rendered after the first day of March, 1867.

Officers of the Quartermaster's Department are informed that unless a more favorable special arrangement can be made with the railroad companies, separately or in satisfaction, either for fixed periods or in each case as it arises, settlement may be made at the rates of the public tariff, at date of service, of the railroad company or railroad line performing the transportation.

Officers paying railroad transportation accounts will be careful to provide themselves with authentic and official copies of the tariff of the railroads performing the services in force at the dates of service.

The forms of transportation orders and of bills of lading now in use, or as they may be modified by the revised regulations of the Quartermaster's Department, will be adhered to, and also the Government classification of stores and general method of settlement of accounts until further orders.

The restrictions hitherto existing upon payments to railroads which have received grants of lands from the Government are still in force.

D. H. RUCKER,
Acting Quartermaster-General, Brt. Major-General, U. S. Army.

UNITED STATES PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION,
10 Wall Street, New York, November 5, 1887.

SIR: The United States Pacific Railway Commission, which has been charged by Congress with the duty of furnishing information respecting the working and financial management of the bond-aided Pacific railroads and their relations to the Government, request that you will kindly cause to be furnished to it information on the following points, the particulars asked for being necessary for the preparation of complete answers to the interrogatories set forth by Congress in the act creating the Commission.

In the course of the investigation, complaint has been made by the officers of the bond-aided Pacific railroads that the United States Government had discriminated against them by sending seamen across the continent via Panamá instead of by rail over the bond-aided roads, and by sending material and supplies by way of Panama and by Cape Horn instead of over their roads. This complaint is based on the assumption that it was the duty of the Government, all else being equal, to give the transportation to bond-aided roads in preference to non-aided lines.

Will you kindly inform the Commission what has been the policy of the Department respecting this transportation, and if such diversions have occurred, kindly state the specific instances, the amounts involved, and the reason therefor.

By section 6 of the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," the bond-aided roads were required to transmit dispatches over their telegraph lines, and to transport mails, troops, and munitions of war, supplies and public stores on said railroad for the Government whenever required to do so by any department thereof. They were also required to give the Government the preference in the use of the same at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amounts paid to private parties for the same kind of service.

The Commission would be glad to know whether, so far as your Department is concerned, those provisions have been complied with.

I have the honor to remain,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT E. PATTISON,
Chairman.

Hon. W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of Navy, Washington, D. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 14, 1887.

SIR. I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, requesting to be furnished with information on the several points therein presented, with regard to the alleged discrimination against the bond-aided Pacific railroads in the transportation of seamen and freight to the Pacific coast; and asking whether the conditions of the act of July 1, 1862, requiring preference to be given to the Government in the use of the railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean in the transmission of telegraphic dispatches and the transportation of mails, troops, and munitions of war, supplies and public stores on said railroads have been complied with. In reply I have to inclose herewith a copy of a circular letter, addressed to the chiefs of the several Bureaus of the Department, and copies of the several replies thereto.

Very respectfully,

D. B. HARMONY,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. ROBERT E. PATTISON,
Chairman U. S. Pacific Railway Commission,
10 Wall street, New York.

[Circular to the Bureaus.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, November 7, 1887.

SIR: Please report to the Department, without delay, on the following points presented in a communication from the chairman of the United States Pacific Railway Commission:

I. Has there been any discrimination against the bond-aided Pacific railroads by sending seamen across the continent via Panama instead of by rail over such roads?

II. The same as to sending material and supplies by way of Panama and by Cape Horn, instead of over those roads.

III. What has been the policy respecting this transportation, and if such diversions have occurred, state the specific instances, the amounts involved, and the reason therefor.

IV. The chairman states that "By section 6 of the act of July 1, 1862, entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' the bond-aided roads were required to transmit dispatches over their telegraph lines and to transmit mails, troops, and munitions of war, supplies and public stores on said railroads for the Government whenever required to do so by any department thereof. They were also required to give the Government the preference in the use of the same at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amounts paid to private parties for the same kind of service," and asks whether those provisions have been complied with.

Very respectfully,

D. B. HARMONY,
Acting Secretary Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING,
Washington, November 8, 1887.

SIR: Replying to Department's circular, dated the 7th instant, regarding points presented in a communication from the chairman of the United States Pacific Railway Commission, I have the honor to report that so far as this Bureau is concerned, it has never discriminated against "the bond-aided Pacific railroads," in sending freights to the Pacific coast, and has no reason to believe that its charges for transportation of the small amount of freight which has been sent by this Bureau are in excess of that charged to private parties for same kind of service.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. MELVILLE,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, D. C., November 9, 1887.

SIR: In reply to the Department's circular of the 7th instant, you are respectfully informed that this Bureau is not aware of any discrimination against the bond-aided Pacific railroads. In point of fact, all material sent to California by this Bureau are shipped through the Quartermaster-General of the U. S. Army, and the accounts for the same are settled by the Fourth Auditor.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. D. WILSON,
Chief Constructor, U. S. Navy, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY,
Washington, November 8, 1887.

SIR: Referring to circular of November 7, I have the honor to state that all shipments of stores, and all transfers of sick or insane men, under charge of this Bureau, have been, and are, made over the Pacific railroads. No shipments or transfers have been made to or from California, either via Panama or Cape Horn.

Very respectfully,

F. M. GUNNELL,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 8, 1887.

SIR: In reply to the several interrogatories contained in the Department's circular letter to Bureaus, dated November 7 instant, this Bureau has the honor to report that it has no knowledge of any discrimination having been made against the bond-aided Pacific railroads, to which reference is made in Paragraphs I, II, and III. The provisions enumerated in section 6 of the act of July 1, 1862, referred to in Paragraph IV, have, so far as this Bureau is aware, been complied with.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. B. HARMONY,
Chief of Bureau.

Commodore D. B. HARMONY, U. S. N.,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, November 8, 1887.

SIR: In reply to the Department's circular to the Bureaus of the 7th instant, I have the honor to report that there has been no discrimination against the bond-aided Pacific railroads in the transportation of material, so far as this Bureau is concerned; and the provisions of the law specified have been complied with, as required by the Navy Department circular No. 18, of June 23, 1881.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

M. SICARD,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 8, 1887.

SIR: In compliance with the Department's circular of the 7th instant, I have the honor to report that materials and supplies under the cognizance of this Bureau, which require shipment from eastern stations to the Pacific coast of the United States, are invariably forwarded overland through the Army quartermasters' offices at New York, Philadelphia, and Washington, in accordance with previous orders from the Department.

No shipments to that coast are made by way of Panama or Cape Horn.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. G. WALKER,
Chief of Bureau.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Navy Department.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT AND RECRUITING,
Washington, November 10, 1887.

SIR: Replying to the circular letter of the Department, dated the 7th instant, in reference to points presented in a communication from the chairman of the United States Pacific Railway Commission, the Bureau would respectfully say in answer to the first question that there has been no discrimination against the bond-aided railroads by this Bureau in the matter of transportation of enlisted men.

When the Bureau has had occasion to send men from east to west or vice versa they have been uniformly carried by the Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company, via Panama, on account of the cheaper transportation compared with overland route, the difference by the former route being in favor of the Government at least 50 per cent.

In reply to the second question, it is the custom of the Bureau to send all freight overland, as required by Department circular No. 18, of June 23, 1881, the cost of said transportation being paid by the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury on the certificate of the Army quartermaster at Chicago, approved by the Bureau.

The reply of the Bureau to question number one and two seems to answer question "three" of the circular letter.

In reply to the fourth question, that the provisions of section 6 of the act of July 1, 1862, have been complied with; the matter of payment for telegraphing being somewhat similar to that for transportation of freight, the Bureau paying for no telegrams over the bond-aided lines, but simply certifies to the service, and the bills are settled by the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. S. SCHLEY,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF PROVISIONS AND CLOTHING,
Washington, D. C., November 9, 1887.

SIR: I have to report upon the following points presented in Department's circular to the Bureaus, under date of the 7th instant:

(1) "Has there been any discrimination against the bond-aided Pacific railroads by sending seamen across the continent via Panama instead of by rail over such roads?"

Answer. This Bureau is not cognizant of any such discrimination.

(2) "The same as to sending materials and supplies by way of Panama and by Cape Horn, instead of over these roads."

Answer. The files of this Bureau do not show that any discrimination has been made against the said roads in sending materials and supplies via Panama and Cape Horn. In fact the custom has prevailed for years in this Bureau, and continues to prevail, to deliver all supplies pertaining to it to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, to be shipped over said roads to San Francisco.

(3) "What has been the policy respecting this transportation, and if such diversions have occurred, state the specific instances, the amount involved and the reason therefor?"

Answer. No diversions have occurred.

(4) "By section 6 of the act of July 1, 1862, etc."

Answer. This Bureau is of the impression that the provisions of the law referred to in the fourth paragraph of said circular have been complied with in so far as the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing is concerned.

Very respectfully,

JAMES FULTON,
Paymaster-General U. S. Navy.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Navy Department.

UNITED STATES PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION,
10 Wall Street, New York, November 4, 1887.

SIR: The United States Pacific Railway Commission, which has been charged by Congress with the duty of furnishing information respecting the working and financial management of the bond-aided Pacific railroads and their relations to the Government, request that you will kindly cause to be furnished to it information on the following points, the particulars asked for being necessary for the preparation of complete answers to the interrogatories set forth by Congress in the act creating the Commission.

By section 6 of the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," the bond-aided roads were required to transmit dispatches over their telegraph lines, and to transport supplies and public stores on said railroad for the Government whenever required to do so by any department thereof. They were also required to give the Government at all times the preference in the use of the same at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amount paid by private parties for the same kind of service.

The Commission would be glad to know whether, so far as your Department is concerned, those provisions of the law have been complied with.

In a letter of Commissioner William A. J. Sparks to yourself, dated Washington, D. C., May 31, 1887, and transmitted to this Commission, containing a statement of all land patents granted to bond-aided railroads, there was given, at the close, a recapitulation showing the number of acres selected, the estimated number of acres unselected, and the estimated number of acres granted. The total of the acres selected and the estimated number of acres unselected, when added together, do not equal the "estimated number of acres granted." This is a seeming discrepancy which the Commission has not been able to reconcile. Will you be good enough to have an explanation afforded?

The Central Pacific Railroad officials declare that when the Union and Central Pacific Railroads were completed the Government raised the price of land to double the minimum valuation; that settlement was begun upon railroad lands alone, and that at the present time there is twice as much railroad land under cultivation as there is of land obtained by the settler direct from the Government. Can you arrange to have the Commission placed in possession of the facts bearing on these statements? Can you give an estimate of the comparative cost to settlers of Government and of railroad land?

The Central Pacific Railroad Company claims that it has observed all the obligations imposed upon it, and that there has been no delinquency on its part in connection with the patenting of lands granted to it by the Government. They further declare that there has never been a time when the Government was able to meet the requirements of the company with reference to land patents as promptly as the patents were asked for, and that they have lost over $500,000 through the Government's delay, as well as large sections of mineral lands which, at the time of the completion of the road, were not known to be mineral lands.

The officers of that road also allege that on March 22, 1869, there was a suspension of the issuance of the patents by order of the Secretary of the Interior, which suspension lasted a considerable time; that in November, 1869, the granting of one-half of the patents due to the company was suspended for a failure of the company to complete the road; that suspension of land applications, which were made as early as 1867 "for further examination," are still held in abeyance; that intervals of two years elapse between dates of survey of lands and dates of final approval of those surveys by the surveyors-general.

The officials of the same company charge that the rates for surveying the lands covered by the grant, as fixed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, have been so low as to wholly arrest the progress of surveys within the grant.

Two instances are cited in support of this charge by the officials referred to, who say that—

> During the year 1886 the surveyor-general for the State of Nevada advertised for bids for survey relating to 345 townships of land within the limits of the grant to the Central Pacific Railroad Company in that State; that those 345 townships (embracing about one-half the area of the lands granted to the Central Pacific Railroad Company in the State of Nevada) are still unsurveyed. Specifications for these surveys and the amount which should be allowed as fees for the surveys were advertised, and the bids were to have been offered (according to the advertisement) on November 1 of that year. On the date on which these bids were to be opened not one bid had been received. The proposals had been rejected in their entirety by the surveyors. A like result has attended the offers of the Government for the completion of the surveys of land in California; and on the 1st of July, 1886, the surveyor-general of California returned to the Treasury of the United States the entire amount of the appropriation which had been made by Congress for the completion of the surveys of land in that State, notifying the Commissioner of the General Land Office at the same time that no responsible surveyor would enter into a contract for the completion of the surveys, as the rate of compensation offered by the Commissioner was entirely too low.

The statement of the land agent of the Central Pacific Railroad Company would indicate that the excess of applications for patents over the number of patents issued is 622,000 acres. The letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office dated May 31, 1887, indicates that applications for 546,000 acres are pending. A difference in dates may account for this seeming discrepancy.

The railroad officials charge that one-half the lands have not been surveyed because of the policy of the Commissiomer of the General Land Office; that surveying for the past two years has been almost wholly suspended, and that the Commissioner of the General Land Office has imposed onerous and unreasonable rules of practice in connection with the disproval of the mineral character of the land.
